It will be observed that the aggregate amount directly appropriated in these supply bills for 1924, exclusive of permanent and indefinite appropriations, is $2,292,125,662.67, and that the amount carried in the same bills for 1923 was $2,302,854,200.01. This shows on its face a reduction of only $10,728,537.34, or less than one-half of 1 per cent, notwithstanding the fact that we are one year further removed from the war. It should be stated, however, that certain of the bills for 1924 make reappropriations of unexpended balances, and these sums do not appear in the figures above given. For example, $35,000,000 was reappropriated for construction of ships by the Navy; $450,000 for the Ordnance Department of the Navy; $500,000 for military training camps; $800,000 for settlement of claims of foreign governments and their nationals; and $75,000 out of proceeds of sale of materials of the Alaska railroad. In addition, there was appropriated by miscellaneous relief and other acts $314,141.99 and $24,000 for additional salaries for the Farm Loan Bureau. These sums total $37,163,141.99, and when added to the sums directly carried in the regular supply bills for 1924 it will be found that the appropriations are $26,434,604.65 more than for 1923. It may be stated here that the entire appropriations for Government operations for the year 1916, the last full fiscal year preceding the war, were $1,115,004,194.55, which includes permanent, indefinite, and deficiency appropriations for that year. It must be borne in mind that the figures just given for the years 1923 and 1924 do not include permanent and indefinite appropriations, which amount to nearly one billion and a half dollars, nor do they include deficiency appropriations. When these are considered, it will be found that the appropriations for 1924 are more than three and one half times greater than the entire running expenses of the Government for the year 1916.

The total appropriations, including regular annual, increased compensation, permanent, and indefinite, for 1924 amount to $3,706,777,163.12, to which the reappropriations of $37,163,141.99 should be added, making $3,743,940,305.11. The appropriations for 1923, including $233,739,726.37 appropriated for deficiencies during the year, were $3,940,579,667.72. It has always been necessary to make appropriations to supply deficiencies during the fiscal year, and if we assume, as we are warranted in doing, that the deficiencies for 1924 will require as large appropriations as were made for 1923, the entire appropriations for 1924 will amount to $3,977,680,031.48, or $37,100,363.76 more than for 1923. Attention should be called to the fact that the appropriations made for 1923 include as a part of the interest on the public debt $125,000,000, which was necessary to take care of accrued interest for previous years on war-savings stamps and which is not a legitimate charge against the 1923 appropriations. This sum should, therefore, not be taken into consideration in a comparison of the appropriations for the two years, and for the purposes of such comparison it should be deducted from the 1923 appropriations. In addition to this the sum of $50,000,000 was appropriated in 1923 to settle claims arising out of the war against the Shipping Board. No appropriation for this purpose was needed for the year 1924. It should, therefore, also be deducted for the purposes of comparison. The sum of $16,000,000 additional was required for pensions in 1923 on account of changing from quarterly to monthly payments. The change having been established, such sum was not needed for the year 1924, and should, therefore, also be deducted from the 1923 appropriations for the purposes of comparison. These sums total $191,000,000. If we assume, as we are justified in doing, that the deficiencies for 1924 will be as large as they were for 1923, it will be seen that the appropriations for 1924 will exceed those for 1923 by $190,937,221.77, and if reappropriations are included by $228,100,363.76.

Comment is unnecessary. The figures speak for themselves. They are startling in view of the oft-repeated declarations of the administration that there have been great reductions and economies in Government expenditures. There will be appended at the end of this statement a table showing the appropriations for 1923 and 1924, but I wish to again emphasize the fact that the figures for 1923 include deficiencies appropriated during the year amounting to $233,739,726.37.

By recent act of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to subscribe for stock in the Federal intermediate credit banks to the extent of $60,000,000. The amount subscribed will be withdrawn from the Treasury during the fiscal year 1924 and must be added to the appropriations for that year.

In addition to the appropriation made, the last session of Congress authorized contracts to be made amounting to $80,366,200, and which must be met by future appropriations from the Treasury. There has been a repression of public works during the past few years on account of business depression and other causes, but it is quite evident that this work will be resumed in the near future, and this will result in still further charges on the Treasury. On December 30, 1922, and February 8, 1923, the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to Congress recommendations for an extensive Federal building program throughout the United States which it is estimated will cost $96,136,000; and on February 20, 1923, the Secretary of the Treasury recommended the rehabilitation of existing facilities for the marine hospital and quarantine station services at a number of places throughout the country, to cost $8,786,500—a total of $104,922,500. These recommendations will come up for consideration at the first session of the Sixty-eighth Congress, and whatever authorizations are made must be charged to the appropriations and commitments for 1924.

NUMBER OF CLASSIFIED AND UNCLASSIFIED EMPLOYEES.

In the last few days the newspapers have carried a statement purporting to have been issued from the White House that the employees of the United States have been reduced by 98,792 in the last two years. This number evidently includes common laborers who were employed in the shipyards, arsenals, and other work of the United States. A statement of the Civil Service Commission shows no such reduction in the number of classified and unclassified employees. The report of the commission indicates that on July 1, 1921, the number of such employees was 597,483, and on July 1, 1922, 560,863, a reduction of less than 37,000 during the entire year. On January 1, 1923, there were 542,513, which shows a reduction of slightly more than 18,000 during the preceding six months. On June 30, 1916, there were 438,057 employees throughout the United States. There are nearly 24 per cent more of such employees in the United States at the present time than there were before the war. The number of those employed in the departments in the city of Washington makes an even worse showing in so far as reduction and economy is concerned. In other words, on December 31, 1922, there were 67,320 employees in the District of Columbia, as compared with 39,442 on June 30, 1916, an increase of over 70 per cent.

CONDITION OF TREASURY JUNE 30, 1924.

In his annual report, dated November 20, 1922, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the receipts for 1924 will be $3,361,812,350, exclusive of postal revenues. The postal revenues for 1924 are estimated at $585,605,501. This makes the total receipts for 1924, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, $3,947,417,851. It has been shown that the total appropriations and reappropriations for 1924 are $3,977,680,031.48, assuming that the deficiencies during 1924 will equal but not exceed those of 1923. This indicates a deficit on June 30, 1924, of $30,262,180.48, unless the receipts for the year are greater than was anticipated by the Secretary of the Treasury or unless greater saving and economy is practiced, thereby reducing the expenditures below the appropriations.

The Secretary has included as a part of the estimated receipts capital assets amounting to $317,288,280, which should be applied to the reduction of the national debt, rather than to the payment of current operations and expenses of the Government. These capital assets will soon be exhausted and this is not placing the Government on a "pay-as-you-go" basis, as the people were assured would be done. The capital assets referred to are as follows:

Farm-loan bonds, principal and interest	$28,909,825
Foreign loans, principal repayments	31,225,000
Foreign loans, interest	222,761,045
Receipts, sale of war supplies, War Department	25,800,000
Receipts, sale of war supplies, Navy Department	1,000,000
Receipts, sale of Government property	7,592,410
Total	317,288,280

These assets were made possible by the loans made during the war, and they should be applied toward the reduction of the public debt; but in order to avoid a deficit, both this year and next year, the administration is using them to pay current expenses of the Government. Except for these capital assets the Treasury would face a deficit of $347,550,460.48 according to the present estimates on June 30, 1924, and a deficit of over $500,000,000 on June 30, 1923, as will be hereafter shown, thus showing that on a business basis of receipts and expenditures the Government is running far behind in meeting current expenditures with current receipts. It is manifest that unless there is a more rigid reduction of appropriations and expenditures, and unless the administration effects real economy and savings in the future, the Government will soon have to resort to an increase in taxation or the floating of new loans to meet its ordinary annual expenditures.

CONDITION OF TREASURY JUNE 30, 1923.

President Harding's recent announcement of a large reduction in the 1923 deficit, which he claims is due in large part to reduced expenditures, a policy of economy and an "effective coordination of routine business," and which has been given wide publicity in the press, creates an entirely false impression by stating only a part of the facts, which, when given in full, completely refute the claim that the reduction is largely due to reduced expenditures or administrative economy.

The President frankly admitted that a part of the reduction was due to increased revenue, which is a fact and a vital one; but he did not give the details or an explanation of the cause of the increase. His other statements with reference to alleged reductions in expenditures and to administrative economy, I regret to say, are misleading, because the reductions for which he takes credit are not reductions in the annual recurring expenditures of the Government, but such as they are grow out of the manipulation of revolving funds and the postponement of expenditures, as in the case of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the construction of post roads, respectively.

The principal reduction of the 1923 deficit is due to two causes, namely:

First. Increase in tax revenue.

Second. The sale of capital assets and the use of receipts therefrom to pay the current expenses of the Government.

The capital assets in large quantities have been sold, and the receipts therefrom have been misapplied to the reduction of the deficit when they should have been applied to the reduction of the national debt.

In the address referred to, delivered January 29, 1923, and reprinted recently in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, President Harding said:

> The executive departments estimated that they would call upon the Treasury during the 12 months of the year, July 1, 1922, to June 30, 1923, for $3,771,000,000, while the estimate for ordinary receipts for that period reached a total of only $3,073,000,000. This situation indicated withdrawals from the Treasury of $698,000,000 more than it was anticipated would be received from ordinary sources * * *.
> The statement of expected receipts and proposed and anticipated expenditures given in the Budget for 1924, transmitted to Congress December 5 last, showed a probable excess of expenditures over receipts for the fiscal year of 1923 of $273,000,000, a downward revision of $425,000,000 in the estimate made in July. * * * I am now advised that a revised estimate, just completed, showed a further reduction in the anticipated deficit for 1923 of $181,000,000, which indicates, as the situation exists to-day, an apparent deficit of $92,000,000 for the current year.
> This gratifying result is due not only to reductions in the program of expenditure but also to an increase in the anticipated total revenue and other receipts for the year. The adherence to the policy of economy and the effective coordination of routine business were important factors in reducing this estimated deficit.

At the same time and in the same place Gen. H. M. Lord, Director of the Budget, also made an address, in which he stated that the increase in estimated receipts as of January 15, 1923, in round figures, was $408,000,000, and the reduction in estimated expenditures at $321,000,000; but he did not, like President Harding, make any extravagant claims that the reduction of the deficit was due so largely to economy or retrenchment; on the contrary, he said:

> This great reduction is not due solely to efforts for retrenchment, no matter how heroic, nor to the intelligent and profitable efforts to increase receipts, successful as they were. The campaign for a balanced budget has received material assistance from fortunate conditions and happenings that we can not with reason depend upon for the elimination of the remaining excess of expected expenditures over anticipated receipts.

President Harding stated that the deficit for 1923, estimated July 1, 1922, to be $823,000,000. Taking the Treasury books on their face, it is seen that $408,000,000 of increase of receipts was not a real deficit. Hence the President in his address claims credit for wiping out by Budget savings mainly a huge deficit that did not actually exist. In other words, the Treasury underestimated receipts $408,000,000 on July 1, 1922, and, instead of apologizing for its mistake, claims credit for wiping out an imaginary deficit to that extent. Of these underestimates last July, $325,000,000 of the increase were tax-revenue receipts.

The table of original estimates of the Director of the Budget for 1923 does not show in sufficient detail all of the estimated receipts which have been applied to the reduction of the deficit, but the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1922 contains the estimates in question. They are as follows:

Farm-loan bonds, principal and interest	$30,034,825
Foreign loans, principal repayments (estimated)	31,250,000
Foreign loans, interest (estimated)	224,737,965
Receipts from sale of war surplus supplies, War Department (estimated)	70,000,000
Receipts from sale of war surplus supplies, Navy Department (estimated)	12,000,000
Sales, Government property	12,345,325

This $380,000,000 estimated receipts comes from the sale and use of capital assets. It means that Government property and Government securities have been, or will be, sold and the amount applied to the reduction of the estimated deficit. It requires no argument to the average business man or the average man of intelligence to prove to him that he could not long do business by making up a deficit from the sale of his capital assets. In addition to this, it is estimated that supplies have been furnished by the War and Navy Departments to other departments in the sum exceeding $62,000,000, which furnishes another instance of the action of the administration in consuming capital assets to meet current expenses and taking credit for them in statements to the public as if they were current receipts or a reduction of expenditure. The rapidity with which the Government is cashing in its capital assets is shown in the one item of receipts from the sale of war material alone by the War Department since 1919 of $606,000,000. It would be fair to assume that at the rate this administration is selling and using its capital assets there will be few, if any, left when the Democratic Party comes into power in 1925. This money which is used to pay the current expenses of the Government could and should be applied to the payment of bonds. The war materials sold were purchased with the money received from the sale of Liberty bonds. Capital assets should be balanced against capital or permanent liabilities.

Surely there is nothing in this enormous sum for which the administration can take credit on account of retrenchment or economy, but rather, as Director of the Budget Lord says, to "fortunate conditions and happenings that we can not with reason depend upon for the elimination of the remaining excess of expected expenditures over anticipated receipts"—not to mention the "fortunate condition" of selling and using the Government's capital assets.

President Harding says that the present estimate of the 1923 deficit is $92,000,000. If to this sum be added the $380,000,000 of capital assets sold or used as heretofore stated and the $62,000,000 furnished by the War and Navy Departments to other departments, it will be seen that if the administration did not use the capital assets resulting from the World War the deficit would now be upward of a half billion dollars despite the increased receipts from customs and internal revenue. It is clear that the amount derived from the sale and use of capital assets does not show any reduction of expenditures or any economy on the part of the administration.

These figures, too, do not take any account of the large increase in estimated receipts from the sale and use of capital assets made January 15, 1923.

Now let us turn to the estimates of expenditures. The original estimate was $3,771,258,542. The estimate of January 15, 1923, was $3,574,554,132. This includes everything. Confining this to the total ordinary expenses of the Government, which excludes interest on the public debt and other public-debt expenditures, the original estimate was $2,431,596,542. The estimate of January 15, 1923, was $2,107,148,301, a claimed reduction of $324,000,000. The reduction in total expenditures, however, including everything, was approximately only $197,000,000, as Director of the Budget, General Lord, points out—> the difference being largely accounted for by the fact that the estimated payment of interest on the public debt had been increased by $125,000,000 and covered the discount accruals of the 1918 war-savings securities not originally estimated for as chargeable to the current year's expenditures.

The first large item of reduction in the estimated expenditures is in the Emergency Fleet Corporation and is explained by Director of the Budget Lord as follows:

> The estimate of expenditures, amounting to over $136,000,000 on July 1, 1922, has been so reduced that on January 15, 1923, the figures indicated a credit of $4,541,000. This was brought about in part by the curtailment of expenditures in various ways.

Stating that the later estimate is the net figure and needs an explanation for a clearer understanding, he then gives the following tabulation:

Estimated expenditures.

Withdrawals on account of claims appropriation	$20,000,000
Withdrawals on account of expense appropriation, Emergency Fleet Corporation	50,000,000
Withdrawals on account of expense appropriation, United States Shipping Board	459,000
Total	70,459,000

Deposits in the Treasury have been or will be made as follows:

Construction loan fund, 1922	$25,000,000
Construction loan fund, 1923	25,000,000
Miscellaneous collections and liquidations	25,000,000
Total	75,000,000

As there has been no reduction in the ordinary running expenditures of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the reduction in estimated expenditures can only be due to two sources: First, an overestimate of $66,000,000 on July 1, 1922, or a postponement of payment of claims.

The deposits that have been or will be made in the Treasury show that $25,000,000 came from the construction loan fund of 1922, which was presumably not used; a similar amount from the construction loan fund of 1923, which will not be used; and a similar amount from miscellaneous collections and liquidations, which may have been from the sale of ships, but not estimated in the original estimate of receipts, so that there is no economy or reduction shown in this.

The next item of reduction in estimated expenditures is in the railroad administration and transportation act and loans to railroads. Of this, Director of the Budget Lord says:

> The first estimate of more than $284,000,000 has been reduced in the second estimate to approximately $149,000,000. This is due to reductions in the estimated loans, guaranties, and reimbursements to railroads for the current fiscal year. The figures given are net, and are the result of in-and-out operations of the revolving funds. It is expected at this date that a further reduction of approximately $20,000,000 will be made in this estimate of expenditures.

This statement simply shows that the railroads in 1923 are largely financing themselves, instead of being largely financed by the Government, as was necessary heretofore. To what extent the sale of railroad securities has figured in the operations of the revolving fund is not stated. But the explanation of General Lord is sufficient to show upon its face that this reduction in estimates is not due to any administrative economy or retrenchment.

The third item, the estimated reduction of expenditures which needs to be considered, is that of construction of rural post roads. The original estimate was for $126,000,000. In the January 15, 1923, estimate this is reduced to $90,000,000. In other words, some of the States will not cooperate in road construction and others are not cooperating fully, so that the amount now estimated for expenditures on post roads is $36,000,000 less than originally estimated. There is no economy or retrenchment in this. It is simply a postponed expenditure which will be a charge on the Treasury in the future.

In these three items alone—the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the railroad administration and transportation act and loans to railroads, and construction of rural post roads—we have a reduction in estimated expenditures of $311,541,000, or within $13,000,000 of the estimated reduction which President Harding loudly claims is due to economy and retrenchment and with which reduction neither economy nor retrenchment had anything to do.

In all of the figures quoted in the foregoing there is nothing to show any reduction in expenditures due to administrative economy. So with analysis the President's claim of a reduction in the ordinary running expenses of the Government and his claim of administrative economy and business acumen fall to the ground. The principal reduction in the deficit has been due to the collection of back taxes and increase in customs revenue and the sale of capital assets. In this connection it should be remembered that it was the Democratic press which first called the attention of the administration to these delinquent taxes, alleging that the delinquencies amounted to about $1,000,000,000. The increase in collections of customs taxes is due to the high rates of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and temporary abnormal conditions. This latter part of the increase simply amounts to increased taxation of the American people, and the Government share of the tariff taxes is only a small part of the tariff taxes the American people are compelled to pay under the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act.

Unless the administration actually practices the economy of which it boasts, one of the outstanding conclusions which may be drawn from President Harding's statement—the conclusion in which taxpayers are chiefly interested—is that an increase instead of a decrease in taxes is inevitable in the near future. Real economies in government are reflected in reduced taxation. This is the question in which the people are vitally interested. The people are not so much interested in methods of Government bookkeeping, the manipulation of revolving funds, and statements of "paper savings." What they are vitally interested in is the question of whether or not there has been any actual reduction of expenditures in the ordinary annual recurring expenses of the Government. No figures have yet been produced, either by President Harding or Director of the Budget Lord, to show that there has been any such reduction.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the hope of this country is in its men and women. The children of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow, the parents of generations yet unborn.

What, then, is there of national concern more important than the best possible training of those who are to "carry on," to carry forward the ideals that this Nation stands for?

Education is frankly recognized by thinking people everywhere as the basis of successful democratic Government. Numerous problems are now testing democratic governments as they have never been tested before. Therefore, education now and in the future needs to be supported and developed as never before. Otherwise, the whole structure of civilization is threatened with disaster. Education is at once insurance against danger and the key investment that makes possible greater development in the future.

This bill—to establish a new salary schedule for the public-school teachers of Washington, and to reorganize under substantive law the school system of the National Capital—must be passed, and passed quickly, for two impelling reasons:

(1) The salaries paid here are entirely inadequate to hold good teachers, and in spite of our proneness to boast, the schools of Washington are in such condition that the less said on that subject the better.

(2) We should have a model school system and an inspirational salary schedule here, which will give real impetus and standing to the profession, and which will be a model and encouragement to communities throughout the land.

You and I know that the people "back home" look to Washington for guidance. You and I know that if our schools here are not what they should be and if the best teachers are quitting and efficient teachers can not be hired to take their place, with a consequent disintegration of the school system, it is our fault. But beating our breasts and saying "Mea culpa, mea maxima culpa," is not correcting the mistake.

What are we going to do about it?

Now is the acceptable time to vote right.

We build a schoolhouse—not only here but in your home town, and in mine. We are tremendously concerned about the proper light, and fire escapes, and the right sort of desks, and ventilation, and what not. All well and good; but when we come to select the teacher we simply do the best we can for a meager wage.

That is all wrong. The most precious thing we have is our children. I say this personally for ourselves and collectively speaking for the Nation. If we have a new model automobile or a costly piece of machinery we would not let Tom, Dick, and Harry tinker with it, would we? But we let most anyone tinker with the most delicate and susceptible machinery imaginable—our children's brains, and hearts, and character.

For we must not forget that the book learning our children get is but the smallest part of their education. The teacher has them in their tenderest, most plastic years. The teacher has them from 6 to 8 hours a day. The teacher helps more than anyone else, except the mother, to mold the character. We can not be too careful about who teaches our children—careful not only that they "know their matter," but that they are of exceptional character, are in the profession through love for and devotion to the work, that they think right and act right as examples for our children to pattern after.

That is what we should have been doing and have not been doing—now is the time for reformation.

The salaries paid to teachers in Washington to-day were fixed 17 years ago. They are so small in comparison with what the teachers can earn in outside employment that the best teachers are quitting the schools, because they must live and most of them have others besides themselves to support. It is impossible to get well-trained teachers to take their places because of the inadequate salaries.

This is not just talk. Here are facts to back it up: A survey of all cities in the United States with over 100,000 population shows Washington hovering around the bottom of the list in all groups and grades. In the eight lower grades Washington pays from $1,200 to $1,600, while my home city, Chicago, pays from $1,475 to $2,100. Forty-five out of a list of 48 cities pay more than Washington. For principals of elementary schools Washington pays from $1,200 to $1,600, while in Chicago we pay from $2,500 to $4,250. Washington stands last in a list of 43 cities reporting. For director of special subjects—music, art, household arts, physical education, and manual training—Washington pays from $2,000 to $2,500, while in Chicago we pay from $3,750 to $5,000. Forty-nine cities in a list of 73 reporting pay more than Washington. In the lower group of high-school teachers Washington pays $1,440, while Chicago pays $1,600; and 33 out of 47 cities pay more than Washington. In the upper group of high-school teachers Washington pays $2,200 to $2,500, while Chicago pays $2,400 to $3,400; and 14 out of 18 cities pay more than Washington.

We are not giving our teachers here especially, and in a lesser degree elsewhere, a living wage. We expect them to be well educated, to have teacher training, to dress neatly, to keep abreast of modern developments and newer teaching methods, to read magazines and new books and attend lectures, and so forth, and we do not pay them enough to keep the wolf from their doors.

I warn you now that unless the teachers and prospective teachers of our country are assured of satisfactory returns on their investments in education and for their services the teaching profession will decline. There will be a still greater shortage of competent teachers and the Nation will suffer an irreparable loss from the decadence of its educational system.

During the war we had a sad spectacle here. We saw teachers who have given a lifetime of devotion to teaching getting a mere pittance in the classrooms, while some of their pupils, and generally pupils not specially capable, went direct from the classrooms to get on Uncle Sam's lump-sum appropriation pay rolls several times the salary their teachers had to shift along on.

But I do not need to preach to you Members of the House. I see facing me former college presidents, like Dr. SIMEON D. FESS, former superintendents like Representative W. W. CHALMERS, also of Ohio, and I think I am safe in saying that at least half the membership of the House taught school at one time or another. You know the situation and conditions then; and they have not improved much since, especially here in Washington. Many of you taught as a makeshift, and I am sure that most of you, at least, gave good instructions; but I am equally certain that you do not want your children and their children taught by makeshift teachers who take the job merely as a stepping-stone to some other job that will pay better. I am sure you all join with me in the desire to see the teaching profession made so attractive that it will draw in the best talent of this country, so that we can have careful selection and elimination of the less desirable.

Invariably disinterested but qualified educators from outside of Washington, when asked to indicate the outstanding needs of our school system here, place a new salary schedule as one of the most urgent.

Never in my legislative experience have I had personal experience of such a universal demand for a specific piece of legislation. Educational authorities in my home district and State, and organized into national associations, parent-teachers' associations, and mothers' clubs have all appealed to me to support this measure, not only for the teachers and schools of Washington but as a good influence that would spread all over our land for the betterment of our future citizens.

We have seen delegations of mothers besieging the doors of "key" Members, telling with tears in their eyes how imperative is the need that their children, in whom are centered all their hopes and ambitions, for whom they have suffered and slaved, may have the influences that will make them better American citizens.

Back in my district and in yours these women would not have to humiliate themselves making public pilgrimage; they could make the decision for better teachers and better schools by their votes. In our home cities they could command, where here in voteless Washington they must bend the suppliant knee. Shall their pilgrimage be in vain? You who have wives and mothers and who are the fathers of children answer me.

We have seen the people of the District united in this appeal, supported by the District Commissioners and the school authorities, and backed by the best public sentiment of the entire country.

There are several reasons for the urgency of this legislation—why we must pass it now: (1) The salary of employees should be legalized; (2) certain approved developments of the system await legal authorization; (3) other developments await legislation; and (4) higher compensation is necessary.

First, the present salary of practically every employee of the Board of Education is subject to a point of order in Congress, because it is not provided for in law. The several increases in compensation which teachers and others have received are authorized only in the appropriation bill, and hence are only legal from year to year. The salaries of all employees of the Board of Education should be established by law and should not be left in their present uncertain state.

Second, since the organic act of 1906, which established the present school system, many changes in organization of the school system have taken place. These changes indicate a progressive development of a growing school system. However, they are not now fully recognized by law, as they should be. A few illustrations of these changes will suffice:

(a) Junior high schools have been organized in the school system, but there is no legally authorized salary schedule for them. Teachers serving in those institutions now serve either as a class 6A of high-school teachers or as Class IV or Class V of elementary-school teachers. It is impossible to organize effectively a junior high school under the restrictions thus imposed.

(b) Administrative principalships of elementary schools with 16 or more classes have been created. They have no salary schedule. As in the case of all teaching principals their salary now consists of a salary as a teacher and additional compensation based upon the number of session rooms.

(c) The community-center department is recognized by law, but no salary schedule has been legally established for its employees. Lump-sum appropriations are now made. The salaries of permanent employees in the department should be fixed by appropriate legislation.

(d) Vocational schools have been established. They should be legally provided for in salary legislation. This is particularly important because it is desirable that this type of institution be largely extended in the school system.

Third, in addition to the above developments which have already taken place there are certain other unfortunate conditions which can not be modified under the present law.

(a) Session-room pay is now provided by law for teaching principals as additional compensation for serving as principals of elementary schools. This pay is $30 per year for each session room. The present method of paying principals by giving them salaries of teachers and this session-room pay should be replaced by an appropriate salary schedule for teaching and administrative principals. The new salary should be higher than their present compensation. Session-room pay should be abandoned.

(b) Teachers in elementary schools are now grouped in Classes I, II, III, IV, and V. Originally the minimum and maximum salaries for the various classes differed. The practice was to appoint all new teachers to Class I, which covers Grades I and II, and to promote from one class to another as vacancies occurred in the upper grades. This practice resulted in the placing of all new teachers in the primary grades and in the advancement of the more experienced teachers to positions in eighth grades. Since the basic salary has now been made the same for each class, the continued existence of these five classes is no longer necessary or desirable. Indeed, the present arrangement interferes with the successful organization and administration of the elementary schools. These five classes should be abolished and the salary schedule made uniform for all regular elementary-school teachers.

Fourth, in addition to the necessity for legalizing the salaries of employees and for a new salary schedule to provide for the past and future developments and extensions of the present school system, a new salary schedule is necessary in order to correct certain injustices which now exist due to past salary adjustments. Moreover, increased compensation for employees is necessary if the Washington school system is to compete successfully with other school systems in securing efficient teachers and officers.

So, if you have conferred with the school authorities and the District Commissioners and have listened to the hearings before the Senate and House committees, which have exhaustively investigated this subject, you will see that the proposed salary schedule is more than legislation fixing the compensation of employees; it is also legislation providing for the organization of the school system. The salary schedule must fix pay for positions, but positions are conceived and created in accordance with one's judgment as to how a school system should be organized and operated.

The legislation fixing the salaries of employees and establishing the plan of organization and administration of the school system of Washington was passed in 1906. Outside of piecemeal legislation in appropriation acts, no supplementary legislation has been passed since that time.

Now, I charge you, do not overlook that during the 17 years intervening great progress has been made in the theory and practice of educational administration. Junior high schools have been established as an integral part of the school system. The extended use of public-school buildings beyond the traditional five-hour day, both for evening and summer school work and for adult education, recreation, and civic improvement, has been recognized and generally provided for in cities like Washington. Larger units of elementary school organization are generally accepted as financially necessary and educationally desirable. Throughout the country in more recent years there is a marked tendency more nearly to equalize salaries of elementary and high school teachers by establishing salaries on the basis of the qualifications possessed rather than on the grade of work taught. Vocational and prevocational education has been generally established since 1906. All these and many other developments have taken place since the organic school law was passed in 1906. New legislation is now a necessity not only to provide adequate compensation for employees but also to bring up to date the organization and administration of the school system.

We here in Congress concerned about many and varied subjects of interest to our constituents have not kept in close touch with these developments and the need for new legislation to meet the changed educational conditions. But for a long time the school officials have felt the urgency for such legislation. Attempts have annually been made in the school budget to secure increased salaries for employees, over those established by law. Moreover, the appropriation acts have frequently carried scraps of legislation to meet new situations as they have arisen. This is not a good practice. The salary schedule should be established through legislation and the school estimates for salaries prepared in accordance with that schedule. Moreover, the need of recognizing and establishing by law the many new practices which have necessarily been inaugurated in the school system is equally urgent.

Now let us come to a showdown on how this new schedule of salaries is figured and just what it means for the teachers and the tax-paying public.

The proposed salary schedule for Washington was based on the present compensation in Washington and on the schedules received from other cities. Since Washington must compete with other cities for its supply of teachers, it must be prepared to pay as high for their services as other cities pay. If Washington is to have as good teachers and as good teaching as other cities it must pay salaries sufficiently high to secure and retain such teachers. It is on the principle of supply and demand that the new salary schedule is based.

The new proposed schedule will not in any case place Washington at the head of the list of cities paying leading salaries. In general, Washington will stand from one-third or one-fourth the way from the top of such a list. Nevertheless, in view of the comparatively low salaries which Washington now pays, the new schedule will provide a substantially better salary for all educational employees than the present schedule provides.

As my last shot to impress upon you that this legislation must pass, I can do no better than quote to you from the annual report of the District Commissioners, not elected by the people but designated by the President. They say:

> This is the most important school legislation for the District of Columbia that has been presented to Congress in more than 15 years. The public is back of it; the District needs and wants it. The school authorities of the District have been gratified to receive the assistance of public opinion and public support. They appeal not only for support but for active assistance in impressing on Congress the necessity of passing this legislation at the earliest possible opportunity.

Do it now!

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am taking advantage of the permission granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD to say a few words about a few subjects.

First of all, I wish to express regret that no action whatever was taken upon House Joint Resolution 400, introduced by me, for the purpose of promoting peace and to equalize the burdens and to minimize the profits of war. The principle contained in this resolution was indorsed by the President in his inaugural address March 4, 1921, and again repeated in his message to Congress on December 8, 1922. The American Legion are unanimously back of this proposition, and I have received numerous letters from all parts of the country strongly indorsing the movement. Everybody that I have talked with says that it is an effort to accomplish justice, and only a very few have expressed any misgivings about it, and this few have indorsed its idea and purpose but say that they doubt if it can be made practicable and workable. Those same objections were made to the proposition to draft man power to fight in time of war. It was said that men would not fight unless they had volunteered through a patriotic purpose. It was said that if men were compelled by law to leave their homes and to enter the ranks that they would not prove efficient soldiers. The records of the last war completely refute these arguments, and I feel sure that it is to be for a long time at least the fixed and settled policy of this country that in time of war the principles of the selective service law shall be applied.

I appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the House and earnestly urged a favorable report on said joint resolution. The matter was referred to a subcommittee, and owing to the sickness of the chairman of the subcommittee no report was ever made to the full committee, and consequently the full committee never reported the resolution to the House. This will certainly result in the delay of at least one year for the enactment of suitable and proper legislation, considered in coolness and calmness four years after the end of the great World War, and we hope many years before the breaking out of any future war.

My purpose to appoint a nonpolitical and bipartisan commission that would be composed of a large majority of persons favorable to the policies of the Republican Party must appeal to every man as entirely fair. I do not consider this a political question, and I waited one year and a half after the President expressed his approval of this principle in his inaugural address before I took any steps whatever. I have no evidence to believe that inaction was due to the fact that a Democrat was the author of the joint resolution. I do hope that in the next Congress some action along this general line may be taken, and if there is a better chance for favorable action upon a bill introduced by a Republican, then I hope for such action upon the bill introduced by the Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, of South Dakota. I have stated publicly that I think his bill ought to be amended in two or three particulars before enactment into law, but that can be easily done either in the Committee on Military Affairs or in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

THE COAL PROBLEM UNSETTLED.

I also regret that there was so much delay during the Sixty-seventh Congress in taking some action looking toward an ultimate settlement of the coal problem. It should have been taken up the very first thing, and by now legislation should have been enacted for the relief of the people and the industries of the Nation. A few days ago it seemed that spring had come in this city, and men were walking everywhere without their overcoats. To-day the snow is falling thick and fast, and there will doubtless be some suffering even in this central city. But what must be the conditions in the North and New England States imagination and newspaper reports can supply. Pitched battles have been held between municipal authorities and railroad authorities over the possession of trainloads of coal. Citizens of the United States feel that coal placed by the Creator beneath the soil of our country should be used for the comfort of our own citizens. There are many questions connected with this coal problem which are intricate, far-reaching, and vital. I feel that I have done my duty in relation to it. I have been studying it in a general way for about seven years. I have called the attention of the Congress and the country to it several times. I have communicated my ideas to the coal commission now investigating the problem. I will continue to do all in my power as opportunity offers to assist in the enactment of such laws by Congress as may be constitutionally possible for the purpose of stabilizing and standardizing the distribution and supply and price of coal.

THE RURAL CREDITS LEGISLATION.

As heretofore stated, I voted for the amalgamating, consolidated, hodgepodge of legislation designed and intended to be a compromise to extend facilities for intermediate credits to the farmers. By intermediate credits we mean credits more than six months and less than three years, and intended to assist the farmers primarily in the financing of his production period. It is a sad commentary upon the half-hearted performance by the Republican Party of its platform pledge that this legislation was postponed and shunted to one side and pigeonholed for nearly two years, and then when it was apparent that the farmers of the country would not stand for being longer trifled with the various plans and schemes for relief were thrown together in order to make it possible to have some legislation before the adjournment of Congress. We remember that there was no such delay in taking up the revision of the tariff schedules upward. We remember that there was no such delay in trying to get action on the ship subsidy. We remember that the claimants for damages suffered by dealing in sugar during the war were given a chance to have their claims heard and passed by Congress. We remember that other special interests had their day or days in Congress long ago. But when the matter of proper financial relief for the farmers was to be heard, delay and postponement was the order of the day. And yet some people wonder why there is a "farm bloc." Some people grow blue in the face when rural credit legislation is proposed. Some people seem well-nigh disposed to charge members of the "farm bloc" with disloyalty to party and to country. Everybody speaks in generalities about the basic necessity of agriculture. Everybody with common sense knows that if the country is to prosper the farmers must prosper. Everybody with half sense ought to know that if the country is to continue to eat and to wear, then the farmers must continue to find agriculture reasonably profitable, and yet people have not objected to the Federal reserve system for the purpose of financing industries and commerce. People have not objected to the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been lent by the Government to the railroads. Some people have thought that the protective tariff system, whereby profits are turned into the pockets of favorites to the tune of about $3,000,000,000 a year, is necessary to national prosperity. Many people who oppose the rural credits legislation are strongly in favor of the ship subsidy, by which the owners of merchant marine vessels will receive all sorts of favors and preferments and actual cash payments from the Treasury of many million dollars a year.

It seems to be all right to subsidize some manufactures and some railroads and some ships, but some people suffer holy horrors about legislation intended to make agriculture reasonably profitable. As a matter of fact, the direct benefits and advantages of the legislation, promoted largely by the farmers, known as rural credits, will go to the bankers and to the investment public. The farmer must still, as heretofore, go to his local banker and offer his character, his labor, and the products of his labor as security for his loans. That is right, and the farmer does not object. Then it is up to the banker to say whether or not the farmer can make a safe paper. If the banker thinks that the farmer is honest and will produce things that people must buy and can give good security, then under the new system the banker can not any longer honestly tell the farmer that he can not accommodate him. Under the present system the banker will take the farmer's paper and will rediscount it either with the private corporation contemplated by the Capper bill or will rediscount it with the intermediate credits bank contemplated by the Lenroot-Anderson bill. Then all of these notes of the farmer, indorsed by the local banks, can be assembled into central places and in the hands of a trust agency and against them will be issued bonds or obligations, called "debentures," and these will be offered to the big savings banks and trust companies and the executors and administrators and trustees of the multimillionaire estates. So that the system contemplated will enable the local bank to accommodate more customers and to make more profits, and will afford a safe and sound investment for the huge aggregations of capital. But indirectly the farmer will get a benefit, because he will be able to borrow money from the bank, which heretofore has been totally unable to accommodate him. The general principles of this legislation are sound, and though there are details that must be corrected by future Congresses, yet it is certain to afford much relief to the present condition of the farmers.

"NORMALCY AND ECONOMY."

We heard much during the campaign of 1920 about normalcy and economy. We see in many newspapers and magazines criticisms of the profligacy and wastefulness of Congress's appropriations. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I think that these criticisms are misdirected and unjustified. The records will show that with very rare exceptions the estimates submitted through the Budget commission from the executive branch of the Government have been cut down by the Congress when it considered appropriations. It seems that as a general proposition the executive departments are always in favor of the larger appropriations. Each head of a department seems to think that his is the most important of all, and he is constantly pressing for more money to carry on increased activities.

The head of the department merely reflects the ambition of the chiefs of the bureaus in his department. We have heard that representatives of the executive departments have criticized Congress as being miserly and narrow and close fisted. I think, therefore, that instead of criticizing Congress, which has to be very resolute and firm to withstand the propaganda for increased appropriations, the country ought to recognize that Congress is the real friend in normalcy and economy, and the guns of criticism ought to be turned upon the executive heads.

AGRICULTURE DENIED RELIEF.

Mr. Speaker, in two very important and nation-wide aspects this Congress failed to perform its duty to agriculture, and I believe that it will be held responsible to the country for its signal failure. The first of these is the failure to take final and definite action upon the proper policy of the Government toward Muscle Shoals; whether that policy shall be to lease it to Henry Ford or to somebody else, or to sell it or to operate it as a Government proposition, is not the matter now up for consideration. The question is that some final settlement of policy should be made. Water is going over the wheels that will never come back. Time is speeding for the present generation. The fields of the country are already growing less productive for lack of a proper supply of nitrates. An all-wise Providence has supplied us with the means to correct this tendency to the impoverishment of our soil. No nation is stronger than its soil. The food supply of the nation is the broad basis upon which it must constantly rest. For us to neglect to utilize the marvelous possibilities of the Muscle Shoals power is to show our shortsightedness and our neglect of the rights and interests of the next generation. Then, again, Mr. Speaker, this Congress failed in its duty to agriculture by refusing to act upon an appropriation of $10,000,000 to enable the President to buy in the markets of the world, notably Chile, and to resell to the farmers of America, at cost, sufficient nitrates to meet the current demands until Muscle Shoals is developed, and also especially to buy, anywhere in the world, calcium arsenate to enable the southern cotton farmer to fight with some hope and exactness the pest of the boll weevil. This matter of an adequate supply of cotton is not a local and selfish proposition of the southern farmer alone. It is a nation-wide problem.

The northern and eastern populations must have cotton to make their cloth and to keep their textile plants and population busy. If there is a cotton famine, the real and ultimate sufferers will not be so much the southern farmers as it will be the peoples of the North and East, who will be compelled to pay high prices for cotton cloth. If there is a cotton famine, the southern cotton farmer will receive an increased price per pound, and it has often happened that a short and small crop of cotton brings as many dollars into the pockets of the southern farmer as do large crops. Since the southern farmer raises cotton not to eat but to sell, he is concerned most vitally in the number of dollars it will bring. Gentlemen must therefore not think that by enabling the farmer to have nitrate to rush his cotton plant to maturity and to have calcium arsenate to assist in killing the boll weevil it is conferring a direct and exclusive benefit upon the southern cotton farmer alone. As I have just stated, the problem is nation-wide and will be ultimately most vital to the people in those sections where cotton is not grown. This situation illustrates as well as anything can the truth of the proposition that a prosperous and successful agriculture is more vital and indispensable to the safety and security of the great city populations than to the farmer population itself. The reason is perfectly obvious when analyzed. If the farmer does not find agriculture profitable, he will raise only enough commodities for himself and family. If it does not pay him to labor and to invest for the purpose of producing a surplus, he will discontinue raising any surplus. But you can not starve the farmer out. He can eat his own cattle and his own grain, and though he may not have automobiles and fine clothes and education for his children, yet one can not starve him out. But out of this is the picture with reference to the great cities. The population of these congested centers would begin to starve within two or three weeks if compelled to rely on their accumulated stores of things to eat. If the farmer would not constantly ship into the city, and if the trains and trucks running into the city did not constantly carry their cargoes of food supplies of all sorts, the city population would soon begin to starve. And when things to eat can not be had, it makes no difference how much gold may be in the vaults, or how fine the houses may be, or how many silks and furs may be in the stores, or how much jewelry and diamonds may be in the vaults; all these things will be as nothing, and men will go mad with hunger and will surge out toward the country, seeking for meat and bread, and will be driven back by the farmer with his pitchfork. People who think that the farmer is narrow and selfish and unpatriotic and wants to exploit the whole population must get that out of their heads. The farmer is patient, conservative, patriotic. He is the best type of those fathers of the colonial days who laid the firm foundation of this Republic. Practically all the people who declared and won our independence were farmers. And the history of this country shows that the men and women who have led in the upbuilding, regenerating agencies of this Nation have been recruited from the farm. The farm is the reservoir of the Nation's fresh blood. The farm is the type of American individualism. The farm embodies and personifies in its highest form the spirit of American liberty. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we feel justified in saying to those who criticize the farmer and the farmer's friends in Congress that they are shortsighted and narrow and need to take a nation-wide view of the farmer's problems.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Lasker ship subsidy bill has failed of passage. Everybody concedes that such a bill would have no chance in the Sixty-eighth Congress; and it may be safely predicted that it would have still less chance in the Sixty-ninth Congress.

With the aid of perhaps the most extensive, most adroit, and most insidious propaganda ever disseminated in behalf of any bill, with the president of the Shipping Board zealously exerting every possible public and private influence to effect its passage, with the President and the Republican leaders strenuously bringing to bear all possible pressure to whip Members into line for the bill as an administration and party measure, and with a Republican majority of 169, the bill passed the House by a majority of only 24, and then only after the adoption of amendments, in the absence of which the bill would admittedly have been defeated; even then the bill was saved by the votes of 82 Members who retire March 4, 66 of whom were repudiated by their constituencies in the recent elections; but for "lame-duck" support the bill would have been badly defeated in the House. A vote upon the bill had been deferred until after the election, because it was recognized that they could not muster a majority who were willing to vote for the bill and then face their constituents in the ensuing election; and the President called an extra session immediately after the election for the sole and specific purpose of putting through the ship subsidy bill. It is a matter of common knowledge that such a bill would never have been reported out of committee either in the House or Senate but for the extraordinary zeal and persistent pressure of the President.

As correctly stated by the American Economist in a recent issue:

> If a ship subsidy bill can not be passed under the circumstances surrounding the pending bill, no such bill ever can be passed.

Wherefore it is high time for ship-subsidy mendicants to stop begging and hoping for bounties from the Public Treasury and to apply their energies to a constructive solution of the problem. Many shipowners in an effort to convert the public and the Government to a policy of ship subsidies have preached the doctrine that they can not succeed without subsidies until they not only frightened off the investing public but they themselves apparently became obsessed with that belief. As long as they thus waste their energies and ignore efficiency in the hope that such practices will be offset by Government aid they will fail. On the other hand, if they devote themselves to economic, efficient, businesslike methods, they will succeed, as those are doing who employ such methods.

I do not sanction the dark picture of our present and future American merchant marine painted by the prosubsidists in an effort to drive Congress to a subsidy policy. However, I do say that the virtual elimination of the present Shipping Board expenses and loss, the ultimate sale of our Government-owned tonnage, and the maintenance of our existing trade routes can be effected, and the further development and the permanent maintenance of an adequate American merchant marine can be assured by the adoption of certain policies.

Most of our difficulties being due to unnatural restraints, artificial politicies, unbusinesslike methods, and wasteful practices, the problem can not be solved by the adoption of a still more unnatural, artificial, inefficient, and wasteful system.

On the other hand, we should remove the causes which hamper our shipping, eliminate the unnecessary cost and waste, and then rely upon the intelligence, genius, skill, and efficiency which characterize Americans and which enable them to maintain supremacy in practically every other line of endeavor.

The specific policies which I recommend may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. Abolish the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation.
2. Appoint a bipartisan congressional committee to investigate and cull out all useless employees of the Shipping Board organization.
3. Place one responsible man of demonstrated ability, honesty, and patriotism at the head of the remaining organization and of our shipping affairs.
4. Cancel all MO-4 contracts and lease the ships now in operation on trade routes under bareboat charters, or, wherever that may be impossible, place such trade routes in charge of salaried managers, until such vessels can be sold. This alone would eliminate nearly all of the immense Shipping Board organization and expense and all of the voyage losses.
5. Lease the ships on very low bareboat charter rates; give the charterers an option to buy the ships at world-market prices, agreeing to give them credit on the purchase price for the amounts they have paid in charter hire, provided they complete payment of purchase price within a reasonable, specified period.
6. Transfer a goodly number of our suitable idle ships to the Army and Navy for use as transports and auxiliary vessels in case of emergency.
7. As to the remainder of our Government tonnage, from time to time fix and publish specific prices, in conformity with prevailing world prices for like tonnage, and sell on reasonable terms and time to any American citizens who desire to buy and are able to pay for same, requiring the more valuable and suitable ships to be operated under the American flag.
8. Employ a liberal policy in the payment of compensation for the carriage of our ocean mail, engaging American ships as far as possible, all of which is fully authorized by the act of 1891, now in force.
9. Our merchant marine should have the full cooperation and aid of our Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, commercial attachés, radio service, and other Government functions.
10. The Government and Government officials should patronize American ships whenever possible.
11. The American public should loyally support the American merchant marine, as do the nationals of other countries. They should ship and travel on American ships whenever possible, instead of patronizing foreign ships, as many noisy advocates of subsidies do.
12. The establishment of oil stations wherever they would be needed by our Navy and our merchant marine.
13. A proper revision of conference rates.
14. The adoption of a uniform, short, simple bill of lading.
15. Strict enforcement of the seamen's act, particularly sections 4 and 13, which will insure and maintain an equalization of wages on American ships and on foreign ships operating to and from our ports.
16. The enactment of a law prohibiting the payment of gratuities to masters of vessels.
17. Simplification of the administration of the supervisory work of the Government agencies in charge of shipping, including abolition of the dual system of inspection of ships; inspections should be made so as not to delay the departure of ships.
18. Enactment of a load line law similar to the laws of the European maritime powers.
19. Specific definition of the liability of ocean cargo carriers for loss or damage to goods, so as to avoid needless and expensive litigation.
20. Establishment of foreign trade zones in our ports.
21. Foreign-built ships owned by American citizens should be permitted to register under the American flag.

22. The repeal of tariff duties on all shipbuilding materials and the repeal of all restrictions against the use of imported materials in our ship construction.

23. A tariff for revenue only. A tariff which is so high as to prevent the importation of foreign goods and which in turn cuts down our exports because of inability of foreigners to pay for our products with their own will naturally diminish our foreign commerce and militate against our merchant marine. Our ships need both incoming and outgoing cargoes. While it is not expected that those wedded to a high protective tariff policy will accept this recommendation, even for the sake of our merchant marine, yet it would be of vast assistance. However, with the adoption of the other suggestions recommended our merchant marine could succeed in spite of a high protective tariff, although not to the extent it could without such a tariff.

24. Our shipowners must establish efficient organizations at home and shipping agencies and connections abroad.

25. Our shipping companies should establish local agencies throughout this country such as are maintained by railroads and by the leading foreign steamship lines.

26. They should make arrangements with the railrods for connecting rail and ocean transportation so that inland shippers can easily ascertain rates and make arrangements for through shipments.

27. Americans have a splendid opportunity to outdistance their competitors in the study and development of modern, scientific machinery and methods, such as the development and employment of the Diesel type of engines, the improvement of port, terminal, warehousing, loading, and unloading facilities, and in the study and adoption of other constructive plans.

28. American shipowners should eliminate overcapitalization, squeeze out watered stock, cut out wasteful overhead, get rid of useless officials, reduce the exorbitant salaries of many executives; in other words, get on a sound, economical business basis.

29. American shipowners should forever stop begging for public bounties and should apply themselves to effecting the results just suggested. They should quit disseminating the false doctrine that Americans are not competent to succeed in the maritime industry without subsidies.

Some of the foregoing suggestions are not of vital importance, but in my opinion all will help.

I have heretofore discussed in detail these more important proposals and the reasons therefor. Most of these suggestions can be carried out without additional legislation. Under existing law the Shipping Board has ample authority to cancel the infamous MO-4 contracts, including the payment of husbanding fees, which are being voluntarily paid, and to sell, lease, or operate our ships as I suggest, which course would permit the reduction of the vast Shipping Board force of employees to a minimum and would eliminate all operating losses and most of the Shipping Board expense. It simply depends on whether the Shipping Board so wills as to whether it will regard the interest of the public and a great, widely distributed American merchant marine, or will regard the wishes and interests of a very few private shipping magnates.

The adoption of the foregoing proposals, even to a reasonable extent, will insure the full establishment and the permanent maintenance of a sound, healthy, successful, privately owned American merchant marine, fully adequate for all of our needs in peace or war; and it will do it without the adoption of a single vicious policy or a single additional burden upon the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, to meet the objections which have been urged against the provisions of the Towner-Sterling educational bill I present some reasons why this important measure should be enacted. It was furnished me by the National Educational Association, Washington, D. C., and requested that same be published as extension of remarks in eight-point type.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT THE BILL WOULD DO.

Like all Gaul the Towner-Sterling bill is divided into three parts. It proposes:

To create a department of education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet.

To create a national council of 100 representative educators and laymen, which will meet annually at the call of the secretary.

To give Federal aid to encourage the States in the solution of five educational problems, fundamental alike to worthy citizenship in both State and Nation:

1. The removal of illiteracy.
2. The Americanization of the foreign born.
3. The promotion of physical education.
4. The training of teachers.
5. The equalization of educational opportunities.

WHY A DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION?

The Federal Government now spends millions yearly for strictly educational work. This work is scattered among several Federal departments. A department of education would coordinate this work and eliminate waste. Effective administration of the Federal Government's present educational activities demands the creation of a department of education.

Education is of primary importance to the welfare of the Nation. It should have from the Nation the recognition which a place in the Cabinet would give. Such primary recognition would insure for education much greater attention from public men and from newspapers and citizens generally.

A department of education would adequately provide for research and investigation. Effective school administration demands reliable statistical and experimental evidence upon which to base plans for educational growth. Such investigation can not be made by one State, and an attempt by the 48 States to do so would lead to duplication of effort and a waste of money.

WHY FEDERAL AID?

Education of the country's future citizenry is not a luxury, but is the Nation's greatest necessity, since the life and prosperity of the Republic depend upon a citizenship which is physically, intellectually, and morally sound. The Nation looks to the States for its citizens; it should aid the States in their training.

President Harding, in his address to Congress on November 21, 1922, stated the case for Federal aid as follows:

"I believe in Government aid becomingly bestowed. We have aided industry through our tariffs; we have aided railway transportation in land grants and loans; we have aided the construction of market roads and the improvement of inland waterways; we have aided reclamation and irrigation and the development of water power; we have loaned for seed grains in anticipation of harvests. It has all been commendable and highly worth while."

The Federal Government has repeatedly aided education by land grants and money. No aid to any cause has yielded larger returns. With Federal aid and encouragement the States would remedy their educational weaknesses.

WHY A NATIONAL COUNCIL?

There is needed some agency which will furnish an official clearing house for the ideals and plans developed by the various States. This the national council would do. The fact that there are 48 independent State school systems in the United States has given abundant opportunity for initiative and originality in educational practices.

The secretary of education, charged with carrying on research into educational problems and with the distribution of Federal aid, would desire to seek the advice of the chief school officers of the various States and of competent experts and laymen. The national council provides the agency for doing this most effectively.

The national council would enable leaders representing both the States and the Nation to develop a national point of view in matters educational. The council would be composed of (1) the chief school officers of the States, (2) 25 persons representing various educational interests, (3) and 25 prominent laymen.

VAST PRESENT SUPPORT.

STATE CONTROL MAINTAINED.

State control of education is insured by the provisions of the Towner-Sterling bill. Section 13 of the bill reads:

"That all the educational facilities encouraged by the provisions of this act and accepted by a State shall be organized, supervised, and administered exclusively by the legally constituted State and local educational authorities of said State, and the secretary of education shall exercise no authority in relation thereto; and this act shall not be construed to imply Federal control of education within the States nor to impair the freedom of the States in the conduct and management of their respective school systems."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there are men in Congress and out of it who reverse Doctor Coué's famous slogan and repeat constantly: "Day by day, in every way, under prohibition we are getting worse and worse."

In view of the fact that a false statement repeated often enough will in the end be believed by some persons, it is worth while to examine the so-called arguments of foes of prohibition and see just what basis they rest upon.

PUT OVER ON THE PEOPLE.

The first and foremost plea which crops up in any discussion is that prohibition was in some mysterious fashion enacted while the people's backs were turned.

A more absurd statement was never uttered. The fact is that never in the history of America was there given so overwhelming evidence of the people's deliberate and determined will as in the action which outlawed the liquor traffic.

From the very beginning of this Nation the question had been discussed and considered. In 1776 Dr. Benjamin Rush, signer of the Declaration of Independence, published a book on the evils of alcohol. In 1777 the Continental Congress passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the several legislatures of the United States immediately to pass laws the most effectual for putting an immediate stop to the pernicious practice of distilling grain by which the most extensive evils are likely to be derived if not quickly prevented.

One hundred and forty-four years ago the Congress of the United States, representing the people of the new Nation, went to the very limit of their power in passing a bone dry law. Unfortunately that Congress could not enact a law binding upon the States and the recommendation was not followed, but the fact of its passage would indicate that no snap action was taken on the problem in these latter days.

In 1789, the year when the Constitution was adopted, 200 farmers in Litchfield, Conn., organized a temperance society, the first in this country. Other societies sprung up and in 1851 the Independent Order of Good Templars was organized to strike a blow at the liquor traffic.

In 1873 the Woman's Temperance Crusade was begun and later the Woman's Christian Temperance Union took up its great task. In 1890 the Anti-Saloon League was launched for the purpose of harnessing the Christian church against the saloon.

During every year since the organization of this Government there has been discussion of the liquor problems and organized effort to solve it by destruction of the traffic. In 1856 the Independent Order of Good Templars declared for constitutional prohibition. In 1876 Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, introduced a resolution in Congress for the submission of such amendment to the States. In 1914 such a resolution received a majority vote in the Congress of the United States.

Nor was this all. By local option, county option, and State prohibition methods every single community in the country was brought face to face with the question. For 60 years elections were held at which the people voted for or against the liquor traffic.

Step by step the upholders of sobriety and decency won their way. Facing the most powerful business organization in America, they fought out their cause before the American people. So overwhelming was their evidence and so strong their position that in 1916, of the 2,543 counties in the United States 2,238 were in the dry column by the vote of the people, only 305 counties in the entire Nation permitting the sale of alcoholic beverages.

In the course of the conflict Congress took one step after another. It banned the sale of liquor in the Capitol; it prohibited the sale of liquor in the Indian country, at all military posts and reservations, in the Navy, and in the Panama Canal Zone. The District of Columbia was declared dry, and the shipment of liquor and the mailing of liquor advertisements into prohibition States was made unlawful.

Then with the entrance of the United States into the World War came war prohibition and finally the submission of the constitutional amendment to the States. The vote in Congress was almost 3 to 1 in favor of the amendment. As rapidly as the State legislatures could assemble they ratified the amendment. Forty-six out of 48 States rallied to the cause and declared that they were in favor of the utter destruction of this traffic, out of which has come all the extensive evils foreseen by the Continental Congress 140 years before.

The liquor interests then took the issue to the Supreme Court, and the best attorneys their money could secure argued the unconstitutionality of the action taken by the people. On June 8, 1920, the Supreme Court of the United States by a unanimous decision upheld the validity of the amendment and the enforcing code.

Since then there has been no backward step. Of the 33 States which had gone dry by their own action, not one has shown any desire to repeal the law. In 1920 the people elected a Congress more overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition than the one that submitted the amendment or passed the Volstead law. That Congress passed the antibeer law to prevent the use of beer as a medicine.

Ohio, while her soldiers were in France, gave a majority of 28,759 in favor of prohibition. Ohio, after her soldiers had returned, increased that majority to 200,000, proving that the soldiers of America fight for human welfare, not for the liquor traffic.

Mr. Speaker, this great question was solved in American fashion. The battle was fought over a period which covered the entire history of the Nation. No unjust advantage was taken. The liquor traffic was intrenched in power, with vast money chests, with newspapers and paid orators defending their interests.

Every argument that could be used by the ingenuity of the human mind to bolster their cause was brought forward. The liquor interests stole the livery of patriotism in which to serve treason. Prohibition was denounced as an effort to enslave the American people, as "prejudice, bigotry, hate, and tyranny." It was described as a "dictatorship over tastes and appetites" and as an iniquitous assault upon industries long legalized.

Their arguments failed to stand the test. They said they paid great sums in taxes, when every dollar they paid in required twenty-five more to take care of the fruits of their traffic. They went down before scientific research and economic truth, proving that alcoholic liquor injures business, morals, health, and happiness. Then the liquor interests reveled in debauchery and corruption. They bought and sold voters and public officials. They cracked the whip over every aspirant for office. They manipulated the ballot and robbed the ballot box.

In spite of all their power and unscrupulous use of dishonest and despicable tactics they failed. In a fight where all the odds were on their side they were overthrown and beaten.

DELIBERATE DECISION OF PEOPLE.

The American people called the liquor traffic to the bar of public opinion and calmly and deliberately decreed its destruction. It met its doom because of its stealth and secrecy; its deeds of darkness and its sins against the light; its hidden alliance with every force of evil and its bitter opposition to every force of decency; its partnership with pollution and its devotion to depravity; its friendship for every miscreant and its enmity to every friend of sobriety and sanity.

It was ordered destroyed because of its crimes of blood and brutality; its maimings and its murders; its suicides and sepulchers; its pains and poverty; its disease and degeneracy; its insanity and imbecility; its wrecked homes and broken hearts and ruined lives.

It was ordered destroyed because of its treason to free government; its attempted overthrow of democracy and establishment of despotism; its lawlessness in lawmaking; its jungle attacks upon the judiciary; and its ambushed assaults upon honest executives.

By every possible standard of judgment the prohibition amendment and the laws carrying it into effect are sacred enactments of the American people. They are the law of the land, written by greater majorities than any law in American history.

That intoxicating liquor shall not be manufactured and sold in this country is the supreme law of the land. Reverence for that law is the sacred duty of every American citizen. A patriotic citizen is not bound to praise it but he is bound to obey it. He may believe it unwise and is at liberty to urge its repeal, but he must not violate it.

I saw General Foch, supreme commander of the allied armies, in the midst of his fellow officers at the time of the great Chateau-Thierry drive of July, 1918. His commands were obeyed by more soldiers than any other conqueror in the world's history. Confident but careful, efficient and brilliant, he was a figure calculated to arouse the wildest enthusiasm. I saw General Diaz, commander in chief of the Italian Armies, as in the presence of his King he pinned decorations on the breasts of valiant warriors of his country. He and his men had just turned a disastrous defeat into glorious victory and were preparing to strike their last crushing blow against the armies of the Hapsburg Empire. Viewed under such circumstances, Generals Foch and Diaz seemed almost supermen, giants of power and great in achievement. They were great then, but they were greater still when they declared on their arrival into this country some months ago that they had brought no liquors with them and that they proposed to obey American prohibition laws while they remained in America. Over there they served as examples for conquerors who wield the thunderbolts of war and destruction. Over here they served as examples for reverence and respect for civil law, for the obedience to the express will of the Nation, without which there must be anarchy and the downfall of all government.

You may have your own opinion, but for my part I hail these men greater when they cheerfully obeyed America's law while here as America's guests than when they had power to advance or stay the march of mighty armies of fighting men.

But it is a notorious fact that this law is being scorned by many persons in America. Quantities of liquor are being made, transported, and sold. Unholy fortunes are being accumulated by criminals. With lawless spirit certain groups of men are brazenly defying the law.

VIOLATION NO REASON FOR REPEAL.

The enemies of the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement laws declare that violations are evidence that the laws should be revoked. Since when has it been American policy to repeal laws because criminals violate them? Such an argument means that the laws against murder, theft, and all other crimes should be erased from the statute books, simply because they are defied by criminals.

Every sane man knew when the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law were enacted that there would be violations. Those laws dealt with a vast, nation-wide organization which always and everywhere scorned the laws enacted to curb its evils. This organized traffic held sway for many years and it controlled vast sums of money.

That liquor has been the source of most of our crime decisions of our courts assert in the strongest language. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Crowley v. Christensen (137 U. S. Rep. 86), says:

> The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source.

Again, Chief Justice Coleridge, of England, has said:

> Nine-tenths of all the criminals that come before the courts are made criminals by the saloon. If we could make England sober, we could shut up nine-tenths of her prisons.

In Beebe v. State (6 Ind. Sup. Ct. p. 542) we read:

> Drunkenness produces from four-fifths to nine-tenths of all the crime committed. Its tendency is to destroy the peace, safety, and well-being of the people.

No; the defiance of an outlawed traffic is not a reason for the repeal of the law but rather an added reason for its complete enforcement. Five years ago the fight was for a great moral principle. To-day it is for the grandest political principle in the world—the principle that all political power is vested in the people; that under our flag the citizenship, working through orderly procedure, must rule.

Having submitted to evil power until a fair victory was won, the advocates of majority rule do not propose to sit supinely by while liquor-worshipping enemies of law and order carry out their purpose to make the American people not rulers but victims, not citizens but subjects.

IS MORE LIQUOR BEING CONSUMED?

Then the foes of prohibition declare that it is a failure because as much liquor is being sold as ever before. They could secure conclusive answer to this statement by interviewing the distillers and warehouse receipt owners, who still have some 30,000,000 gallons of whisky in their warehouses.

They are shedding copious tears because the withdrawals from these bonded warehouses of spirituous liquors have been reduced from 133,000,000 gallons per year before prohibition to about 2,000,000 gallons this year under prohibition. Here are the statistics from the public records about the reduction in the manufacture and distribution of beverage intoxicants:

Production of spirits, excluding alcohol but including brandy, reduced from 98,517,252 gallons in 1914 to 1,631,056 gallons in 1922.

Importation of spirits, all kinds, reduced from 4,220,670 gallons in 1914 to 280,000 gallons in 1922 (estimated).

Tax-paid spirits withdrawn, excluding alcohol but including brandy, reduced from 80,531,942 gallons in 1914 to 2,790,875 gallons in 1922, and this not for beverage use.

Spirits in bond, including brandy but not alcohol, reduced from 284,406,699 gallons in 1914 to 38,924,246 gallons in 1922.

Alcohol withdrawn, tax-paid, reduced from 58,775,333 gallons in 1914 to 16,391,489 gallons in 1922.

Beverage spirits, including part of alcohol used for beverage purposes, reduced from 105,500,000 gallons in 1914 to nil in 1922.

Beer, produced and imported, was reduced from 2,057,000,000 gallons in 1914 to nil in 1922.

WHAT EFFECT ON CRIME?

There have been foes of prohibition who asserted that the adoption of this great moral reform has increased crime.

With the closing of the swinging portals of the saloon the number of arrests for drunkenness, misdemeanors, and crimes were reduced in city after city of the country. From 5,068 arrests per 100,000 of population in Massachusetts in 1917 the ratio fell to 3,872 in 1921. In Boston the ratio of arrests for drunkenness fell from 100.2 per 100,000 in 1917 to 49.2 in 1922, in spite of the fact that the latter year saw all persons visibly under the influence of liquor arrested, while in the former year only those unable to care for themselves were taken in charge. Montana found her number of murders decrease 45 per cent in the average of the four dry years compared with the previous four wet years, while in the same periods burglaries decreased 32 per cent and robberies 57 per cent. Chicago and Cook County, Ill., found 43 per cent fewer murders reported in 1922 than in 1917, 22 per cent fewer burglaries, and 12 per cent fewer robberies. State after State might be cited to the same effect.

Some time ago I sent a letter to the chiefs of police in all the cities of Pennsylvania having a population of 25,000 and over. I received answers from a large number of them giving fact, not fiction.

Here are a few examples: In Allentown during 1917, 536 persons were arrested for drunkenness and disorderly conduct; in 1921 the number was 135.

In Reading there were 839 arrests on such charges in 1917 and 487 in 1921.

In Norristown there were 322 in 1917 and 96 in 1921.

In Williamsport there were 1,167 in 1917 and 287 in 1921.

In New Castle there were 2,526 in 1917 and 637 in 1921.

In Pittsburgh there were 38,887 in 1917 and 16,990 in 1921.

In all the cities in Pennsylvania there was a decrease of 60 per cent in such crimes between the last wet year and the first dry year. That is the fact instead of booze propaganda.

FACTS ON DRUG ADDICTION.

We have further been informed that the drinker, denied his alcohol, turns to drugs to obtain the excitement which is missing from nonintoxicating drinks, and that we are making a nation of drug addicts. The only trouble with the theory is that there are no facts to support it. Col. O. G. Forrer, administrative assistant in the narcotic division under Chief L. G. Nutt, who is compiling data relating to the use of drugs, arrests, convictions, and so forth, firmly opposes the idea that prohibition has resulted in an increase of addicts.

> that victims of the drug habit practically in every instance are young men and women, often in their teens. Rarely are they alcoholics. The difference between an alcoholic and a drug addict is that the alcoholic after a spree is usually sorry and repentant—experiences a period of reform. The drug addict has no such experience. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that there has been an increase of addicts, I attribute the condition to reaction from the strain and abnormal condition of humanity caused by the World War. Environments were changed; boys and girls were taken from quiet homes, from the simple life, and thrown into a strenuous whirl of excitement, receiving unusual salaries and wages, and following the armistice there has been inevitable reaction, and in striving to attain normalcy the weak, following the line of least resistance, have resorted to drugs which restore to a marked degree desired excitement.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, the health expert, speaking on this same question, says:

> We happen to be in an unusually favorable position to get at the facts of this problem because of the Harrison narcotic law, requiring rigid recording and reporting of all narcotic drugs prescribed or sold. The first six months went by without any change in either the number of drug addicts or the amount of narcotics consumed (after advent of prohibition). This was explained by the supposition that all habitual users of alcohol to excess had been warned so far in advance that they had been able to lay in private stocks. But a year passed with still no change and finally it dawned upon us that the cutting off of alcohol had not made the slightest increase in the number of so-called dope fiends.

THAT DANGER TO THE HOME.

Then they lift their hands in holy horror over "search and seizure." They denounce the antiliquor selling laws on the ground that they mean violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees the right of every citizen to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures.

These dealers in illicit liquor are indeed tenderly concerned for the home. Given their way they would send a debasing and destroying force into every home in the land. They would ruin happy households and put out the hearth fires in countless homes. They would send beloved sons to prison and gallows and the daughters to the streets and brothel.

There never was greater hypocrisy than this bootleggers' chorus about the rights of Americans to be secure in their homes. The enforcement law and the antibeer bill expressly declare that no home shall be entered by enforcement officers without a search warrant. It does permit the search of outhouses and automobiles, but even the most tender-hearted bootlegger would hardly hold that a booze garage or a whisky truck should be wrapped in the sanctity of the home.

Back of the arguments which seek to delude unthinking people into a fear that their homes are in peril stand the interests which wrought more destruction to the homes of America than anything else in our history—the outlaw liquor traffic. American homes will be secure only when these home destroyers themselves are made helpless to work evil.

THE COST OF PROHIBITION.

Then we hear anguished cries about the cost of enforcing prohibition. What are the facts? For the fiscal year the prohibition-enforcement unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue received $6,750,000 out of the Treasury of the United States.

Commissioner Haynes has issued the following statement of the amounts deposited in the Treasury during the fiscal year of 1922 incident to the enforcement of the national prohibition laws:

Federal court fines and forfeitures collected during the year, not including collections in the Territory of Alaska	$2,824,685.01
Amounts paid in compromise	1,739,622.80
Amounts collected in taxes and penalties, not including taxes on legal manufacture and legal sale of intoxicating liquors	239,964.14
Total	4,804,271.95
Approximate amount of bonds on which action has been taken toward forfeiture	3,000,000.00

The fact is that the enforcement, as far as the prohibition unit is concerned, has paid for itself. And the further appropriation to the Department of Justice has been more than covered by the direct returns from convicted lawbreakers. Happy, indeed, would we be if every violator of American laws paid the cost of his detection and conviction as does the criminal who breaks prohibition laws.

But above and beyond that fact it is true that if America spent not seven but seventy millions and prevented the toll levied upon the taxpayers for taking care of the finished product of the liquor traffic, it would be the most efficient economy in the history of governmental administration.

LIBERTY WAS NEVER LICENSE.

Then there are the cries of "personal liberty" which were so much in evidence when this great battle was being fought out before the American people. The people deliberately decided that they would suffer some curtailment of personal liberty in order to serve the common good.

If these latter-day advocates of personal liberty were true to their vaunted philosophy they would wage war against all pure-food legislation which interferes with the personal liberty of manufacturers. They would cry out against health and quarantine regulations which hamper the liberty of persons suffering from contagious diseases. They would call for the abolition of restrictions upon the sale of dope and the operation of brothels. They would enlist in a crusade upon all the limitations upon license which are necessary if civilization is to endure.

They dare not do this. They demand personal liberty only for the maker, seller, and user of intoxicants. And the people of America took that demand into account and refused it. They decided in favor of the personal liberty of the hosts of sufferers from alcohol, of the pauperized families of drunkards, of the mothers and children who never had a fair chance, of the victims of a greedy system which coined blood into dollars.

THE NEW NULLIFICATION THEORY.

There have been many schemes offered by wet advocates to overthrow the eighteenth amendment. There is one which seeks to levy a tax upon beer and use it for a soldiers' bonus. Then there was the plan of local-option districts based on congressional districts. The latest seems to be the repeal of the Volstead law and the permission to the individual States to deal with the whole question.

What does that policy mean? Simply the nullification of the Constitution. If it were carried out, it would mean that we would be exactly where we were before the eighteenth amendment was adopted. That is carrying State rights to a point never advocated by John C. Calhoun.

No; this is a national problem and must be solved by national measures. We dealt with it by piecemeal and fractions until it became apparent to every sane man that only through national action could the liquor traffic be made helpless to harm America.

Those who oppose prohibition should be honest. They should seek the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Of course, they know that when they could not control 13 legislative bodies in all the Nation it is difficult to imagine that they can control 72 for the repeal.

But they should understand that what they can not do directly and out in the open they will not be permitted to do indirectly and through stealth and secrecy.

THE DANGER IN APPLE JUICE.

There are those who shed tears over the alleged inconsistency in the law which permits the farmer to have his cider while the city man can not have his beer. They do not seem to know that Congress can not legalize the manufacture of liquor which is in fact intoxicating. Of course, the evil aimed at was a commercialized liquor traffic which threatened the life of the Nation. Thus far the makers of fruit-juice wines have not organized into associations opposed to prohibition because of their profits.

It was understood when the law was passed that home producers of fruit juices and cider have no delicate apparatus to determine the one-half of 1 per cent alcoholic content, but that it can be easily determined when such beverages are intoxicating in fact. There was also no desire to prevent farmers and fruit growers from conserving their fruit for the manufacture of cider, which may be used as a beverage as long as it is not intoxicating in fact, after which time it may be permitted to develop through the process of fermentation into vinegar.

PROPAGANDA THAT NEEDED PROP.

Never was there such a campaign of misrepresentation against any governmental action as in the case of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. And never was the weakness of arguments so apparent. The foes of prohibition said that immigrants would not seek our shores with such illiberal laws in force. Yet we see whole communities seeking to enter our gates, and it becomes necessary to pass a 3 per cent quota law in order to cut down the numbers admitted.

They said the outlawing of the saloon would bring panic to the cities, yet the old-time barrooms have gone and their places are taken by legitimate places of business which add to the comfort of all the people.

They said that prohibition was unconstitutional, and that no court would ever declare such a departure from the spirit of our Government to be valid law. Yet the Supreme Court by a unanimous vote upheld its constitutionality and declared it an integral part of our organic law.

They said prohibition would not prohibit, and now they say that the law as enforced is tyrannical and means overriding the rights and liberties of the people.

THE PEOPLE WILL RULE.

To-day, with prohibition as a part of American policy, we know the worth of these alleged arguments. The people are more determined than ever to have their will enforced, and they have elected five dry Congresses in succession to show any doubting Thomas where they stand. They propose to see that sympathizers with booze are not made enforcement agents. They propose to deal with men in high places which presume high character when they join the regiment of rebellion and incite violation of law. They propose to do everything necessary to secure the success of this great reform to which they deliberately set their hands and their hearts.

Mr. Speaker, this whole question is concerned with the fundamentals of self-government. Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, elected on a platform whose first and foremost plank was enforcement of the prohibition laws, has expressed the issue in splendid fashion. It would be well if every public official and every American joined with him in the following declaration made in his inaugural address when he assumed the duties of chief executive of the Keystone Commonwealth:

Pennsylvania must either control the criminals who are openly breaking the law or be controlled by them. With all good citizens, I believe that this Commonwealth is greater and more powerful than any band of lawbreakers whatsoever, and I intend to act on that belief.

This administration will be dry. The executive mansion will be dry, and the personal practice of the governor and his family will continue to be dry, in conformity to the spirit and letter of the eighteenth amendment.

The law is the law. It is the foundation of order, safety, and prosperity, and of the Commonwealth itself. Every State official takes oath and is in honor bound to obey it. I shall expect and demand from every public servant appointed by me or subject to removal by me, from the highest to the lowest, entire and ungrudging obedience to the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. They are part of the law of the land.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I invite attention to some railroad problems.

During the Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth, and Sixty-seventh Congresses transportation problems have demanded most careful investigation. In the study of the problems handled in those Congresses it is proper to take into account some significant facts of history.

In 1912 American railroads furnished to the people of this country the best transportation service at the lowest rates ever enjoyed by the people of the United States. That achievement followed as the direct result of Republican legislation and administration extending over a period of nearly 50 years.

Thirty or forty years ago the railroads of the country were left largely to exercise their own choice as to rates of transportation and also the kind of service they would render. During a long period of time they levied and collected the highest rates that the traffic would bear and still live. In other words, they fed the horse just enough to keep him alive and in sufficient strength to pull another load. The rule of rate making in those days exacted all that the traffic would bear. The roads were domineering toward the public and arrogant toward their employees. The railroad managers manifested a spirit that assumed the right to command and the duty of the rest of the world to obey and pay the bill. A long-suffering public, however, witnessed the appearance of labor organizations that finally subdued the arrogance of employers to employees and enforced a more equitable reckoning for the rewards of their toil.

Then the public awoke from its dream of years to the realization that it was still the paymaster for all the financial obligations that were being imposed upon them through quarrels between employers and employees and all sorts of exactions in rates. A reckoning began and the interstate commerce act of 1887 was written, and the Interstate Commerce Commission created under that act to administer rules of equity and justice between the transportation agencies on the one hand and the public on the other. That act and all similar acts are based upon the fundamental proposition that the public is a partner in this great transportation question, and should be an active partner and not forever a silent partner. Various modifications of that act have followed from time to time in attempts to enforce this rule of equity and justice. Note the result in 1912, as stated above, namely, the people of the United States were then enjoying the best transportation service at the lowest rates that have ever appeared in the history of the American Republic.

The Republican Party was retired from power in both legislative and executive branches of the Federal Government in 1913 and the Democratic Party then took control. Note the marked contrast. After eight years of Democratic rule in the White House and an almost equal period of rule in Congress, the transportation rates levied upon the people of the United States in 1920 were the highest and most exacting ever known in the history of the country. From 1913 to 1921 transportation charges gradually advanced to their highest peak under Democratic legislation and administration. In 1914 the World War broke out, and gradually events carried our country nearer and still nearer the verge of the conflict, and the slogan of 1916, "He kept us out of war," really helped to hasten our entrance into the war. It not only hastened that event, but it withheld preparation in the meantime and left us almost helpless at the opening of our part in the contest. Note in this connection, if you please, the important bearing of war preparations and plans upon methods and theories of transportation.

In time of war the railroads must of necessity be subject to the immediate orders of the Government. In times of peace, however, in a republic, the transportation problems are handled more largely as individual enterprises. Germany, for instance, had developed a centralizing system of transportation under the control of the empire. Thus you see the nation that is prompted by the war spirit as its chief purpose will advocate and exercise government control and ownership of railroads, while a republic, the messenger of peace, has no need for such a centralization of the transportation facilities of the country.

August 29, 1916, a Democratic Congress authorized the President of the United States to assume control of the railroads of the country in the event of war. Note the significant fact that President Wilson signed that law while his political supporters were ringing the changes on the campaign slogan, "He kept us out of war." That legislation proves conclusively a concealed purpose that anticipated our participation in the World War. On the 28th of December, 1917, President Wilson issued a proclamation taking over the railroads and appointing the crown prince, William G. McAdoo, as Director General of Railroads. They claim that the railroads had broken down. It would have been nearer the truth, in fact, the actual truth, if they had said that the railroads had been swamped by the War and Navy Departments through priority orders for shipment of goods that would not be required for six months to a year or more. How could an independent railroad management conduct business while the clerks at their desks in the War and Navy Departments were using rubber stamps to issue priority orders without any centralizing agency of either department to decide whether it should be a priority order of not? Nevertheless, the President assumed control of the roads under that law, and in the proclamation designated the crown prince as director general. President Wilson said the roads should be guaranteed a net income equivalent, as nearly as possible, to the average annual net earnings for the test period of three years ending June 30, 1917. Upon that principle the Federal control act of March 21, 1918, was based. Thus the roads taken over by the Government were guaranteed rates showing an average net income annually of 11.27 per cent. That penalty was levied upon the people of the United States in time of war by the Wilson administration.

After the crown prince took charge he increased salaries promiscuously so that a car tester with only a week's experience on the railroad received larger salary than a conductor on a passenger train who had served 15 years to learn the business. The conductor with 15 years' experience as a railroad man was compelled to take into his train any car that that tester or inspector might assign to him. Crews were added at little stations where none had appeared before. The force in the little shops all over the country was increased from one-fourth to three-fourths, and sometimes doubled. Note the pay roll in its increase in the total. That will tell you the story in significant figures, with gross discriminations against some of the best employees in the service.

During the period of the war the management of the director general was largely one of distinct favoritism. When we came to strike the balance and pay the bills we found that he had cost the country over $2,000,000,000 in railroad subsidies on rates and a billion and a quarter more for equipment, with very slow payment for the return of anything.

This country has never seen, and I hope it never will again see, such a period of railroad debauchery as we had under the rule of the crown prince.

Those who have followed the history of those transactions with thoughtful care realize the unnecessary financial embarrassment that has been forced upon the country. The waste and extravagance of the McAdoo administration of the railroads forced higher rates upon the shippers of the country and much heavier burdens upon the taxpayers to supply the revenues required to pay the subsidies thus imposed upon the Government in behalf of the railroads.

It would be well worth while to study the Federal control act of March 21, 1918, which was urged upon Congress by President Wilson and Director General McAdoo. That act levied upon the taxpayers of the country subsidies in the form of guaranteed rates. They have drawn out of the National Treasury over $2,000,000,000, with some claims yet to be settled and paid. The plan which they adopted in that act did not even contemplate the repayment of a single dollar of the billions paid in subsidies to the roads.

In view of this record, why should our Democratic friends ever argue against subsidies for any purpose in any amount? That Federal control act is the crowning piece of subsidy legislation. It involves all of the evil influences that have advanced railroad rates to their highest point, and our Democratic opponents are directly responsible for it. Under the Harding administration efforts have been made to reduce those rates, and reductions have been made to the extent of about 18 per cent. While I think much larger reduction ought to be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is gratifying to note the fact that under Republican rule some reduction has been made and no increases have been made in any direction.

TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The transportation act of 1920 abolished the guaranteed rates adopted by the Wilson administration through the Federal control act of March 21, 1918. Thus the taxpayers of the country were emancipated from all payment of subsidies to the railroads after the 1st day of September, 1920. It should be distinctly remembered that the transportation act of 1920 did not increase rates in any way, but it did abolish the principle of subsidies to railroads. It simply permitted the continuance of guaranteed rates under the Federal control act until September 1, 1920. That action was necessary to prevent a financial collapse and panic throughout the country and also to prevent universal strikes. The McAdoo administration of the railroads had forced upon the country demoralization, which compelled the Government to buy its way out.

You readily recall the fact that President Wilson announced in advance that he would return the roads to their owners on the 1st day of January, 1920, and subsequently issued a proclamation returning the roads on the 1st of March, 1920.

The transportation act of 1920 became effective on the 28th day of February, 1920. These dates are quite significant when studied in the light of the history of these transactions. Some have argued, apparently for political reasons, that no legislation was needed for the return of the roads. The Interstate Commerce Commission, the legal authorities of the Government, have held to the contrary, and asserted that widespread disaster to all enterprises of the country would have resulted if some such legislation had not been enacted. It was necessary to make legislative provision for the proper legal observance of the financial obligations levied upon the National Treasury by the Federal control act. This fact must be taken into account in securing a correct understanding of the real purpose of passing the transportation act of 1920.

We have heard much in regard to watered stock. This act is the first and only act that prohibits the issuance of watered stock. The increase in rates, unwarranted in some particulars, was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose members had been appointed by President Wilson. The commission acted upon the legal authority delegated to it by statutes enacted prior to the war. It still maintains that authority, and has full power to reduce railroad rates upon proper showings, without any regard to existing provisions of the transportation act of 1920. Many people have made a similar mistake in citing that act as the source of authority on the part of the commission to change railroad rates. It is true that section 15a did prescribe a rule for rate making whereby 6 per cent was fixed as the maximum rate. That section was incorporated into the law by means of a Senate amendment, which I opposed in the House. It should never have been adopted. Nevertheless, the fact that the rule for rate making 6 per cent maximum expired on the 1st day of March, 1922. Its terms that still remain in force should be repealed so that the country may understand that there is not anything left in the law that was carried in that section.

The provision of that act restricting the powers of the State railway commissions and correspondingly enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission should be repealed, so that the authority of the State commissions may be fully restored to them in the adjustment and conduct of intrastate transportation.

All provisions of the act of 1920 that restrict in any way the operation of competitive rates should be repealed, and only the provisions that are necessary to carry out the terms of the contracts made under the Federal control act of 1918 should be retained.

NO GUARANTY.

Contrary to the view asserted by many, that section—15a—does not guarantee rates. That section does not make railroad property a favored class of property by guaranteeing a fixed return upon it. This is evidenced by the fact that during the year 1920 the net earnings on the rates in question were only about 3.3 per cent on the valuation fixed by the commission in 1922. If there had been a legal guaranty of 5½ per cent or 6 per cent, the roads would surely have claimed it and collected it.

Not one cent, however, has ever been collected as a guaranty under that section.

Moreover, it is impossible to collect a guaranty under that provision of law for the simple reason that it does not give any pledge for a fixed return.

Five and a half or six per cent was indicated as the maximum beyond which the roads should not go with an average net return. It is unfortunate that many newspapers and public speakers have advised the public erroneously in regard to this provision of law. While I voted against it originally, and would vote for its repeal now, it is only fair to state the facts in order that the public may understand the true situation.

It is equally unfortunate that many newspapers and public speakers have asserted that the valuation of railroad property has been fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for rate-making purposes at a valuation of $30,000,000,000. That statement is wholly incorrect. Anyone who desires to obtain reliable information can ascertain the fact that the valuation fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act of 1913 is $18,900,000,000. In this connection it is also appropriate to note the fact that the physical valuation of railroad property has not been made under the transportation act of 1920. That work was authorized and directed by the La Follette Act of 1913. Many provisions of the transportation act of 1920 have run their course, served their purpose, and expired under their own limitations. In view of this fact it would be wise to draft and pass a bill repealing that act and securing the retention and perpetuation of all of its provisions that should be kept in force in carrying into effect the unexecuted provisions of the Federal control act of March 21, 1918.

Of course the provisions of the transportation act of 1920 prohibiting the issuance of watered stock should be retained and made permanent law.

This course of action would clarify railroad legislation to such an extent that the public could readily grasp the situation under existing law.

The authority and power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to increase and decrease rates on interstate transportation existed before the transportation act of 1920 was passed, and the commission has full authority to proceed on matters of that kind without regard to that act.

I regret that we were not able to secure the passage of the Sweet or the Capper bill in this Congress for the repeal of section 15a and for the restoration of the authority and powers of the State railway commissions and also the revival of competitive rates among railroads.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following summary of the achievements of the Sixty-seventh Congress by Hon. JAMES E. WATSON, United States Senator from Indiana:

SUMMARY OF THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

(By JAMES E. WATSON, United States Senator from Indiana.)

In commenting upon the steady and consistent improvement of domestic finance and business in the face of conditions in Europe, the financial column of the New York Times a few days ago said:

"The further advance in stocks is quite unmistakably a reflection not of European conditions but of the financial and industrial situation at home. Whether the market could have moved as it did if the financial mind had taken seriously the predictions of disaster in continental Europe is another question, but the actual fact is that the investment market has to all intents forgotten Europe. It has its eye on the weather signs of business conditions in this country and moves in response to what it sees. These conditions are somewhat remarkable."

In commenting upon the same phenomenon, a noted author and writer on economic subjects says:

"The explanation, as repeatedly pointed out, is that trade conditions in America are so sound and promising that they have outweighed in the minds of security holders every other consideration."

Undoubtedly conditions in America are sound and promising. Never in the history of American industry has there been such production. Basic industries are running capacity or nearly so. Running capacity to-day means an output of from 50 to 100 per cent greater than in pre-war times. This is because during the war practically every basic industry increased its capacity at least 50 per cent. Some doubled their capacity. To illustrate: If an industry increased its capacity 50 per cent during the war and is now running 80 per cent of its capacity, it is producing 120 per cent more goods now than it did in pre-war times.

EVIDENCES OF PROSPERITY.

The United States Steel Corporation is operating 90 per cent of its capacity. Despite this fact, its unfilled orders to-day are approximately 7,000,000 tons, the largest on record since the war.

Pig iron production for the month of January was within a few thousand tons of its highest record of September, 1918. In both the iron and steel industry deliveries are no longer promised until the last quarter of this year.

The number of active textile spindles is the greatest known in the history of the textile industry in America and the purchase of cotton by domestic textiles, nothwithstanding the high price, has never been equaled.

The total motor vehicle production for 1922 was 65 per cent greater than the previous year and was the greatest in the history of the automotive industry.

The year 1922 was the greatest building year for many years, but according to the most conservative estimates the current year will far eclipse 1922. Contracts already made for construction to begin during the present year exceed $5,116,600,000.

Car loadings during 1922 were the greatest in the history of American railroads.

LABOR FULLY EMPLOYED.

These are some of the outstanding features of the prosperous activity in our underlying industries. This activity is accurately reflected in the labor situation. It is a matter of common information that except among those with whom loafing is chronic and by choice, there is no man to-day who can not find a job at good wages. In many of our industries and trades, labor is so scarce that wages are equal to those of war times.

The financial world reflects the activity in industry and transportation. According to the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency the resources of the national banks in each of the 12 Federal reserve districts showed a consistent and substantial increase during the year. The aggregate increase in the resources was over $2,000,000,000, and the aggregate increase in the deposits of the national banks during the year was $2,345,379,000. The report of savings banks and savings departments of banks and trust companies show an increase during the calendar year of $1,500,000,000 in deposits and an increase of 2,300,000 in the number of depositors.

RETAIL BUSINESS IMPROVING.

The retail business of the country returned to normally prosperous conditions. Without exception in any section of the United States the holiday business transacted by the retail merchants last December was the greatest since 1919. Reports of such organizations as mail-order houses, which serve a wide and varied trade, show tremendous increases of business during the last year. A typical report was that made by a large Chicago mail-order house showing the increase in gross sales to have been 21.6 per cent greater than in 1921.

The New York Times says these conditions are remarkable. They are, but not because of anything per se. There have been previous times in the history of this country when conditions were quite as prosperous and industries were relatively quite as active. The present conditions are remarkable for two reasons: First, they exist only in the United States, and second, their existence is in high contrast to conditions two years ago.

FROM "HARD TIMES" TO "GOOD TIMES."

It is not difficult to recall the conditions of two years ago. Briefly, hard times prevailed. Scarcely an industry but was seriously and adversely affected. Many were completely closed. Between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 workers employed under normal conditions were in enforced idleness, which brought distress not only to them but because of their crippled buying power brought distress to business. Depositors were drawing their savings from banks to meet their living expenses. Interest rates on gilt-edge loans were 7½ per cent. Liberty and Victory bonds were selling at far below par, averaging about $85. Agricultural sections faced bankruptcy and thousands of individual farmers were going bankrupt. Finance and commerce lacked confidence and feared what the future might bring forth. All lines of industry and business were contracting rather than expanding, although at that very time the shelves of retail stores were empty and there was a scarcity of all lines of manufactured goods as well as a famine in buildings in every city.

For a nation to swing in 24 months from such industrial, agricultural, and business depression to such prodigious activity and prosperity as exists to-day is really remarkable under any circumstances. It is all the more so in view of the very patent fact that while this radical change for the better has been going on in this country conditions have not improved in Europe. In many ways they have grown worse in the past two years. With the exception of the British pound, values of currency in nearly all European countries are lower to-day than they were when the armistice was signed, which clearly shows a lack of ability upon their part to handle the problems of peace. This fact clearly demonstrates that the improvement in conditions in the United States was not in common with any world-wide improvement. Quite the contrary. It was made in face of very adverse world-wide influences.

THE IMPROVEMENT IS NO ACCIDENT.

Partisan critics of the Republican administration try to explain this remarkable improvement in every way except the true way. It is due to two years of Republican administration and legislation.

The business man who two years ago was living from hand to mouth, the farmer who was facing bankruptcy, the workingman who was walking the streets, the manufacturer who was closing down his plant, the banker and the investor who was facing the future with timidity and fear, may or may not realize that the changed conditions under which they are working and doing business to-day are due to the acts of a Republican Congress, but such is the fact.

These acts have, to classify them largely, cut down public expenses and public taxes, introduced economy in public administration, given timely assistance to agriculture, and afforded needed protection to industry and the wage earner. None of this legislation was particularly spectacular. In fact, there is nothing spectacular in a program of economy. It is the spendthrift who causes a sensation.

The Sixty-seventh Congress, which has just adjourned, first assembled on April 11, 1921, when it was called in special session by President Harding. It has been practically in continuous session ever since. During that time it has enacted constructive legislation which in quantity and quality has not been equaled by any previous Congress in the history of the United States. To meet the critical conditions which existed when it came into power four laws were speedily enacted—the Budget law, the emergency tariff, the revitalization of the War Finance Corporation, and the restrictive immigration act. To review them briefly, seriatim:

CREATION OF THE BUDGET.

Without doubt the creation of a budgetary system of handling public expenditures was the greatest piece of constructive fiscal legislation since the Civil War. No problem of government in any nation to-day compares in importance to that of reduction of public expenditures and taxes. Burdens of unnecessary taxation are at the bottom of much of the popular unrest and practically all of the commercial paralysis that prevails in nearly every country. It is not accident that the United States is the one exception to this world-wide condition. That it has accomplished the task of making both ends meet in the routine administration of its financial affairs is due to its Budget system. All the credit for the existence of this system must be given to the Republican Congress.

It is a matter of record that the Republican Congress elected in 1918 enacted a Budget law practically identical with the one now in force and operation only to have it vetoed by President Wilson. This clearly shows the intent and purpose of the Republican Congress to place the Government's financial affairs upon a businesslike basis. One of the first acts of the Sixty-seventh Congress in special session was the reenactment of the Budget law which created the Budget Bureau and endowed it with all the powers under which it has so successfully functioned.

Not only was this done but the machinery of the House was reorganized in order that there might be the utmost cooperation with the Budget Bureau in handling appropriation bills. This act of the House was purely voluntary. Furthermore, the House Committee on Appropriations, to which all Budget Bureau estimates are submitted, has made it an unwritten law that the estimates are to be taken as the maximum of appropriations. These facts clearly prove the desire and purpose of the Congress to assist in every possible way to balance the books of the Government and get public expenditures back to a basis consistent with rigid public economy. Further proof of this is evidenced by the fact that the total appropriations of the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress were $172,523,046, or 7 per cent, less than the Budget Bureau asked for.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS IMPROVED.

It is no exaggeration to state that agricultural conditions were worse when the Republican administration took charge in March, 1921, than they had been for at least a generation. In many sections they were worse than at any time in their history. National disaster was imminent, because agriculture is a basic industry which can not face bankruptcy without involving all the Nation.

The farmer is the Nation's greatest producer. In addition to being America's greatest producer he is the Nation's greatest consumer—the greatest single buyer in America of manufactured products. The farming class is the largest consumer of steel with the exception of the railroads, the largest buyer of textile goods, the largest buyer of leather goods, the consumer of 46 per cent of all wool products, the purchaser of 30 per cent of all motor vehicles, the largest shipper of freight. All told, the farming class furnishes 40 per cent of the buying power of America. In view of this it was necessary for the protection and salvation for the rest of the country that agricultural classes be given immediate relief. There was no class legislation about such action.

MEASURES FOR FARMERS' RELIEF.

In order to afford agricultural sections immediate relief, the War Finance Corporation was revitalized and its powers extended so that it could make loans for agricultural and livestock purposes out of a revolving fund of $1,000,000,000. Within a few weeks from the time Congress did this the War Finance Corporation was approving loans at the rate of $1,500,000 a day. During the first year of its operations it made loans at the average rate of $1,000,000 a day, including Sundays. There is not the least doubt but that this speedy work upon the part of the Sixty-seventh Congress saved the agricultural sections of the Nation from bankruptcy, which would have dragged all business and industry with it into a panic of untold proportions and duration.

Another early act of the special session was the passage of the emergency or farmers' tariff. Benefits from this tariff were immediately in evidence. Before the tariff was enacted American farmers were receiving less money in American markets than was being paid in foreign markets for like products. Within 30 days from the time this tariff went into effect the situation was reversed. Prices paid in American markets for American farm products were higher than prices paid for like products in foreign markets. This difference in favor of the American market was consistently maintained throughout the life of the emergency tariff and guaranteed the American farmer much higher prices for his harvests than he otherwise would have received and stabilized the market prices for all his products.

With the enactment of these two laws, which gave him ample and immediate credit and afforded him protection in his home markets, the American farmer began to climb back toward normal conditions. The return was gradual because his situation was critical. He has not fully recovered yet, but some indication of the improvement of his condition is evidenced by the fact that up to January 1, 1923, he had repaid to the War Finance Corporation 41 per cent of the money loaned him. He is now selling his products at a price above the cost of their production, although the relative buying power of the dollar which he receives for his products is not yet what it should be. His condition has so improved, however, that he is again in the market for the output of American industries.

Agricultural sections of the Nation last year produced from 7 to 15 per cent more motor vehicles than they did in 1921. Merchandisers of all kinds of good in agricultural sections report a vastly increased trade. All this is due to the assistance given the farming classes by Congress. This increased buying upon their part explains in a large measure the resumption of activity in American industry and the reemployment of the millions of idle workmen.

To consummate the effective service rendered the farmer by this Congress, it passed the last two days, after full consideration in both Houses, a combination of the Capper, the Lenroot, and the Strong bills that undoubtedly will place within the reach of the farmers of the country such financial facilities as will enable them further to stabilize their industry by increasing the value of their products and affording better marketing conditions.

The restrictive immigration act was placed upon the books at a time when unemployment was at its height. It was also at a time when the desire to leave the various war-torn countries of Europe was uppermost in the minds of millions of Europeans. Had not Congress enacted the law at the time it did, there is no doubt that the country would have been flooded with hundreds of thousands of immigrants who would have only been added to the army of unemployed and increased the critical problem which confronted both private industry and public government.

FOUR GREAT CONSTRUCTIVE MEASURES.

These four pieces of legislation enacted early in the life of the Sixty-seventh Congress saved the country from a panic and started it on the solid highway back to normalcy. In these four pieces of legislation were embodied the fundamentals of public economy, reduced taxes, restored business confidence, based on a revival of agriculture and industry. Out of all of this developed the present remarkable conditions of industrial and commercial activity and prosperity. The present conditions could not and would not exist had it not been for these four acts of the Sixty-seventh Congress. Could anything be more constructive? Had the Congress which has just adjourned done nothing else, the enactment of these four laws would have entitled it to rank in legislative history as one of the greatest Congresses.

But it did more than this. It supplemented these acts with legislation which accelerated the return of all private enterprise to a condition of prosperous activity and enabled the Government to reduce public expenditures to the lowest possible point consistent with efficiency in public service.

For example, it reduced public taxes $820,000,000 a year, the bulk of which is lifted from the family and the individual of average income. It found the country officially in a state of war with Germany and Austria-Hungary and by joint resolution reestablished peace with those two nations. It created a Debt Refunding Commission to place our foreign loans on a businesslike basis, and it later accepted the report of that commission in relation to the settlement of the debt of Great Britain to this Government. By doing this it insured the repayment of 35 per cent of the foreign loans made by this Government during the World War. This in turn means the reduction of our interest charges on the public debt; means strengthening and stabilizing the value of our Government bonds. It undoubtedly means a further reduction in public taxes.

OTHER SALUTARY MEASURES.

The Congress supplemented the farmers' tariff and the War Finance Corporation act with a series of acts which further strengthened and stabilized agricultural conditions. Among these was the increase of the funds of the Federal farm loan bank in the sum of $25,000,000; the authorization of the formation of cooperative marketing associations; the enactment of the packers and stockyards act for the live-stock interests and the grain futures act for the farmer; it came to the relief of drought-stricken areas in our great Northwest and extended the time of payment due on irrigation and reclamation projects throughout the West.

It enacted the Sweet law which created the Veterans' Bureau, consolidated all Government agencies dealing with ex-service men, and facilitated the work of relieving disabled war veterans. It appropriated for the use of that bureau more money than was appropriated for any other public purpose except the payment of the public debt and interest thereon.

All criticism and charges to the contrary, this Republican Congress has done more for the ex-service man of the United States than has been done for the ex-service man of any other nation or has been done by this country for the veterans of any previous war. The session just adjourned appropriated $428,660,773 for the Veterans' Bureau, beginning July 1 next. This is an increase of $10,606,870 over the appropriations for the current year. These sums, together with previous appropriations for ex-service men, make a total of $2,282,579,011 which has been appropriated and expended, or appropriated for expenditures upon work and relief for ex-service men. All this money has been appropriated by Republican Congresses since the signing of the armistice.

OTHER ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE CONGRESS.

It provided for the reorganization of the Philippine financial system and an extension of Philippine credit in order to save those islands from bankruptcy, which they were facing as a result of eight years of government under the Democratic régime.

It extended relief to starving millions of Russia.

To promote our foreign trade, it amended the Edge Act to facilitate the organization of corporations engaged in export business.

It granted liberal aid for public roads.

It reorganized the Indian Bureau and gave long-needed assistance to the Patent Office.

It strengthened the enforcement of the Federal prohibition amendment.

It provided for the creation of more Federal judges and courts in order to relieve the congestion of business and expedite justice.

It created a fact-finding commission to study the coal industry.

It enacted the maternity act asked for by the women of the country to safeguard the welfare of infancy and maternity. In this connection, it appropriated more money for the Labor Department than has ever been appropriated for that department. It was the only department of the Government that received increases in appropriations. Notwithstanding the charges that have been made by Democratic labor leaders that this Congress has been hostile to the interest of wage earners the fact remains that at the last annual convention of the American Federation of Labor the legislative committee of that federation reported that this Congress had enacted 17 laws favorable to labor which were indorsed by the American Federation of Labor's legislative department. The statement of this fact may be found on page 92 of the official report of the proceedings of that convention and gives the official lie to those political demagogues who seek to stir up bitterness and resentment among wage earners against this administration.

A TARIFF FOR PROSPERITY.

One of the most important pieces of legislation placed upon the books by the outgoing Congress was the permanent tariff, which insures industry and agriculture alike protection from destructive tariff competition and guarantees the workingman steady employment at good wage. It is not to be expected that this tariff law will please the free trader or the internationalist. It was not enacted for that purpose. America has always prospered under a protective tariff; foreign markets have expanded, and stimulated production has increased competition and resulted in lowering of commodity prices at home. There is every reason to believe the present tariff will result as previous protective tariffs have resulted. Already the operations of the law have refuted the charges made upon the floor of the Congress to the effect that its enactment would destroy our foreign trade and erect a "Chinese wall" around the country that would prevent other nations from trading with us.

Our exports during the months the law has been in force are at the rate that will show a total foreign trade for the year in excess of $1,000,000,000 over the exports of the last fiscal year before the outbreak of the European war, at which time the world was at peace, conditions were normal, and there was upon the statute books the Underwood free-trade tariff. The imports under the present tariff for the month of October—the only month for which complete figures are available—show an increase of nearly 100 per cent over the imports for the month of October in 1921. This clearly shows that this tariff is not a Chinese wall which isolates this country economically from the rest of the world.

A RECORD TO BE PROUD OF.

This is in brief a record of the outstanding accomplishments of the Sixty-seventh Congress. In the face of this record it is manifestly unjust and absurdly untrue to characterize it as a "do-nothing" Congress. In spite of this splendid record the Sixty-seventh Congress was the object of much criticism. It is only natural to rail at Congress. That is the prerogative of a free people. It is always to be expected. A candid analysis of the criticisms justifies the assertion that they came from those who failed to get class or sectional legislation enacted. One may search the record in vain to find where the Congress yielded to the demands for legislation which benefited only one section of the country or only one class of people at the expense of all the country and all the people. One may search the record in vain to find where it enacted any destructive legislation. A prominent critic of Congress recently stated that if its record had been one-half as good as business was there would be no reason to find fault with it. Unfortunately for the critic, his logic is getting the cart before the horse. The truth of the matter is that had this been one-half as bad a Congress as its critics maintained business would not to-day be good. Neither this country nor any other country could have the sound and prosperous conditions that exist to-day in the United States if during the past two years there had been in continuous session a national lawmaking body that had not enacted constructive and helpful legislation. To fully appreciate what the Sixty-seventh Congress did one has only to look back and see how far all lines of business, all private enterprise, public economy, and readjustment have progressed since April 11, 1921. During all that period the Sixty-seventh Congress was in session formulating the policies of the Government and enacting the laws under which both public affairs and private business must be conducted. The proof of the pudding is the eating, and the proof of the wisdom of the Sixty-seventh Congress is in the advancement of the material welfare of this country since it assumed legislative control.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a speech I made to the blind war veterans, together with the introduction of the director, in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SPEECH TO THE BLIND WORLD WAR VETERANS—"HOW A BLIND MAN GOT TO CONGRESS, HOW HE HAS STAYED THERE, AND WHAT HE HAS SEEN THERE."

(By Mr. SCHALL, of Minnesota.)

Mr. Joseph E. Vance, director of the Evergreen School for the Blind, at Baltimore, on the 2d day of March, 1922, introduced Mr. SCHALL as follows:

ADDRESS OF MR. JOSEPH E. VANCE INTRODUCING MR. SCHALL.

I have the honor and pleasure this evening of introducing Congressman THOMAS D. SCHALL, who represents in the House the tenth district of Minnesota, the State from which I hail.

Mr. SCHALL is totally blind, having lost his sight a decade or so ago through an electric shock. I have watched his public career with a great deal of interest for, on the battle ground, I followed closely and minutely his first fight for a seat in Congress. A man of character, ability and brilliancy, self-made and well-made, having earned his own living since a little boy of nine years—a graduate of the school of toil and hard knocks as well as the University of Minnesota, with a degree of good fellowship and democracy as well as A. B. and LL. B. Whatever he is, and I consider him one of the foremost figures of the nation's history to-day, is due to his tenacious will and steadfastness of purpose and courage to fight for the right as he conceives it.

Congressman SCHALL is peculiarly fitted to bring to us to-night a message, not only because he is blind, but because of the phenomenal success he has made of his life, in spite of the seemingly overwhelming handicap in which his environment has placed him. He is a notable example of a man who molds his own environment instead of succumbing to it.

Eight years ago when he first ran for Congress no one of political acumen had the hardihood to dare to think of his success. Without organization, without newspaper support, without money, and little known, single-handed and alone, with the exception of his loyal and brilliant "better three-fourths," as he calls her, who was his guide and adviser, he tackled the job as an Independent Progressive Republican, and he won over both machines of the older parties, strongly entrenched and plentifully nourished with money. His speaking campaign for that election is unequaled, I dare say, anywhere in the world, for number of speeches, endurance, ability, and brilliancy. His clarion voice was heard at every crossroads and hamlet, for he spoke outdoors, having no money to hire halls, and whoever caught the tones of sincerity was impelled to believe, as did Theodore Roosevelt, when he said, "I believe in TOM SCHALL with all my heart."

No one can come in touch with TOM SCHALL, whether they are Members of Congress or ordinary citizens, and hear him speak but will be convinced of his sincerity and honesty of purpose, as the following words from a few of the great and leading souls of the House with whom he has come daily in contact will illustrate.

Former Speaker Champ Clark said, "SCHALL is able and fearless and a cracking good speaker."

Democratic Floor Leader CLAUDE KITCHIN said: "SCHALL is one of the most eloquent and attractive speakers in the House, and enjoys the esteem and confidence of the entire membership, regardless of party."

Hon. James Mann, former Republican floor leader, said of SCHALL: "Masterful, sincere, very eloquent speaker, always listened to with great interest in the House."

Hon. FRANK MONDELL, present Republican floor leader said: "We of the House owe a debt of gratitude to our Colleague SCHALL for the example he has set us of cheerful, helpful, and efficient service. If Mr. SCHALL had two good eyes, he could not be more efficient in the discharge of his duties."

Hon. MARTIN MADDEN, chairman of the great Appropriation Committee, said of Mr. SCHALL: "I have watched his activities with deep interest. I have been charmed with the force with which he has presented questions to the House. I have listened with interest to his speeches from time to time and unhesitatingly pronounce him one of the most forceful speakers it has been my privilege to know. I congratulate the district that sent him here on the wisdom of its choice."

Dr. SIMEON D. FESS, chairman of the Committee on Education and a member of the Rules Committee, says: "Mr. SCHALL's high recognition among his colleagues is not due to a sense of pity, but because his ability, his industry, his devotion to his cause in public service, his constancy on the job, have impressed his personality upon each Member."

I have quoted these men at such length because I want you boys to understand that the future is by no means closed to you, for what one blind man can do another can attempt, and to corroborate my statement that Congressman SCHALL is to-day one of the most able and persuasive orators of Congress, and that in TOM SCHALL, a blind man's voice and sincerity of thought have been a deciding factor in many critical issues of the House.

I could cite many illustrations where Mr. SCHALL, as a Member of the House, has stood for what he believed to be right regardless of those about him. To illustrate his unwavering courage in standing by his convictions and letting the future decide as to the wisdom of his course, I recall one instance only a short time ago, and I am not saying whether at the time I stood with him or not upon the proposition, when by voice and vote he stood alone against the whole Congress.

Again, it was Congressman SCHALL's vote that was the deciding factor in the organization of the war Congress. Though a Republican, Congressman SCHALL reasoned that the Executive and Senate being Democratic, the House should also be Democratic, and courageously, regardless of political consequences to him, cast his vote for the organization of that House by the Democrats, so that the responsibility of our entrance into and conduct of the war about to be entered upon should be unhampered by party differences, and we could function immediately, as he well put it in a speech made at the time.

Had Congressman SCHALL's vote been other than it was, the House might have been held up in its organization for weeks or months, as had been demonstrated through past experiences, where the House has been equally divided. The fact that Congressman SCHALL had the courage and was willing to offer his political career on the altar of his country's immediate need gives only one of the many examples of his service as a Member of Congress.

Another illustration I remember right now and will put it in here. It was Congressman SCHALL, as a member of the powerful Rules Committee of the House, who was a strong factor in denying a rule which would have permitted the Sterling-Graham sedition bill which had passed the Senate to get before the House. Had this measure come before the House, in the feverish, antianarchistic, unnatural, war-bred temper of that body, in the opinion of those qualified to know, it undoubtedly would have passed, and if it had the country would have been chagrined with a law that would have hung men who dared advocate a change in our Government, however essential that change might be to fit the needs of the present time.

Had not Congressman SCHALL cast his vote as he did in the organization of the War Congress, the history of the world undoubtedly would have been different, for had not the House organized immediately instead of a procrastination which would have come had his vote been different, you boys and your companions would not have been upon the battle fields of France as early as you were, and had not the American troops taken up the cudgel the very day they did, against the German entrance into Paris, Paris would have succumbed. And had Paris, the center of transportation and manufacture of munitions, been captured the war would soon have been lost. I cite this illustration to show that it was a blind man, at a critical point in the world history, who turned the tide of world affairs and thereby demonstrated that physical sight has nothing to do with moral intuition and vision.

It will be of interest to you blind veterans of the World War to know that Congressman SCHALL's physical courage is not less than his concentrated moral courage, for in the summer of 1918 he went to France and during July and August he mingled with the boys at the front, sharing their danger and hardship. During his return, on September 5, two or three hundred miles off the coast of Brest, the army transport on which he had taken passage was torpedoed and he thereby knows something of the dangers and trials of the American sailor. He has been in the depths of the ocean in submarine, and to the heights of the heavens by airplane. There's nothing that the seeing can do that he dares not. Thus I present him to you as a "regular fellow," who asks no quarter because of handicap.

I have asked him to tell us something of his early struggles for livelihood and an education, of his ambitions, of his hopes as a boy, how he came to be a candidate for Congress, how he succeeded in obtaining and holding that coveted seat, what part he has taken as a Member of that most distinguished body, and what he conceives, if he desires, to be the most important legislation looking to the stability of our great Republic. In short, I have assigned him the subject, "How a blind man got to Congress and what he sees there." Four times his constituency have elected him to Congress, the last two times by overwhelming vote, and I am certain that the next election will return him almost unanimously, for you only have to know him to be for him. He is preeminently fitted as a statesman, and I predict that the State of Minnesota will in a short time further honor itself by electing him to a seat in the United States Senate.

I have the honor to introduce to you the most distinguished blind man in the world, Congressman THOMAS D. SCHALL.

ADDRESS OF MR. SCHALL.

Mr. SCHALL. A moment's analysis of your ingenious chairman's announcement of the subject upon which I am to speak, How I got to Congress, how I've stayed there, what I have seen there, and what I think, as a Member of that body, should be done looking to the welfare of our country, will reveal the inference that I am to speak upon myself. That task has been made precarious through the eloquent and brilliant though flattering handling of that same subject by the chairman, and I approach it with qualms of an anticlimax, and while speaking to you I am mustering in my mind what I can say to hold fast to what I already have in your opinion, through the charity of your chairman. Understanding how you face life, benumbed by the consciousness of a grim handicap, I yield to the wish of your chairman in the hope that it may be helpful or useful in fortifying your endurance through the long night in Gethsemane.

But beyond my personal experience, I wish to bring to you something that has come to me in the dark, made manifest not by the light of the eye nor by the light of the sun, but by that inward light which is the true guide for us all.

Your chairman says I am a self-made man. It may be a poor job, but it's my own. For 30 years I had the privilege of God's sunlight. Most of you have not had so many years of sight, but you have had enough of sight to understand the world as the seeing man sees it, and you will, therefore, not find yourselves, let us say, in the dilemma of the blind standpat Republican who has never seen and, in all probability, never will, who wanted to find out what the living image of the emblem of his party looked like, and being led to an elephant felt of his ear and remarked that it seemed like a palm leaf. Feeling of his legs he said they felt like a tree. He ran his hands over his side and declared, it resembles the side of a house. He took hold of his tail and remarked that it felt like a rope.

We who have had our sight should be grateful in that we have established the proportions of things as seeing men understand them and are therefore better equipped to compete with the seeing world than the men and women who have never seen the world in its three dimensions.

My father was an educated man, a descendant of one of the early families of Virginia, whose ancestry fought in the revolution and our other wars. Dad served from the first tap of the drum to the end of the Civil War on the side of the Union. Some of his family served with the South. My mother could barely read or write. When I was three years of age father was taken from us, and, because of his improvidence, mother was forced to fall back upon the use of her hands for our livelihood. She was a good seamstress and a good cook. She tried to make our living by sewing, but in those days there were more jobs to be had cooking. Her job took her and me to the back ends of hotels and restaurants, so I got my start in life back where the garbage, tin cans, and the flies and the profanity were thickest, and developed on such fertile soil a hot and belligerent temper which by constant curbing I have gradually learned to pretty well control, but at times, when exasperated, it gets beyond me and I am chagrined to find my language still retains a strong flavor of alley origin. Mother gave me all she had. Because of her lack, there was instilled in me the necessity of an education, laid in me the foundation of right and wrong, and taught me honesty and gratitude and gave me that larger heritage of a firm faith in God. She taught me that if I ever wanted a thing I should put myself in such a position that I could with clear conscience ask God for it. As a small boy, selling newspapers on the streets, if another newsy got upon my corner—which in those days was a definite possession in the law of newsies—I issued a note of warning; then, if he did not conform, I declared war, and always before I tackled the bout I used to fervently pray, "God help me lick him," and He must have helped me, for I have never been licked. If I was I didn't realize it. I have never faced a battle in all my life, either physical or mental, that I did not breathe that prayer, "God help me." When I rose to my feet to-night I said, "God help me tell these lads the thing that will best help them to brace their shoulders to the cross, best strengthen them along the weary way that they must tread alone, that no one but the blind can understand. We are all blind here to-night. This kind of speech under other circumstances would be impossible.

Because we shrink from burdening the sympathy of the seeing with our sorrow we perhaps assume a cheerfulness we are far from feeling. Thus the impression gets about that we are very happy. Because of our general understanding of things, the seeing person often attributes to us a sixth sense, which is really only the more intensive use of the four remaining senses. It is hard for the seeing person to understand our difficulties.

Often when I am invited to a town to speak and am met by a deputation of leading citizens, in trying to get off the train I attempt to put down my cane to see how far it is to the platform. Some kind soul, with the best intentions, will invariably grab my cane and start pulling on it, persistently hanging on though I try to persuade him to let go as it's my only eye, and before I can get it away from him some other well-meaning person may seize me about the body and with noisy grunts of satisfaction of disagreeable duty well performed will lift me and baggage off bodily like a sack of meal to the platform, thus attracting attention entirely unnecessarily and making me and them and everyone else ridiculous, and convincing the observer of the propaganda that a blind man is entirely helpless, which he is under those circumstances, when attacked by a group of such thoroughly determined but well-meaning gentlemen who think they understand a blind man, believing that all they need to meet any situation is eyes. Perhaps, when I get to the hall, one of them will cordially insist on taking my arm, instead of allowing me to take his, whereby I could read his muscles and conjecture what he is about to do in our progress. Brim full of his duties as chairman, he seizes me with masterful kindness and hustles me down the crowded aisle, forgetting that I can not conveniently or gracefully, at the rate of speed he sets, climb over chairs or pews. Not being of the fourth dimension, I come bump up to the door jamb, which is all he has left for my physical passage. And I must equal the kindly spirit with which my discomfiture has been wrought, and smile and say, "Thank you!"

Thus, through hard knocks, as the chairman has indicated, I have learned some things; one of them is to insist, when I go upon these expeditions, that Mrs. Schall be included. She thus saves me much, but sometimes determined officials succeed in relegating her and embarrassing confusion often ensues. Or, if feeling my way along corridor or street, by indirection finding direction out, I go with hand or cane extended, it is a common thing for some kindly intentioned seeing person to take my hand and guide me away from the very object whose contour would give my direction. Or, if I ask where a certain thing is, they rejoin, without thought: "There it is—right there"—which means so much to a man without sight. Or, unthinkingly, they assume that we are lame and halt and deaf, because we are blind.

I remember, when I was visiting a shell-shock hospital in France and was feeling with my fingers the model of an airplane made by one of the soldiers, the woman in charge took it out of my hand and began to explain, as to a child, what I could have discovered much more quickly and accurately by my sense of touch. But we all know that our difficulties arise through lack of understanding rather than of heart, and we appreciate and cherish the good intent, and it is a great consolation to us, even if it has been of no real service, to have felt the kindly impulse that prompted it.

In finding our way about in a strange town or locality, it is so hard to find some one who has imagination enough to give us specific directions. Many people are unaccustomed to use their minds and content themselves with a wave of the hand, saying, "over here," or "over there," which only demonstrates that they have limited their capacity of thought to their eyes.

It is this same sort that are continually putting up to us, when matters of judgment or decisions are in question, their infallible conclusions, always prefacing their proffered judgment with the statement, "now, you can't see," or "if you could see," thus disposing of any contention of yours as of no weight, settling for you immediately with their slight eye judgment a thing which is as obvious to your discernment as it is to them, and upon which you have spent perhaps earnest thought and arrived at conclusions of which it is patent they have not had the slightest conception.

Their assumption of superiority, based entirely upon the fact that they can see, is only equalled by the patience with which the blind endure it, for their observation is very often superficial and is full of discrepancy when compared to the enforced, minute, careful, and retentive observation of the blind, and it is undoubtedly upon this comparison that the sixth-sense propaganda is based, while in reality it is only the comparison of an understanding mind and pair of eyes without attachment.

Ask the seeing person the time. He will pull his watch out and tell you. A moment after ask him again. Five times out of ten, if one of the unattached sort, he will have to look at his watch again. And the fact that you have asked him just a moment before may this time connect him up, and he will photograph the information conveyed to you, so the next moment he will remember; while the blind, in answering such a question, must answer it through the brain, and will remember and thereby develop a keener observation, for they must know what they know.

In the last campaign one of my opponents was reading a speech to a large audience of men, which we had both been invited to address, when I came into the hall. I heard him read that the present Congressman was blind, and that to return him only meant the election of Mrs. Schall to that great office, for she, as the Congressman himself admits, is his eyes. "Why not send a man to Congress, who can look after your interests, instead of electing a woman?" When it came my time to reply I admitted that Mrs. Schall was my eyes, and vouchsafed that I had always claimed, as the chairman has told you, that she is my better three-fourths; but I said that I am now ready, for the sake of argument, to certify that she is 99 per cent of the Congressman, but still, at that, I think I have my opponent licked a mile, for I, at least, am making my own speeches and must do so as your Representative in Congress. Eyes really are not of much value to a constituency where they are used only to lip off words perhaps gathered by other brains. A rich Congressman could easily hire some brilliant secretary to amalgamate for him, where, with overweening dignity, if somewhat monotonously, he could drone to empty seats of Congress, all of which can go into the RECORD, as easily read as if spoken new wrought from mind and heart. What you want in Congress is a soul, a mind, an understanding. Eyes are not so terribly valuable. They can be hired by the week. Pig eyes have been successfully grafted to the human use.

There are two ways to acquire knowledge; one through the sight, the other through the ear. The eye speaks to the senses; the ear speaks to the heart, the feelings. The ennobling difference between one soul and another is their different capacity for feeling.

To the blind man, work is his pleasure. He lives through his mind, and like the used key it must grow brighter. All his other senses are sharpened, and through concentration, all other things being equal, he must excel. The interest of the seeing man is diffused by the passing show. The minds that have accomplished the most in this world have been those most capable of concentration. The blind man's interest in the glitter and show of things is gone. His pleasures and recreations are narrowed down to the product of his brain. His wants, physically, are few. Money, to the blind man, outside of the actual comforts of life, is useless. His great desire is to win the praise of the seeing world, his only ambition to serve mankind and leave a name that his children may honor.

Edison, the greatest inventor of this or any age, is great because he is able to concentrate his mind. And he was able to do this because he was totally deaf. Beethoven composed his greatest symphony after he was totally deaf. The late Joseph Pulitzer, one of the greatest editors and newspaper owners, starting as a poor boy, attained distinction while totally blind. William Scanlin, the manager of one of the greatest charitable institutions in the world, the Light House, in New York, is blind. Dr. Edward D. Campbell, head of the department of chemistry at the University of Michigan, is blind. A former Postmaster General of England was blind. Doctor Babcock, of Chicago, the great heart specialist, is blind. One of the most able brains the United States Senate ever had, Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, is blind.

As a rule the hearing of the blind is most minute, keen, and accurate, for the ear must compensate for the loss of sight. Thus the blind know their friends, by voice, by their step, by some little peculiarity that to the seeing has gone entirely unnoted. A familiar, facetious remark to the blind is, "You don't know what I look like." Strictly speaking, from a physical standpoint, outside of their height or breadth, they may have us on this; that is, we would not know the color of their eyes or their hair, but we would know the color of their vibrations, which would intuitively register in our mind the sort of character. I have had men ask me to tell them what their faces looked like, and have been able to pretty well give them the facial contour and general characteristics of their nature by an examination of their hand. Thus, the handshake, together with the voice, gives us a fair and working idea of the person presented.

Time and again, during my public life, I have intuitively said, "Friend," or "Foe," and have through careful observation of later developments found that my impression was correct. There are so many little variations in the human voice that to the highly sensitive ear is a telltale. Then, too, upon this line, the seeing are at a great disadvantage, because they have trained themselves to pass the inspection of the eye; they dress for the eye. They assume attitudes and characteristics which through practice have come to pass the inspection of the eye. They learn to express or give off no expression through the face, so that the eye can not tell whether they hold a pair of deuces or a full house, but they have had no thought of the inspection of the ear. The voice records the vibrations of the soul, and the soul will not lie, and like a delicate instrument indicates. The seeing have this faculty, yet not having been forced to rely upon it do not use it individually. But when congregated in mass, the eyes being sated and the ears becoming the connecting medium, it unconsciously develops as a group faculty, and it is this judgment that accepts or refuses the actor or speaker on the basis of his truth or falsity. This will explain why the connoisseur or critic of music, of acting, or public speaking will unconsciously close his eyes to get the true impression.

In the practice of law, and I understand that to be the ambition of many of you, you will find that your sensitive ears will give you the key to the winning of many lawsuits, for cases are often lost or won through cross-examination. Therefore, it is a great problem in the mind of the practicing lawyer to know when to cross-examine and especially to know upon what part of the testimony to direct his attack. Time and again you will hear a lawyer remark, "If I hadn't cross-examined that fellow I'd have been all right," or, "I wish I had continued my cross-examination until I made him reveal what I feel sure he was concealing." If in your opinion a witness is telling the truth, it is a pretty good formula to follow to let him alone, except as to straighten some little point that may not be vital. If you are convinced that he has lied, and his lies are vital to the point at issue, you had better go in and take him over the road of cross-examination, and you will find that your keen ear will give you the point in the witness's testimony that is fabrication. For, almost all witnesses, in the main, are telling the truth, and it is only upon those points that may be vital wherein they will attempt to back and fill. Take a given number of people witnessing a happening, their versions, though honest, will not be alike, and an unscrupulous witness may attempt to profit by this well-known fact, and you will be able to more easily put your finger upon the place where he begins to deviate, for the ear will tell you what the eye had failed to disclose; also you will find that your hearing will stand you in good stead in dealing with the seeing lawyer.

Lawyers are very much human. They are a great bunch of bluffers and will bully and tenaciously fight each other, even sometimes becoming personal over their respective clients' claims, while outside of business they may be very good friends. My business in the main since the loss of my sight has been the handling of personal injury claims and has thus brought me in contact with highly paid corporation lawyers in the trial of these cases or their amicable adjustment. If your client has a visible injury, such as an arm or a leg off, where it is impossible to deny to the eye the injury, there is very seldom in their opinion any liability. If a client happens to have an internal injury there will be no injury, and they can prove it by seven or eight of the best doctors, as well as no liability. Of course the above is the general rule, as exceptions prove. But with their opinion being that of absolutely no liability and little or no injury, still they are willing, representing such magnanimous open-hearted and humane corporations, to talk settlement if you will be reasonable. And having prided myself on being reasonable, and afterwards having proved it by doubling the amount in verdict, I have been able to get together and settle many worthy cases with these greater legal lights of my State, and in many of these settlements I have been able to secure more approximately the value in money, as far as that can compensate, of the injury of my client because my hearing was very good and because I have been able to read, in their voice, that they had not reached the limit in their offer and that they would no doubt pay seven instead of five thousand before they would go to court. Thus your accurate hearing, boys, will help, when you get to the practice of law, for with it you will be able to detect the weak point of the seeing opponent.

But to get back to our assigned subject. At 12 I could not read, for I had been too busy earning my living. I could pick out the words on signs or headlines in newspapers when there was to be a circus, a horse race, or a baseball game, or a prize fight, but I could not write. I was always interested in things political. When Blaine ran for President, Dad always having been a Republican, I was; so I marched in the procession, carried a torchlight bigger than myself, and kicked up a hurrah with the rest of the crowd. When the speech was over I was one of the first to scramble onto the platform. Men tried to push me away, little dirty ragamuffin that I was, but great-hearted, democratic Blaine, holding firmly my dirty little hand and looking earnestly in my eager eyes, said, "When I shake hands with the boys of America I am shaking hands with her future great men." "Great men." The words stirred the first germs of ambition. I treasured them in my heart and often pondered them.

I came up, earning my way through common school and high school and university and law school. I blacked shoes, sold newspapers, gathered buffalo bones on the prairies of Minnesota, picked up old iron, sold books, sold clothes, cleaned furnaces, milked cows, hoed potatoes, herded cattle, broke bronchoes, worked in the harvest field, drove oxen on the farm, put in one whole summer raising onions on a piece of rented land, and the profit, after expenses and board were paid, for my whole summer's work amounted to 15 cents—so I understand something of the problems of the farm—cleaned spittoons in a saloon, sawed wood with a bucksaw at 75 cents a cord, ran a hand laundry, an ice-cream stand, worked in a brickyard, did janitor work, sold bath cabinets, played bush-league ball, for which I was well paid, and which gave me my first taste of a gentler life. In 1899 for 18 intercollegiate games of baseball I won the bat with an average of .526, which to any baseball man is a proof of the condition of my sight at that time. I won $25 and a cow in a prize fight at Ortonville, Minn., against a pugilist of some repute.

I also captured some money through prizes won at wrestling. Anything to help me toward the goal for which I was aiming. For the sake of the money, I entered and won prizes in every oratorical contest that came off during my time at the University of Minnesota. Three times I represented my State in interstate oratoricals, winning a third, a second, and a first at these larger contests. Life was one hard, grim struggle for daily bread. I never had time to play as a child or as a lad in school. Even to-day I never feel the chill of twilight, the gray hour when lights begin to gleam and people are hurrying home to their hot dinners, without a homesick feeling, a memory of the days when I had no home and no dinner to go to.

How I used to long for the time when, my education completed, my profession attained, I should be able to take my ease, invite my soul, enter the fellowship of men of attainment, see the world, enjoy the fruits of my toil. At last the time seemed at hand. I was succeeding. Clients had begun to seek me out. I was taking a place and holding it among the lawyers of my State. We had saved enough money with which to buy a home of our own. My office was well stocked with books of law and I was about to form an advantageous law partnership, which would have brought me in contact with clients of means. Just about the time when it seemed I could reach out my hand and take the success I had toiled all my life to attain, like a bolt from the blue came the electric shock that seared out my sight. I wanted to quit, and if it had not been for the love, the tender understanding of my brilliant little classmate and life mate, of me and my passing ordeal, I think I would have quit. Morning after morning when I could sleep, I wakened, as I realize many of you who are young in blindness are doing, opened my eyes, wondering if it was still dark, heard the sounds and felt the atmosphere but saw not the light of day, then, with the terrible rush of consciousness that day would never dawn again for me, the battle had to be fought all over. At each new waking I was overwhelmed anew, shocked anew.

I felt as I have since found the greater part of the unreflecting world to think, that a blind man is useless and only a burden upon the seeing world and that therefore I had a right to wrap the drapery of my couch about me and lie down to pleasant dreams, for the unrestrained independence of my whole life revolted at the bondage. I had always been able to make things go, to drive them to my will and conclusions and ultimate purpose, and now, to be led, to have to wait, to be kept from accomplishment by trivial material fetters, to have to form conclusions received through eyes in whose judgment I had no confidence—to be held of slight consequence by those whom I but a short time ago dominated, physically and mentally, to have the same men who but yesterday hailed me with delight and enthusiasm, avoid me. Sympathy? Yes, but who the hell wants sympathy? We want acknowledgment of merit. It is not how far you can see but the chemistry of sight that counts; it is how far your vision, how sound your judgment, how deep your understanding of the human heart. Not in getting and spending is our merit shown, but the goal we set ourselves, as the instrument of God in its attainment, and irritated by what to me then seemed to be an incurable resentment, I seriously pondered whether it was nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune or to take arms against a sea of troubles and by opposing end them, and I reasoned that I would be doing those dependent upon me a service by ridding them of an insurmountable burden. However, I felt it my duty to be sure there was no hope of sight returning and so began the round of doctors and cures. I went all over the country and all "gave the thing they could not cure a name" and I paid and paid and paid until the reserve of our earnings had been exhausted. I sold my library, borrowed money of friends. The game seemed to me to be up and I pondered feasible means to leave my memory, for the sake of those I loved, untarnished by such an act, when an eminent doctor in Milwaukee examined me and gave me the way. He said, "I can perhaps cure you. I have successfully performed a similar operation where a man was struck by lightning. It will be necessary to go down between the lobes of the brain to do it. If I get through, without injury to the brain, I am confident I can restore your sight. But the chances are strongly against it, perhaps one, two, three out of ten that I will get through safely."

It would, no doubt, seem strange to the seeing, but you who sit there in the darkness, I know, will understand when I tell you that his diagnosis was a great beacon light of hope to me. I had found an honorable way out or the way back to sight. I told the doctor I would think it over. I went back to Minneapolis and held council with my pal and I said to her, "What are we going to do? Shall I sell lead pencils?" and she retorted, "I should say not, Tom. We're going to practice law. I will be your eyes. You have your profession. You can try a lawsuit as well without your sight as you could with it, in a short time, I am sure. People will trust a blind man, if he has the ability, with their business just as quick as a man with sight." We had great confidence. We did not yet know how instinctively the seeing man distrusts a blind man's ability. He gets most of his impressions through his eyes, and can not comprehend how understanding can be arrived at in any other way. The seeing person, as a rule, carries his knowledge in books or notes. The blind person may not be so formidable in a free-for-all scramble, where he can not take advantage of a situation the eye develops, and thus must await the ordered opportunity, but, as that great poet, blind Milton, has well put it, "he also serves who only stands and waits," so it was decided that we would go back and try the practice of law. Secretly I felt a great calm, for I had in reserve two options, one, the return of my sight with which I knew I could succeed; the other, an honorable discharge.

A lawyer friend who had an office lately vacated told me the amount of rent, phones, and stenographer and said to move in and pay when I could. So I went back to the practice of law, broke—worse than broke—in debt, and blind. It was a weary road. It was like learning to walk all over again. I worked along in darkness a good deal harder than when I had my sight. I had to. In fact, a blind man's mind rests only when he sleeps, since he must feel with it and see with it, ever on guard, alert, for the little indirect thing that will guide him to the true conclusion that he must have in order to cope with the seeing. I never realized what a weak flabby thing the seeing brain is. I was normal, perhaps a little above normal, having taken honors in my class. But, like every other seeing person, I had always depended upon my sight, not my memory, and when I had to rely upon my memory I found it was like a muscle that had atrophied from lack of use. I would say to Mrs. Schall when I was preparing a case, "Read that again." And she would read it again, and I would try to gather the essential parts so that I would know them, not merely know where they could be found, but I would have to ask her to read it again, and again, and again, until at last, after stupendous efforts, the flabby old brain tissue strengthened until it could stand alone.

Some of the courts, feeling friendly toward me, appointed me at the State's expense to defend persons charged with crime. Among these were some spectacular cases which I succeeded in winning which brought me other clients of the same sort, and my revenue increased rapidly, so that at the end of the third month I was able to give to my friend who had so kindly staked me my office rent. Confidence began to return, for in the trials of these criminal cases I again secured my hold, learning how to make my way before the court and juries though blind. But there was no future in this criminal practice, and I decided that I must take up some other branch of the law and make myself proficient in that. I realized no moneyed concern would pay good fees to a handicapped lawyer, so therefore I knew that were I to succeed as a lawyer my clients must be of the common folk. Thus God, again, regardless of my ambitions replanted me among the common people, where He meant me to serve. I saw great corporations paying large retainers to our most able lawyers for the defense of personal injury cases, and I said to myself that I shall match the ability and understanding of the law of these men in this one specific branch and take up the fight for the laboring man who would understand me and I him, for we have come the same way. And I laid for and got hold of some personal-injury cases that other lawyers had rejected, and by diligent and constant application to the facts and the law prepared these cases for trial and won them. Other personal-injury cases soon began to come, and my success with juries was extraordinary—securing some of the largest verdicts and settlements in the State. I may not be a profound all-around lawyer, but when it comes to personal-injury law and getting the verdicts I take my hat off to none, and the corporation lawyers of my State I am sure will bear testimony as to my having relieved their corporations of hundreds of thousands of dollars for the benefit of injured employees; therefore you can understand at the outset why I was so very popular with the vested interests and corporations, who did not leave a stone unturned to keep me from Congress.

That is why, outside of the fact that I had not been anointed by the gang, in my first race for Congress the daily newspapers, as your chairman mentioned, never even published my name. One of them on one occasion got so magnanimous as to state that there is also a Progressive running. And to-day, no matter what I do or say, the great press of my State, with the exception of a friendly scribe here and there who occasionally gets something by, despite the policy, is silent, unless they can give a slant to my doings or sayings that they think will hurt me; for they suspect, as your chairman has suggested, that should the common folk of my State become acquainted with me and my work, that the more powerful office of Senator might fall within my jurisdiction; so every effort is exerted and is being exerted since they can not unseat me from where I am, to see to it that I acquire no further leverage by coming into the more powerful office of the Senate of the United States.

But despite the attitude of the press I have steadily grown in the confidence of my constituency. In 1914, over the machine candidates Republican and Democratic, I won only by a plurality of 1,407 votes. As your chairman said, I had no newspaper support, nor organization, all the speeches made in my behalf were made by myself, amounting in number to 237. If I had not had an iron constitution, a chest like a keg, been totally blind and absolutely insane, I never could have done it. Insanity is only a question of majority. But after the votes were counted I became tolerable and with each succeeding election have become more sane until judging by majorities I should have become not only sane but safe and sound.

In 1916, having been a Republican all my life, I tried to file on the Republican ticket, but the secretary of state under orders of the gang refused to allow me to so file, having had the insufferable audacity to offer myself the election before as an Independent Progressive Republican. But despite my nonparty affiliations, my district returned me over the two old machine candidates by a plurality of a little better than 9,000.

In 1918 I was urged by my friends to become a candidate for the United States Senate, and opposition to the senior Senator offered inducement if I would announce myself as a candidate for that high office. I, of course, had no idea of taking such a step, feeling sure that outside of the people of my district whom I had been able to reach by speech I was little known since the papers had kept me and anything I had done carefully repressed. I wondered at the time why a delegation of men whom I knew had vigorously opposed me during my last two elections had come all the way from Minneapolis to my office in Washington and seemed suddenly so friendly. They avowed that I had made good and that they had never understood me before; and they wanted to see that I got a chance to get back into the Republican party where I belonged. I retorted that I would not be allowed to file on the Republican ticket, for the same situation existed now as existed two years ago, and if there was any foundation to the refusal to let me file two years ago it was certainly of the same vital effect to-day. They replied that they could fix it so that the secretary of state would accept my filing. But I insisted that it was my understanding that the supreme court would have thrown me out had I insisted on filing on the Republican ticket, to which they suavely replied that they thought it could all be arranged. I can see now what I could not believe then, that they were determined to keep me from filing for the United State Senate and were making the path so smooth and straight for the regular Republican nomination to Congress in my district that the line of least resistance would naturally lead me to the acceptance of that nomination, and I finally consented to offer my filing, which I found with no little surprise was accepted with alacrity. My millionaire opponent, whom they evidently had not taken into their confidence of manipulation frothed over at the mouth, and believing that he knew something of the attitude of the supreme court, immediately proceeded to have the supreme court erase my name as a Republican candidate. But the best-laid plans of mice and gang candidates gang aft agley, and behold the supreme court decided that I was a Republican, thus giving me the distinction and honor of being the only Republican in the State vouched for as such by the highest lawgiving power of that State.

I never knew who it was defended my cause before the supreme court, but I do know that it was done well and that I became the Republican candidate without open or violent opposition by the gang, for had I been defeated in the primaries for the nomination I would then have been at liberty to run independent for the United States Senate. It was therefore, in the opinion of the gang, of vital necessity in being assured of my not being a candidate for the United States Senate to see to it that I secured that Republican nomination for Congress in the tenth district, which I did almost unanimously.

I was elected by a majority of over 26,000. In 1920 I was returned on the Republican ticket (though a vigorous fight was put up against me by the same gang that were so anxious to see to it that I was a regular Republican two years before) by over 40,000, and I make no doubt that my way will be made smooth for the return to my present seat in Congress this coming election, since the other United States senatorship is up for the decision of the people, for it is no secret that a great host of friends are urging me to make the run. Upon the thought of the possibility of that terrible catastrophe, well-authenticated proffers have been made to me from those who know how to handle conventions of the indorsement to my present seat of the Republican preprimary convention, a shrewd bit of legislation passed by the last State legislature to regain the slipping reins of control back into the hands of the manipulators.

In our State we have a direct primary, and the bosses well knew that they could not get away with its out-and-out repeal, which they would have gladly done and gone back to the good old days of conventions, which produced amenable candidates, though too often mediocre, newspaper-made heroes, headliners, wherein you are told of the wonderful fights they are putting up in State or Nation, when in reality the only struggle that takes place consists in arranging the type and deciding the momentous question of how large it should be—"Safe and sane, a big man for a big job"—you know the sort of stuff; but they carefully refrain from adding, "for big business." They were forced to content themselves with a preconvention, wherein they could name their candidates as the particular choice of the party and have his name go on the ballot of the direct primary as the party's loyal candidate, thus giving such a candidate a decided advantage before the unsuspecting voter, in the direct primary to be held later, because it gives a rallying point for the basis of publicity.

Thus with my friends and my enemies both for me, I anticipate no struggle in securing the Republican nomination in June, but after that, when the doors to the Senate nomination are closed, I make no doubt I shall have an opponent well supplied with campaign funds, who will take the field against me, not in the hope of defeating me, but to have a pretense from which to distribute the maligning, tearing-down propaganda that it is hoped will singe, retard, or stunt the sprouting wings of ambition, for in 1924 another United States senatorship is at stake. But I am not ambitious. I am perfectly well content to stay where I am, for the salary of the United States Senator is no more than I receive in the House. True, if I am of good in the House, I would be twentyfold that service in the Senate, because a Senator is a large animal in Washington, while a mere Congressman is of slight consequence in comparison, and his power for good or evil thereby measured. I am not anxious to get into a state-wide campaign, where the only offset I have to an unfriendly press is my own voice. For what would years of an honest, consistent progressive record in Congress avail could it not be known to the people, while if I stay in my own district it is not so large but what I can by extended effort reach the people through speech and correct the well-fed opposition continually and vigorously at work distorting and undermining.

The plain people of my district believe in me because for eight years I have fought their battles, and they know that I have a standing offer of $1,000, and it has never been challenged, to anyone who can point out in my record one place where I voted against labor or farm, or have failed to champion the cause of the ordinary fellow.

In my present position, as the fellow says, "I'm sitting pretty," not only because of the overwhelming approbation of my course expressed by the voters of my district, but in the House I am ranking Republican member of the Flood Control Committee, one of the regular standing committees of the House. Our present chairman, Congressman Rodenberg of Illinois, will not be a candidate for reelection, therefore I shall be in my fifth term chairman of the Flood Control, if seniority is the rule, and I make no doubt it will be.

I am also a Member of the Rules Committee, the nozzle through which legislation gets before the House. Three times I have been elected to this powerful committee by a majority of the Members of the House. The membership of this committee is most carefully picked since through its deliberations the administration must, to a large measure, shape its policy, and only men who have strong influence back of them, who have been tried and not found wanting, who have developed through years of service a leadership ability and are known to be soundly conservative, are so fortunate as to be elected to this most powerful committee, none of which qualifications secured my membership. But through the providence of circumstance my vote had become a strong factor in the organization of the War Congress. Twice before the House had been so evenly divided, and on these occasions it took weeks and weeks to organize and put it in condition to transact public business. As the time drew near for the Congress to convene the war clouds grew darker and heavier. The grey hordes were overrunning Europe. There was no time to be lost. I went up to New York to consult my friend Theodore Roosevelt. He said to me, "SCHALL, I think the people would resent my advising you. I don't like to suggest what I think you should do, for it is clear to me what a sacrifice it would mean politically, what ostracism, distrust, and disappointment would flow from it, what courage it would require. But I doubt the wisdom of giving the Democrats a chance to make the Republicans scapegoats in this war. They inherited it. They should have the praise or bear the onus. It's just to the administration that he be not interfered with. His movements should be definite and quick, not hindered by party opposition."

The Senate was Democratic, the President Democratic. Should the House go Republican, while it would mean the loaves and fishes, the coveted chairmanships for my friends, my Republican colleagues who had been kind to me, yet with that would go the chance of delay in getting the great war machine in motion.

Selfish and personal interests pointed me to support the Republican candidate. But I felt that they should weigh nothing against my country's necessity. If the Democrats lost the organization of the House, it meant the disruption and overhauling of all the House committees, while if they kept it, the machinery was set, oiled, and ready for immediate action, composed of the administration's own party, men upon whom he should rely for counsel, instead of men of an opposing party, whose policies might clash, and give the spark that in the charged and heated atmosphere would explode the magazine of war against us instead of the enemy. It was no time for petty politics, no time to consider the loaves and fishes. The time of great things was upon us. Whether a man was a Republican or Democrat was of no consequence. Champ Clark was a clean, square, fair-dealing Speaker. He would preside over a House nonpolitical, dealing with war questions.

I had to pray God to help me get upon my feet and raise my voice and do this thing I knew should be done. It was hard. I hated to do it. If I had been able to look into the indignant eyes and accusing faces, and seen the grief, surprise, disappointment, and dislike of my Republican colleagues, I doubt if I could have had the courage to do it. But when the time came, with God's help, I nominated and cast my vote for Champ Clark for Speaker, thus putting the machinery of a Democratic House back of the Democratic President and Senate, and thus, as your chairman has indicated, helping to land our boys at Chateau Thierry in time to save Paris. With the political complexion of my district as it was, I thought at the time it was putting a noose around my neck, but it was a slight thing to offer up a political carcass, when we were about to call to the sacrifice upon the field of battle the best of our youth.

And in the outcome, Chateau Thierry proved I was right. I say this not to boast or vaunt, but because I realize you young men back there in the dark, some of whom were in that great world decisive battle, who have proven your loyalty by your great sacrifice realize that it is right to stand for what you believe, to die for what you believe.

Most of the Republicans in Congress at the time could not construe my action as anything but deep-dyed party disloyalty, for they did not know that I owed nothing to the regular Republican organization of my State. Rising in indignation, they left the space all around me empty, so I sat alone, a thing scorned and apart, the earlier months of that session, except for a few bigger Members who by an occasional word or friendly touch would indicate they understood.

Among these was the one who personally lost most by my vote—that fearless, just, strong, and brilliant leader of men, the most able parliamentarian the House has known, a true friend, a resourceful and relentless opponent, but with a heart of understanding, that knew instantly right from wrong, the Republican candidate for Speaker, Jim Mann.

Another who understood, and had the courage to let me know—and it brought me no little consolation—was that big-souled, big-hearted, big-minded American—Martin Madden, of Illinois. Later man after man came to me and said, "SCHALL, you saw farther sightless than we did with our physical vision. You were right to stand by your country, regardless of party."

To show me that I was right, the following Republican Congress reelected me to the Rules Committee, where the Democrats had placed me in recognition of my action in the organization of the War House; and to further cement the proposition that it pays to stand for what you believe to be right regardless of what the environment of the present indicates to your own best good, the Republican majority again elected me to this coveted committee the following Congress, and I make no doubt that the next Congress, if Republican, will again assign me to this powerful committee. Thus, as a member of the Rules Committee and the chairman of a regular standing committee, the Flood Control, I could not, if I were permitted to choose my committees, place myself in a more advantageous situation. I am therefore quite naturally very content to remain secure in the backing of the voters of my district as a Member of the House, and am not particularly desirous, as your chairman's remarks might have led you to believe, to try for the greater office of United States Senator unless it is in some way pointed out to me by the Divinity of Circumstances that it is my duty as an instrument of that Force to make the attempt; for no one knows better than I the double rocky road over which I would be forced to travel to that end. The gang of the fat boys who from instinct have always fought me will certainly not have their opinion changed through a search of my eight years' record.

A few of the leaders of the lean boys in control of the policies of their great press, whose ultimate radicalism privately adhered to carries them beyond my conception of reform, for I am not a socialist, but whose publicly advocated policies are in the main wholly feasible, and have throughout my record received my hearty indorsement, should publicly be for me if they are sincere in their principles advocated to the people.

But though they know that my labor record is 100 per cent, that I have by voice and vote always battled in the interest of the farm, and have consistently stood for real constructive progressive legislation, for a square deal to all, along the lines they publicly advocate, yet because of socialistic bias are barely lukewarm, "damn me with faint praise," or only use me to help their position. They know that the fat boys have not handled me and can not handle me and they have good reason to believe that they can not.

For they know that I came to Congress without the aid of gang or organization and that I have remained in Congress in spite of the most powerful, selfish opposition. That no one has a 5-cent piece invested in my congressional seat, that no gang, clique, organization, man, or corporation has any strings on me, for no one ever thought it possible for me to get to Congress, in the first place, and so paid no attention to me. After I did get there my opponents were very sure it was a mistake which they could easily rectify in the next election and that I had won through sympathy. But I have not noticed that Congress is an eleemosynary institution and I have never in any way, shape, or form asked a vote upon that consideration, for I can make more money at the practice of law. Thus, through the providence of circumstances, I came into Congress as its most independent Member, as my record will bear out, and so long as I remain in Congress I shall continue that independence with the light that God gives me to see the right, regardless of consequences as foreseen by the petty vision of men, and I believe that if I am to be the instrument for further and higher service in that same Congress that I shall in some way be given the sign, and the way provided for a part in that higher work, as free and independent from selfish control or manipulation as I have been in my present position.

For I can now understand, after years of darkness, that God had in His mysterious way preserved me from the road of materiality. I believe that I am peculiarly fitted to carry out some mission. For I know the common man's burden, having come up with him through all the vicissitudes of life. I have exceptional ability of public speech. The foolish may think this a boast, but I assure you that I am very humble in its assertion and only make it in explanation of why some of the things have happened to me, which may be of service to you, for I realize that such ability is no credit to me, but is only an equipment with which I came into the world. I have a high dome in the roof of my mouth, which serves as a fine sounding board for speech. My jaw is hung on loosely, so that it waggles easily. My education is sufficient with which to get over the message, provided my understanding and intuition is delicate enough to receive it. There is no credit, my friends, personally in the kind of an instrument we are. The bulldog should have no credit for being a bulldog any more than the hunting dog should have credit for having a fine nose. It is only a question of the fitness of the instrument for service designated.

In the first place, I know that without God's guidance and help I never would have succeeded in reaching Congress. I know that when I attempted to turn the natural ability of speech that had been given me into the troughs of personal gain, I was hindered, struck down by a handicap that seemed to me then insurmountable. But when proper humility and a desire to serve had taken the place of arrogance and selfishness, I found myself the champion of the humble folk, the cobbler, carpenter, mechanic, and laborer in general, in factory and on railroad, instead of the wealthy employer or corporation, as had been my ambition, and in their defense I recaptured my young ideals and again understood why the simple garments of Dorcas had outweighed material gain.

For most natures harden, deteriorate under wealth, prosperity, and ease. Mine had been no exception. When material circumstances improve men fail spiritually. Instead of showing higher traits when bodily comforts increase, they degenerate, become greedy, indifferent, hard, and thereby dwarf their soul and limit the possibility of its development.

Man has greater possibilities than he knows; completer realization comes out under trial. It taps his subconscious and superconscious powers. All have latent qualities of strength, unguessed till drawn against. We are not here to be selfishly happy, but rising higher the more bitterly we are tested we reach at last, if we are strong and endure, the heights of unselfishness and nobility.

The removal of the sight throws a determined man back upon his mind or his understanding, and through the mind he will come in contact with his soul, and through its feeling with the breadth of the Infinite, and he will see and hear and understand the things that are denied to mere sight. For his mind reaches into solitude, whence comes meditation, contemplation, insight, and inspiration, for he is so used to adversity that he knows how to bear disappointment and make the best of life, which in its best is disappointment. The plan of the universe in the redemption of us all is adversity. It is not on flowery paths of ease nor in the smile of the world in material prosperity that the soul in man or woman is carved, but on the rough and sharp stone-strewn road, where we are forced to walk with unprotected feet, that we learn life's lessons and blessings, which gives us intuition to draw upon the greater and cleaner thoughts that are among us, but too often not of us.

God, no doubt, and I say this in all simplicity, has some mission for me to perform, as he has for all of us. It may be small or it may be great, but it is in proportion as we have the strength to carry the cross assigned to us. If we have a little, weak, spindly pair of legs we have a little load. If we have a good strong back and a good stout pair of legs we have a load in proportion to our strength. Each of us thinks that ours is the hardest. Even the Son of Mary prayed, "Oh Lord, if possible take this cup from me," but immediately added, through the strength of spirit, "nevertheless, Thy will, not mine, be done."

I stand to-day disciplined by such teachings, as willing and as ready as I can, to take on and do to the best of my ability whatever may seem best under the plan of God in the interest and progress of mankind. I have lost my sight, but through that loss I have gained my soul, and I would rather have the understanding thus acquired than all the eyes in the world. For the inward sight more than compensates for the outward loss. Of course, I would like to see, but I would not trade back on the same basis—for the things of earth are temporal, the soul is eternal.

To those who stand for reform, if they are sincere, my record in Congress should be all that they require, and much more to the point of principles advocated than mere promises.

Thus I stand on No Man's Land between the great press guns of warring factions, each intent on substituting in public office men who will work out the selfish ideas and drive under the reins of a few bosses, either fat or lean. Then, too, I insist on staying in the Republican party, and believe that reform can quicker come about by the people taking control of that party, which they can easily do under the direct primary law in our State if they did not allow manipulators to arraign them against one another, causing them to strike down, in their confusion, their friends. If the fight is between a Progressive and a Reactionary, the powers that be will see to it that one or more other Progressives file, driving a majority into a minority.

Thus you can understand how utterly hopeless a state-wide campaign appears to me, for Minnesota is a very large State and I have no way of reaching the ear of the people but by my voice. If I had lots of time I might be willing to try, but with Congress steadily in session, as has been the case since I have been a Member, such a campaign would be impossible, so the allusion of your chairman to the United States senatorship as ever coming my way seems to me at this time to be far remote.

But who can tell? Perhaps two years from now, when the senior Senator will again be up for election, the people may have come to understand, for they are fast driving in that direction, the unreliability of newspapers in the guidance of their vote except to indicate whom they should vote against, and in that case I ought to have the best of it and may decide to get in, for they will all be after me, which ought to insure my election.

As I told you at the outset of this talk, I am a firm believer in the Divinity that shapes our ends. I believe that we are all instruments in the hands of the Great Intelligence to work out not only our individual advancement, through adversity, sorrow, and pain, but the betterment of our brethren along the way, and that, according to our fitness, God uses us to carry forward His plan.

For history is only the handwriting of God and men and women merely the instruments with which He writes. It has taken centuries through the clumsy instrument of weak mankind for Him to have brought the conditions of the world to where the development of the individual could be accomplished in great numbers. It is only about 150 years ago that God, through the instrumentality of the human being was able to get together enough hardier and nobler souls, upon whose understanding He could impress the idea of a government where the development of the individual would make for the development of the soul.

He gathered here on a land wonderfully prepared and stored for all emergencies, reserved and kept apart for the special purpose, the braver souls of all the world, for fearlessness is an attribute of God and all his teachings are of independence of the soul. For the purpose of the development of that independence he left mankind free to choose between good and evil. It took us nearly 2,000 years with the guidance of the Carpenter's Son to come to the conception of a government for the people, by the people, and of the people.

The patriotic and noble men of the Revolutionary days, simple in faith, simple in life, hence able to catch through their greater intuition the conception of the great purpose for the existence of humanity upon this earth, wrought finer than they knew that inspired instrument, the Constitution of the United States. It may not be perfect, no human work is perfect, but the instruments of humanity through whom God is working out his plan are coming more and more to understand, more and more to strive for perfection, for it is the desire that builds and ever holding fast to that which is proven good, we must work our way out, little by little, step by step, as we enlarge to souls capable of receiving the greater and greater light. The Constitution of the United States is the bulwark of individual liberty, giving scope to initiative and desire, to the development of independence, to the carrying out of God's plan.

This Government, built upon the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, has gone forth to the governments of the world as His lessons spread among mankind. Over forty republics have already followed our example; and in the fulfillment of that God-given purpose the world, through the influence of the United States, will come to understand that through protection of the inalienable rights of the individual, "echoes will roll from soul to soul and grow forever and forever," to the ultimate completion, "Peace on earth, good will towards men."

NOMINATION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT BY THE PEOPLE.

I think that I have perhaps complied with your chairman's request to tell you how I got to Congress and how I have stayed there, and to a limited extent what I have seen there and something of my hopes and ambitions.

But I have not, as I remember his instructions, told you what seems to me to be the great thing to preserve this greatest country in the world, the instrument of God's plan of government for the people, by the people, and of the people. I have always felt from the time my mind was trained enough to grasp the wonderful conception of our form of government a profound reverence for it, and in my early manhood was unable to figure out why it was not functioning as it seemed to me it should, why principles advanced by a party who were successful at the election were not put into effect, why it was that outside of some squabbling over tariff it did not seem to matter if one party or the other were at bat. The same old injustices and flagrant disregard of the people's interests or rights was rampant. The party of Lincoln or the party of Jefferson seemed to amount in the sum total of its administration to the same old thing. I gladly hailed Theodore Roosevelt's leadership in 1912 in his fight for progress, and with aching heart by the manipulation of the powers that be I saw his leadership relegated. I did not then understand, as I now do, what it was in our form of national government that made possible this ruthless trampling of the peoples' wishes; and I could not at that time understand, but I do now, the import of his attempted assassination at Milwaukee of that same year.

When I was in France in 1918, many underground passages having been revealed during the war shake-up, I learned that both Roosevelt and McKinley had been decidedly unpopular as President with all the European nations. Time permits to cite but one striking illustration.

I talked with a Frenchman whose daughter had been engaged to the son of a man within the inner circle of the German Empire and I was astounded at the revelation that in 1912 the Kaiser had given orders that under no circumstances should Theodore Roosevelt ever again be President of the United States. The foreign policy of President Taft was perfectly acceptable. The promised foreign policy of Woodrow Wilson was also satisfactory. All assistance should be given to Wilson, since he seemed the most likely to defeat the terrible Teddy, whose America first policies had more than once thwarted his ambitions and had outwitted him when he was about to seize by force the ports of Venezuela and found that Admiral Dewey and his fleet were there under orders of the President to prevent it and protect inviolate our American Monroe doctrine.

This news greatly shocked and wrenched my complacency in our Government, and I was forced to contemplate how it could be possible for a President of the United States to be in any way bound to another country that might involve the welfare of the Nation that has chosen him its Executive, and I naturally went back in my mind through all the original processes that go to make Presidents.

In my earlier thoughts I had surmised that different conflicting selfish interests had striven to secure their man for this high office, but had felt that they would neutralize each other in a tolerably healthy result. But I had had no idea that selfish foreign interests had been able to take a hand in our conventions for the nomination of our Presidents.

The new light of danger roused me and I began to study the situation, analyzing the history of our Presidents, fitting together this thing and that that before I had not known how to catalogue or explain, and the revelation was borne in upon me that selfish imperialism and the slimy ooze of international commercialism had found the weak place in the dike of personal liberty and from its great pressure was forcing its way through at a rate that threatens the submergence of our institutions.

As I studied further I began to realize that these great national conflicting interests that had formerly neutralized each other, now in spite of laws in restraint of trade unenforced because of stultification of the different arms of the executive, had combined into monster trusts, reaching into every line of commerce and, unsated in their greedy feeding upon the Nation's people and resources, had become international and were a part of the flood adding to the pressure whose purpose is to control our Presidents, lay out their policies, foreign and domestic, appoint their Cabinet, name members of our Supreme Court, who have already in many instances usurped the functions of Congress, thus giving evidence of their power, if made up of the right personnel, to override Congress and even the Executive himself who may have made them, and like Louis XIV declare themselves the State.

To the millions of any nation on earth across the seven seas, this is the promised land. This the land and these the homes we love so well. "Lives there a man with soul so dead, who never to himself has said, this is my own, my native land."

But where virtue is there vice will stain her spotless purity, where liberty reigns there tyranny and sordid treason seek to undermine her stability and trail her fallen emblem in the dust. Foes within and foes without threaten. Foreign jealousies, greed, and the corruption of our trusted servants, vice, social discord are endangering through this rift the dike of our liberty.

But as surely as the sun rises will it shine upon millions and millions of her defenders, upon hearts ready to pour out the last drop of devoted blood that the name of freedom's home may be perpetuated. But it is not in the offering of blood that remedy can be wrought. We must reach the heart and understanding of those willing to give that blood that they may, through their votes, compel their Senators and Congressmen to amend the Constitution, doing away forever with the outworn, obsolete, antiquated convention for the nomination of our Presidents that makes possible through preconvention obligations, promises, and trades, this ever-widening gap. We must in the way ordained by that sacred Constitution, amend it to fit the needs of the present glaring danger and make safe the rule of the people through their chosen representatives by giving to them the power of nomination of their executive officer. Through such nomination they will reach their choice, not the choice of the anointed few. The people's choice will be responsible to them while the choice of international money-maddened industry will be responsible to it. It is only a question of time, if amendment is not had, until the growing unrest of the people will have us so divided in theories of remedy that some strong foreign imperial potentate will rear his throne upon our impotence to control and guide our destiny. Already there is a strong, virulent, steadily growing, never-dying propaganda, because engineered and guided by a definite never-relinquishing patient policy consistently adhered to through all the various ramifications of a mighty Nation, well nourished to that end by great massive fortunes, the interest of which, by specific bequest, is being used for that very purpose. The people have long and patiently been asking why something can not be done. Their voices are becoming more and more petulant and they are fast losing confidence in the form of our Government, for they can not understand why there has grown up in this country a commercial feudalism equal to that of the Middle Ages. Why a class levy tribute from the people to pay enormous fortunes on fictitious values in watered stocks, and through privileged chicanery, gambling, and distorted laws, have acquired untold wealth; why great reveling palaces cast their darkening shadows over hovels of poverty and despair? Why to-day in countless homes there is nothing but weariness and want, nothing but crusts softened by tears? Why writhing, wretched men and women, mournful, deformed children, blighted and hopeless in agony, cry for justice; why millions of crippled bodies, pitiful, unkempt little children, despondent, despairing American citizens, are asking in vain for relief in the most plentiful land in the world; why great combination power controlling mines, mills, forests, fisheries, food products of the world, and the highways of traffic over which they are carried are allowed to strangle everything deserving the name of competition? Why five great packing companies fix the price of every ox and every pound of steak in the United States? Why the great coal combination is allowed to charge three times the value of their product, when everybody knows that coal is produced in the car at the mouth of the mine from $1.75 to $3.25 per ton? Why we have continually presented to us the wonderful spectacle of farm products raised at an actual loss while their price to the consumer is as dear as when a greenback dollar was worth 20 cents?

Why are these combinations allowed to develop schemes for the forcing up of prices and the forcing down of earnings of labor and farm; why is this invisible, irresistible, unconvictible tyrant allowed to appear, in the eyes of the people, greater than the Government, and through the discontent generated increase the socialist idea by the thousand? Why is it that good, sane, sensible, honest business men because of their fear of socialism are forced to support in politics the men controlled by such manipulation, which in the end only means the swallowing up of their business, little or big, the destruction of their country, or the taking of it over by a foreign imperial power, or revolution and anarchy? Why is the poor devil of a farmer to-day unable to pay his taxes on soil the most fertile in the world? Why is it cheaper for him to burn the products of his farm instead of buying coal? Sympathy, brotherly interest, fair dealing, men have to and for one another, but these great monster combinations have nothing to do with these things for they can be run without sentiment.

What was it Theodore Roosevelt meant when he said: "We here in America hold in our hands the hope of the world, the fate of the coming years, and shame and disgrace will be ours if in our eyes the light of high resolve is dimmed and we trail in the dust the golden hopes of men. If we merely build upon this new continent another nation of great but unjustly divided material prosperity we shall have done nothing, and we shall do as little, if we merely pit the greed of envy against the greed of arrogance and thereby destroy the material well-being of us all."

What matter it if children and women do starve and freeze and helpless babes moan out their lives in misery? Let the barons of food and coal through their interests in great combinations add to their millions and increase the inventory of their luxuries.

I heard a great coal baron in Chicago, whose daily expenditure is enormous, on being asked why coal was so high, reply "That he had the coal and if the people wanted it they'd pay what he asked, regardless of what it cost him." These are the kinds of fellows that dictate the nomination of your Presidents.

The people are asking what shall be done? Shall they be answered, nothing? Shall we tell them there is no law for the emporer? But, boys, we have on our statute books, passed by Republican legislatures, laws to handle just that kind of fellows. In response to the peoples' demands, the Sherman Anti-trust Act was passed. The Supreme Court, the majority of whom were appointed by President Taft, after long and laborious study, interpolated into this just law the poisonous word "reasonable," thereby rendering it perfectly harmless.

But the Representatives in Congress in carrying out the demand of the people, followed with the Clayton Act, which fixed up the ravages of the Supreme Court and again made manipulators in restraint of trade criminals under the law. But the Supreme Court were so finicky as to what constituted evidence to convict that the law practically became useless. Meanwhile the years were going by and the gouging of the people continued, and Roosevelt, as President, conceived the idea of forming a Federal Trade Commission by an act of Congress, whose duty it would be to make investigation, and under the law such investigations should be competent as evidence before the court. But Roosevelt's effort along this line met stubborn resistance from the controlling stand-pat element in Congress, so that his dream of bringing these vampires to earth was never realized. Because Roosevelt brought to the people in his campaign of 1912 this pressing need, the first Congress of the Wilson administration put through such an act. After years of investigation the Federal Trade Commission had succeeded in securing convincing evidence of the most inhuman and damning combinations in restraint of trade for the purpose of robbing the people that ever the mind of man conceived. Coal, oil, wool, shoe, packer, and other industries were among the indictments, and I wish I had the time to further enumerate, but for illustration I will use only the packers, and content myself by saying that they are not sinners above all Israel. It was shown they controlled 762 industries besides a great number in which they held less than the majority of the stock. Attorney General Palmer was forced to admit the evidence sufficient to convict, but what happened to this gang of criminals? Why, they were called in and slapped on the wrist and the matter was amicably settled by what is known as the consent decree, whereby the packers gave up ostensibly 10 lines of foodstuff in which they could only own 49 per cent of the stock, and if they wanted to own more they would have to be put to the extreme trouble of organizing another corporation or manipulating their control through banking directors sitting with the directors of the corporation. Thus, after a fight of years, the people have on the statute books a law, and they have in the archives in the Federal Trade Commission the evidence that will bring these criminals to their knees. Then, why in God's name is it not done? To enforce laws you must have one of the arms of the administration, which is a member of the Cabinet, the Attorney General.

Great combinations in restraint of trade or war profiteers would be greatly interested in who the personnel of this office are to be. Those interested in our foreign policy will be greatly concerned in the personnel of the offices of Secretary of State and Secretary of Commerce.

I was a delegate from my State to the Chicago convention, and I use this convention because I know about it. That convention, if the rank and file had had voice, would have nominated either Senator JOHNSON or General Wood, for wherever the rank and file of the party had expressed their choice it was overwhelmingly for one or the other of these two progressive Republicans. The convention at San Francisco was undoubtedly attended by the representative of the same interests at work, though perhaps they were more plentiful at Chicago, it being a foregone conclusion that no Democrat could be elected two years ago because they were irrevocably committed to the League of Nations and the people had been well sounded out by the great interests that make it their business to look after these things.

It does not matter what party name attaches to the convention, the same influences are at work to see to it that the nominee is the man they want, and the people can afterwards fight as hard as they please over which one of the chosen it will be.

I was requested by Senator JOHNSON to second his nomination at that Chicago convention and I know something of its internal workings because of my interest in him.

I have only the highest regard for President Harding. Personally, I am charmed by his gentleness and good-fellowship and in his easy-going way; I think he is a man of great ability and I believe him to be sincere in his attitude upon public questions, but I reserve the right to differ from him very materially twixt his conception and mine. My record in the House is very different, and, in a great part, absolutely opposed to his in the Senate. I have consistently spoken and voted upon the theory that prosperity should begin with the people and work up through, for history indisputably discloses that no reform has ever come about except through the people; his theory has, it has seemed to me, been that prosperity should begin from above and trickle down through.

Therefore when he became the nominee of the Republican convention, not with my vote, for I cast my vote every time for Senator JOHNSON, I could not have consistently supported him from the domestic standpoint, but I felt so deeply the far greater issue of whether we should continue our independence as a nation or be submerged in an entangling international plot, from which I could see nothing but trouble and war in the future, that I, with all the power I had, by voice and vote supported him for the Presidency of the United States, and in 47 speeches I told the common people of my district and elsewhere that I thought it was their duty to cast aside for the purpose of the election their views of domestic affairs and decide forever against entangling alliances with governments who could not and would not understand us, and that I believed that we could be of more service to the world by keeping intact our institutions, ideals, and liberty.

The one big issue was our country's independence, and after that was irrevocably settled, which I thought the election would do, we could then take up our domestic affairs and thrash them out. The Republican platform, engineered through Senator BORAH, in constant touch with Senator JOHNSON, was a garment made to fit Senator JOHNSON and represented his attitude upon international affairs and was straight out against entrance into the league, and declared again for our Nation's independence through the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine and insisted upon our Nation's right to control her internal affairs. President Harding was elected upon that platform by the most overwhelming vote ever given any President because there was no other place between that platform and the Democratic platform for the voter to go. The peoples' mandate was practically unanimous to keep away from entangling alliances.

It was rumored during the convention that there was enough foreign money represented at Chicago to pay off the German indemnity and that undoubtedly the object of such representation was the securing of the possibility of getting us some way, by back or side door, into the League of Nations, but the Republican platform was so clear upon this question that I could not believe it.

Rumor had it that we could easily make its entrance by means of The Hague tribunal, which under the jurisdiction of the league would amount to practically the same thing.

I, therefore, later watched with no little surprise the development of the four-power pact. We entered the war with no desire of gain. England secured a third of the face of the world; Japan got her arms full; France filled her pockets, and Italy overloaded her lap. We got prohibition. Then why should we underwrite the spoils of the war for these nations? I gravely fear for the people of this country the future results of that war alliance. The Republican platform declared again for free tolls through the Panama Canal to our coastwise trade. In 1912 the Republican, Democratic, and Progressive platforms all declared for free tolls to our coastwise trade through this canal and Congress, in response to the unanimous demand of the people, passed such a law practically without opposition. Why was it that a short time afterwards President Wilson came to Congress and asked the repeal of that act, saying, "that if they did not repeal it, he hardly knew how to handle the delicate diplomatic situation that might arise." Coastwise trade is nothing more or less than interstate commerce, and for any nation to tell us that we could not use the Mississippi or the Potomac for trade between our different States would be at once resented by the people of the country. Then why is it not just as much foreign impudence when only the name is different? We own the Panama Canal because Roosevelt came into the President's chair unbound by preconvention, foreign interference.

After a man is President he is in a great deal better shape to contract for the good of his country than before he has secured the nomination, and a system of election that makes possible this dilemma certainly should be corrected at the earliest possible time. Think of it, boys. Had the Sterling-Graham sedition bill, which had already passed the Senate at the instigation of Attorney General Palmer, and which I, as a member of the Rules Committee, had a part in preventing getting before the House, become a law, men could have been hung for daring to advocate a change in our Government. They would have me up to-morrow.

Free speech and an unbridled press is one of the very bulwarks of our Constitution and must be maintained if we are to preserve in this world the rights of the individual. For it is the conflict of opinions that keeps steady the heartbeat of our Nation. It is a peculiar anomaly that it is through this very freedom of speech opportunity is given for anyone, either domestic or foreign, to spread propaganda by press, pulpit, or lecture platform, against our national life and prosperity. But we must meet it by better argument and we will be better prepared to meet it if the jury is all the citizens of the United States, working out their will and conclusions by the exercising of their citizenship in party nominations where at a general election the two schools of thought can fight out their differences for supremacy. For then it would be a matter of education for all the people and as Lincoln well put it, "you can fool some of the people some of the time, all of the people some of the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time."

It was American money and American perseverance and ingenuity that built the Panama Canal. Why is it that we can not to-day even row a canoe through it without paying for it just like any other Nation and why are our people taxed for the benefit of foreign nations? Senator BORAH has tried, without avail so far, to restore this right of the Nation. The nomination of our party candidates by the people would forever do away with foreign intrigues in our internal affairs, except so far as they could influence through propaganda.

Where there is so much talk of ship subsidy it may not be inappropriate to call attention to the fact that during the last part of the Wilson administration a Republican Congress and Senate passed a ship subsidy act, giving 10 per cent discount of duty to foreign goods coming into this country in American bottoms. This is a law to-day, was a law during a considerable part of Wilson's term. It has never been enforced, though it is a similar law to the one that has made Britain's merchant fleet the greatest in the world. Our recently acquired four billion dollar merchant marine, it seems to me, could be well occupied under the operation of this law, without waiting for Congress to take further action at a profit instead of our sustaining a great loss through its deterioration at the docks, and the dream of McKinley and Roosevelt to make us a maritime Nation, furnishing outlet for our surplus products, started upon its fulfillment despite the manipulations of any competing nation in the world.

I have often wondered, for I have never been satisfied with the theory of the newspapers of the assassination of President McKinley, what motive was back of the act. President McKinley, after the Spanish-American War, had outlined and was putting into effect a world-wide trade for the United States. He was in the act of enunciating to the Nation in his speech at Buffalo this plan of his to make us one of the great nations of the world when he was struck down by an assassin's bullet. Between the era of the clipper-built yacht and the time of McKinley we had taken little interest in the development of world trade. McKinley, because of our surplus production, was rightly setting us upon a new era, and his death might have been thought to end such ambitions, but Theodore Roosevelt, then the Vice President of the United States, who had been placed by the powers that be in that office to get rid of him forever from being a candidate for the presidency of the United States, was ushered into that great office unbound and unconnected by preconvention promises and took up the fight where President McKinley had left off, in standing for America first, in enforcing the Monroe doctrine, and in seeing to it that our citizens were respected the world over.

You all remember his ringing declaration to Morocco: We want our American citizen alive or your bandit dead; and we got our American citizen alive, you bet. But Theodore Roosevelt was greater in his administration than President McKinley, for he also took up the fight of the ordinary fellow in our domestic affairs, for through his influence the people of the country again began to realize hope, from the standpoint of the preservation of our personal liberties and economic rights and not as a partisan of any class of people, but for a square deal to all regardless of affluence or poverty.

He inaugurated a new vision of public life, shook the apathy of the cultivated class and the ingrained corruption of party politics; and by the sheer force of a masterful personality, unshackled by preconvention promises, compelled respect for our Nation at home and abroad. He sent a thrill of electric energy throughout our own country which at one time saw in politics only a sordid career without honor or ideals. Like Lincoln, who came into the Executive chair under a great national passion, too big for preconvention interference, he was left free to use his best judgment as the issue presented itself.

Such a policy by Taft or Wilson in Mexican affairs would have settled things. Such a policy by Wilson at the beginning of the World War might have saved this country 125,000 of its youth, untold suffering, and billions of dollars. We must have, if our country is to endure, our Executives free to act as God gives them the light to see their duty when the crisis comes, and not be tied down by any promises to any clique, organization, man, or foreign policy; and you will never be sure of this freedom of action in your Presidents until those Presidents are made responsible to the people and relieved from those obligations which of necessity they must accept to insure their nomination upon any party that has a chance of electing its candidate; and we are asking too much of human ambition to subject it to such temptation, and a Federal law should be had that will put a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, by making it a serious crime, beyond the reach of such bickering, double-crossing, skullduggery, crooked dealing, and offering of money and trading of offices by way of patronage or otherwise, as is the rule in vogue in our national conventions to-day.

Our national convention is beyond the jurisdiction of State government and is without the jurisdiction of Federal Government. They therefore meet upon a strip of No Man's Land over which there is no law or authority and the delegates are free to do anything their conscience will permit them to do. It is no crime in these national conventions to admit you got the money, openly show it, and boast of it. How can the people ever expect real representation of them through bodies of this kind where the desires and wishes of the people are relegated and put to rout through determined selfish interest with unlimited resources at their command and where party platforms are too often made for election only, and too seldom carried out; where men who adopt the profession of political bosses, whose services are for sale as any other profession, manipulate the delegates of their respective States? The majority of these delegates are good American citizens, who feel it a great honor to be elected delegate to these national conventions but who, engaged in the conduct of their own affairs, know little or nothing of the issues at stake and are easily delivered to this candidate or that by the boss who has brought them to the convention, paying their railroad fare, hotel bills, and so forth. They come to these conventions entirely without preparation on the issues there to be decided. To them it is only a holiday or a lark.

Then there are other delegates who come only for the purpose of actual cash or the development of a selfish scheme through which the people will later pay, in one way or another. A delegate to these conventions should be a Government officer, subject to the laws of the country as well as to a law regulating these conventions and who prepares himself at least in some degree to understand the issues which he is to decide. The delegates to a national convention, whatever the party name under which they are gathered, are, in the great majority, merely a bunch of sheep, whose leader, having jumped over a stick, the rest will follow as rapidly as they approach, though the stick has been removed so that the control of these conventions is merely the securing of a good boss from each State, furnish him with plenty of money and he will see to it that the delegates brought in from that State are men that will go in the dirction he indicates, for through a careful study of his men he will know exactly what to do in any instance to bring them into line.

The makers of Presidents were very much scared that the running mate of Theodore Roosevelt in 1912 should become the Republican candidate in 1920, so they set about to thwart him as the choice of the people and General Wood was brought into the race and millions, without General Wood being conscious of it, were spent in his behalf. Not that they wanted or intended to nominate such a character, but through him, in the States where the rank and file had a chance to express their choice, he could be used to offset Senator JOHNSON; thus they would split the choice of the people and with his delegates at Chicago voting for Wood keep Senator JOHNSON from securing the nomination until the chessboard had been manipulated to suit their purposes.

You can not secure reform or permanently mend the breach in the wall of our independence and liberty without fixing this hole in the Constitution. You can form new parties with principles of the highest resolve. But they will avail you naught, for the moment your party becomes big enough to have a chance of electing its candidate, the same sinister influence will creep in and nominate that candidate. I am not speaking against the Republican party or its officers. I am not speaking against the Democratic party or its officers. I am calling attention, as I believe it my duty as a citizen and as a Member of Congress, to a great gap in our system which is bound to wreck us, if it is not mended, just as sure as the months and years go on, and it is high time that somebody should speak.

Four years ago, as I told you, this flagrant weakness in our system was called so vividly to my attention I immediately began the search for a remedy and after persistent study I came to the conclusion that the amendment of the Constitution was the only way in which it could be perfected. I have introduced such an amendment and I find it to be the first amendment so introduced in Congress. Senator JOHNSON has since introduced such a resolution and I believe that Senator NORRIS expects to soon introduce one; thus beyond all doubt this great weakness in our Constitution will become, I believe, in the next campaign, a national issue. It certainly ought to be an issue before the people at the earliest date. My resolution introduced in the last Congress received no consideration by the committee to which it was referred, and that resolution, reintroduced this session, I presume will meet the same fate, but the time is coming and very soon when people understanding the situation will demand its consideration and passage. I have followed up my resolution of constitutional amendment by a bill wherein I incorporated what seems to me, and I have no pride of authorship, but merely want to secure the consensus of the brains of Congress applied to this point, to meet the situation for the control of our nominations and elections of the Presidents of the United States, Vice Presidents, Senators, and Congressmen, under which the people can nominate their Presidents and eliminate Newberryism in Congress, and I offer it as a point of departure or attack.

The amendment provides that the President and Vice President of the United States shall be elected by the direct vote of the people, and that the Congress shall have legislative powers to control Federal elections and the nomination of candidates for elective Federal offices, which includes, of course, the power to regulate party activities, in so far as they ought to be regulated to assure the voters of the parties an honest expression of their will.

The bill, which, as I have already said, will no doubt need the adoption of the amendment to bring it within the constitutional powers of Congress, provides that the Republican and Democratic parties are now recognized as existing political parties; that five hundred or more of the electors of any congressional district may form a new party by filing the proper petition; that when a new party shall have been organized in a majority of the districts of any State it shall, ipso facto, be deemed as organized throughout the State, and when so organized in the 12 or more of the States it shall be deemed to be organized throughout the United States. It provides that every party must elect, by the direct vote of the electors, a congressional district chairman in each congressional district, and a chairman of a senatorial committee in each State, and that these officials shall constitute the senatorial committees in the States. It provides for national committees by making the chairmen of the senatorial committees of all the States, ex officio, members of the national committee. All of these men are public officials amenable to the laws of the United States and directly responsible to the people who elect them. These men, together with the Representatives and Senators in Congress of the several parties, constitute the delegates to national conventions of their respective parties, and national conventions are limited to a promulgation of a party platform and an expression of the opinions of the delegates as to the merits of presidential and vice presidential candidates seeking the party nomination.

The bill provides that all party candidates for elective Federal offices shall be nominated at primaries by the direct vote of the electors, and that candidates not affiliated with parties may file as such after the primary.

One of the most important provisions of the bill is the provision for the creation of a Federal Elections Commission to supervise and execute the law. The commission is to consist, at its organization, of three members, two of whom shall be chosen by the Senators and Representatives of the party having the majority of those offices, and one by the Senators and Representatives of the minority party, and when any new party shall have elected at least one Senator and five Representatives, it may choose an additional member, provided the total membership of the commission is not increased to more than five. The commission is charged with many duties and obligations which are set out in detail in the bill. It will be sufficient to say here that it is the official political representative of the United States in all matters pertaining to Federal elections.

No attempt has been made to hamper or in any way interfere with legitimate party activities. On the contrary, an earnest attempt has been made to keep from such interference. Both the amendment and the bill are drawn with the sole purpose of assuring to the people of the United States a square deal in registering their actual will in all Federal elections. They have never from the formation of the United States had the opportunity of doing so, and will not until an amendment to this end of the Constitution is had and some such a law put upon the statutes for the regulations of nominations and elections.

Every word of the convention proposed under this law must be taken down, transcribed, and printed for free distribution to any citizen of the United States upon request, where he can see every argument made, by whom proposed, and its final result, wherein he can hear what the prospective candidate has to say and what his ideas are should he become President of the United States, thus giving any voter of the United States opportunity to know the exact truth of the proceedings of that convention. Even if the cost of it should amount to a substantial sum it would only be a drop in the bucket to the taxpayers as compared to the ocean of gouging they now endure under the present system.

The vote of the convention upon candidates shall do no more than to classify the choice of the delegates as to first, second, third, and so forth, which will give the voters the benefit of the best opinion of their Congressmen and Senators and of their duly elected delegate from their own congressional district and State. The opinion of Congressmen and Senators of their party ought to be valuable to them, since their work and entire time is given to the study of such questions as may be there presented. The delegate of each congressional district known as congressional district chairman and the delegate elected at large in the State known as chairman of senatorial committee will come into the convention from every part of the United States, fresh from the people, knowing their desires, sentiments, and needs, giving to the convention the elements of understanding necessary to create a platform upon which the people are represented in their particular school of thought and insure the issues thus advanced being protected by practicality in view of our established institutions of government under the Constitution. The delegate from district and State, having been duly elected by the voters of his party in the regular election of their State preceding the convention, will have had time to know something about his duties in the coming convention. The Government will pay his railroad fare and his hotel bills, and give him a reasonable amount of compensation for his time and trouble, which I have set in my bill at $500, and will relieve him from any obligations to selfish interests paying his expenses and time.

Thus, my friends, I have given you in response to your chairman's request what I consider to be the great weapon, not only in our domestic economic robberies but foreign piracy, that is to-day threatening the very foundations of our Government, and the remedy offered it seems to me is absolute if our country is to endure as a representative Government and the people continue to enjoy their inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

REPORT OF THE NEAR EAST RELIEF COMMISSION.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a report of the Near East Relief Commission to Congress, which expired December 31, 1922.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House how lengthy the article is? Why not have it available in the form of congressional documents?

Mr. FISH. There is one copy at the desk. I think it is about 10 pages. This was incorporated under act of Congress and it is a report that must be filed with the Congress. It is typewritten, not printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not have it printed as a document?

Mr. FISH. It is too late to do that; that is the trouble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

REPORT ON THE NEAR EAST RELIEF TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1922.

To the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

SIRS: In accordance with the act of incorporation of Near East Relief, approved by the President August 6, 1919, we submit herewith report for the year ending December 31, 1922, in the form of:

1. Report of the executive committee to the board of trustees for the calendar year 1922, as presented at the annual meeting of the board of trustees February 27, 1923.
2. Treasurer's report for the calendar year 1922.
3. Auditors' report for the calendar year 1922.
4. Report of the general secretary for 1922, as submitted at the annual meeting of the board of trustees February 27, 1923.
5. Committee organization of Near East relief within the United States, giving the names and residences of the officers and members who have served on the board of trustees during the year 1922.

In behalf of the executive committee.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES V. VICKREY,
General Secretary.

NEAR EAST RELIEF REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE TO THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES, HELD ON FEBRUARY 27, 1923.

I.—EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETINGS.

Since the last annual meeting of the board of trustees the executive committee has had 12 regular meetings, on the following dates: January 10, 1922; February 9, 1922; March 20, 1922; April 7, 1922; May 17, 1922; June 8, 1922; September 20, 1922; October 21, 1922; November 21, 1922; December 12, 1922; January 12, 1923; February 2, 1923.

The minutes of these executive committee meetings have been sent regularly for information to all members of the board of trustees, together with accompanying financial statements, cablegrams, and reports from the field, and are herewith submitted to the board as part of the report of the executive committee.

II.—SUBCOMMITTEES.

At the first meeting of the executive committee, January 10, 1922 (or at subsequent meetings), various subcommittees were organized, including finance, personnel, nominations, editorial, justice and good will, loan and industrial relief. Minutes of these subcommittees are likewise submitted herewith and are available for reference and for any detailed information that may not have been incorporated in the minutes of the executive committee.

III.—CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES AND COMMITTEES.

With deep gratitude we note that during the past year there have been no changes occasioned by death, resignation, or other cause in the membership of the board of trustees or committees of Near East Relief.

IV.—METHOD OF TRANSACTING BUSINESS.

To facilitate the work of the executive committee and insure clearness and accuracy in the transaction of business the executive officers have prepared in advance of each regular executive committee meeting a docket, including:

Minutes of previous meeting.
Treasurer's report.
Latest cablegrams and reports from relief areas.
Proposed appropriations.
Proposed votes to be submitted to the committee.

These dockets, containing from 30 to 100 pages of advance information, are sent to each member of the executive committee before the committee meeting in order that the members of the committee may acquaint themselves with the reports and proposed votes before coming to the meeting. In this way every vote taken represents some preliminary consideration on the part of the committee as well as clearly formulated action at the meeting.

Copies of these dockets have been sent to members of the board of trustees in order to keep the board of trustees in as close touch as practicable with the detailed work of the executive committee.

The official dockets for the committee meetings of the year are submitted herewith and are available for examination by any members of the board that may be interested.

V.—MEETINGS OF THE OVERSEAS ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEES.

At each of the overseas administrative centers—Constantinople, Alexandropol, Beirut, and Tabriz—administrative committees are appointed and organized under the direction of the executive committee. These committees consist of leading American residents in these centers, and have regular meetings for the supervision of all Near East Relief work in these areas. The minutes of these regular meetings of the administrative committees are forwarded to New York, duplicated, and bound into the docket of the executive committee for the information of each member of the executive committee preliminary to the committee meetings.

These minutes of the overseas administrative committees, incorporated in the dockets for the executive committee meetings, are submitted herewith as part of the more detailed report of the executive committee.

VI.—AUDITS.

Messrs. Hurdman & Cranstoun, certified public accountants, have continued throughout the year a continuous audit of all accounts in our New York office, and Messrs. Russell & Co., chartered accountants, of London, Cairo, and Constantinople, have rendered a similar service in a continuous audit of accounts overseas.

A summarized report of these audits will be submitted with the treasurer's report. The detailed reports are available for examination of trustees and contributors.

VII.—SUMMARY OF RELIEF OPERATIONS.

A more detailed report of relief operations will be presented by the chairman of the board of trustees, the treasurer, and the general secretary, but as chairman and in behalf of the executive committee I call attention to the total of our relief disbursements for 1922 as $12,280,325, compared with $9,961.27 for 1921, showing an increase of $2,319,418.73 for 1922 over 1921. The receipts for 1922 have been $10,214,070.61, compared with $7,285,247.05 for 1921, an increase of $2,928,823.56 for 1922 over 1921.

Normally we would have expected a decrease of possibly 25 per cent in the disbursements of 1922 as compared with 1921. The increase in relief disbursements has been rendered necessary by the Smyrna fire and subsequent disasters and emergencies incident to the evacuation of the Christian populations from Asia Minor. While the year's operations show an increase rather than the desired decrease in relief operations, we have the satisfaction of knowing that many thousands of lives have been saved for future usefulness because Near East relief workers were on the ground with necessary supplies and ready to give their lives as well as their strength and supplies in order to save the lives of others.

VIII.—THE PRESIDENT'S NEAR EAST EMERGENCY FUND COMMITTEE.

We are under deep indebtedness to the President for his sympathetic cooperation and leadership in appealing to the American public in behalf of the Near East emergency fund, and to Hon. Will H. Hays for his chairmanship of the President's Committee of Sponsors and the Special Coordinating Committee named by the President to direct the appeals in behalf of the American Red Cross and Near East Relief. To Mr. R. J. Cuddihy large credit is due for courageous initiative in providing immediate relief at a time when minutes meant life. The example of personal devotion given by Mr. Hays as chairman of the committee, and by Mr. Cuddihy through the pages of the Literary Digest, has been of inestimable value in challenging chairmen of State committees and editors of publications throughout the United States to render like assistance. Without such voluntary leadership and cooperation, the life-saving service of the Near East Relief would be impossible.

IX.—COOPERATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

The cooperation of Armenian, Greek, Syrian, and Assyrian residents in America has been a large and inspiring factor in the work of the executive committee. The contribution from Armenians and Greeks this year have been even larger than in preceding years, approximately $1,000,000, through our treasury, exclusive of sums sent through other channels.

X.—COOPERATION OF OTHER ORGANIZATIONS.

Near East Relief is dependent upon the cooperation of many other organizations, and one of the inspiring features of the work is the heartiness with which societies and individuals respond to the appeal of suffering.

Churches and Sunday schools continue to be a major source of support. Catholics, Protestants, and Jews give generously. Practically every ecclesiastical organization in America—North, South, East, and West—have passed cordial resolutions of indorsement.

Public and private schools have been large contributors to the relief fund during the past year. Increasingly principals and teachers are recognized in the relief appeal and in the response of the children to that appeal an indispensable factor in the education and character development of children.

Near East Relief is receiving the cooperation of practically all of the great fraternal organizations of the country—lodges, rotary clubs, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and Knights of Columbus; of chambers of commerce, agricultural organizations, labor organizations, and milling associations; of Government departments—State, War, and Navy; of innumerable commercial concerns, who are contributing commodities, free advertising, and other invaluable cooperation; and of newspapers and magazines—secular, religious, and fraternal. Without this cooperation the life-saving achievements of Near East Relief would be impossible. Our indebtedness and the indebtedness of the people of the Near East to all these collaborating agencies is gratefully acknowledged.

Respectfully submitted,

(Signed) EDWIN M. BULKLEY,
Chairman.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

RECEIPTS.

During the year 1922 income from all sources amounted to $10,714,070.61. This amount, added to the balance of $1,894,643.55 carried over from 1921, made available for disbursement during the year $12,608,714.16. Disbursements during 1922 amounted to $12,280,325, leaving a balance on December 31 of $328,389.16.

The income during the past year, mentioned above as $10,714,070.61, was in excess of the income of 1921 by $3,428,823.56. This is accounted for by the fact that, although the contributions for the preceding months were small, they increased during January, February, and March, and continued satisfactory throughout the year. During the latter part of the year a special appeal was made for funds to meet the Smyrna emergency. The total amount specially contributed or otherwise credited to this fund was $579,148.98.

DISBURSEMENTS.

The disbursements during the year exceeded disbursements for 1921 by $2,318,418.73. This excess in spite of a 25 per cent reduction in appropriations is directly attributed to the emergency caused by the Smyrna disaster and the exodus from Anatolia and Eastern Thrace. The Constantinople area shows a considerable overdraft and the Syrian balances are reduced, both due to the tremendous increase in the work of the respective areas in caring for the refugees and transferring the orphans.

The disbursements also exceeded the income for the year by $1,566,254.39, thereby further reducing the reserve which now amounts to $328,389.16. However, it should be remembered that a considerable part of the disbursements was for supplies which are now in our warehouses overseas and will be available for relief work during the coming year. There is well over $1,000,000 in these supplies now in our warehouses overseas.

AUDITS.

There are attached hereto certain exhibits and schedules which explain in detail the condition of the accounts. Exhibits A, B, and C, and schedule A were prepared by Hurdman & Cranstoun, certified public accountants, auditors of our domestic accounts, and are covered by their official statement preceding the exhibits.

Schedules 1, 2, and 3, showing details of sections of work which are not given any space in the very condensed report of Hurdman & Cranstoun, were prepared by our own accountants in order that the board of trustees might have this additional information.

Schedule 2, "Comparison of individual remittance contributions," is of special interest because of the unusual growth in number of items handled. Armenians and Greeks in this country in greater numbers are taking advantage of our facilities and are helping their destitute relatives and friends in the Near East through this department.

Schedule 3, "Statement of the industrial department." In December of 1921 a retail shop was opened in a section of the national office for the sale of Near East Relief industrial products, the work of our orphans overseas. During the year of 1922 the sales in this department amounted to $30,094.85.

Russell & Co., chartered accountants of London, Cairo, and Constantinople, who conduct and supervise throughout the year a continuous audit of all foreign stations, cable as follows:

"In auditing the Near East Relief accounts of the Constantinople and Caucasus areas, we have to report that the relief funds and supplies are economically and efficiently administered both by headquarters and district stations and that an effective system of accounting is in force. Full reports on these areas will follow shortly."

The report when received will be submitted to the executive committee for their approval.

Respectfully submitted.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL SECRETARY OF NEAR EAST RELIEF COVERING THE CALENDAR YEAR JANUARY 1, 1922, TO DECEMBER 31, 1922.

The year has been marked by unforeseen radical changes in the political, racial, and military maps of the Near East.

War has not ceased. Races have been transplanted and more or less interchanged.

Political stability has not been secured.

Peace conferences have failed.

Refugees remain in exile.

Families and communities that were regaining economic self-support and independence have become refugees through the enforced mid-winter evacuation of their ancestral homes.

Thousands of new orphans have been created by the death or loss of parents and relatives in the interchange of populations.

Instead of the anticipated normal decrease of relief work, the demands for relief have been greatly increased, if not multiplied, by the military victories and disasters, devastating fire, and heartless interchange of populations that have characterized the year 1922 in the Near East.

I.—The Smyrna disaster and evacuation of the Christian populations of Anatolia.

The one outstanding event of the year that has most seriously affected our relief operations was the Smyrna disaster with the resultant evacuation of practically the entire Christian population from Turkish nationalist territory.

Before evacuation an effort was made to secure from the nationalist government assurance of safety for the children in our orphanages, but failing to secure such assurance there seemed no alternative but the removal of all Christian orphans from Asia Minor. This has involved a large and unforeseen emergency expenditure for transportation and reestablishment, and will involve yet further expense in providing proper housing and accommodation in their new locations.

Every week seems to bring new evidence that the removal of the orphans was not only inevitable, but that in the end it will prove a blessing in disguise, making possible the earlier development of self-support on the part of the orphans and more satisfactory facilities for industrial education, development, and independence.

Financially, the Smyrna fire, with the accompanying panic and the later evacuation of Christian refugees from Thrace, from the Black Sea coast of Anatolio, and from the Mediterranean ports of Cilicia was far more of a drain upon our treasury than the transfer of the orphans.

Near East relief workers were on the ground at the time of the fire. They immediately provided food supplies from our Constantinople warehouses and cooperated in securing and handling ships that took the panic-stricken, fire-swept refugees to safety.

It has been impossible to secure complete reports of all the relief work done in the confusion that accompanied and followed the Smyrna fire. Near East relief work had been inaugurated among the refugees in Smyrna before the fire. Supplies had been shipped from our warehouses in Constantinople and relief headquarters established on the water front at Smyrna. This Smyrna relief base, with a considerable quantity of supplies, was destroyed in the fire. Other supplies were quickly brought from Constantinople or secured locally.

Hundreds of pages of typewritten reports submitted from different stations, islands, and refugee centers are at hand, but they represent such a rapid interchange of populations and shifting of supplies as to make an accurate summarized report extremely difficult. Such details, however, as that contained in the report from the island of Mitylene, showing that during the period immediately following the fire 2,173,022 rations of bread, flour, and hard-tack, were issued; 33,220 rations of milk issued to babies; 10,550 persons supplied with old clothes and shoes; 11,000 hospital and clinic treatments administered, suggest the magnitude of the work, not only on the island of Mitylene but in Smyrna itself, at Chios, Brusa, Samos, Crete, Salonika, Rodosto, Western Thrace, and numerous other relief and refugee centers.

The Bishop of Smyrna is quoted as saying that within the area of his observation alone he is convinced that the American relief workers were responsible for the saving of at least 200,000 lives. Premier Gonatas, the Armenian patriarch, and other high officials, both in personal interviews and by public pronouncement, have recognized the prompt, self-sacrificing, efficient service of American relief workers in saving many thousands of refugees from death in connection with the Smyrna fire or from starvation during the period of exile and reestablishment that followed the fire.

Later similar service was rendered in the embarkation, feeding, and handling of shiploads of refugees from the Black Sea ports of Samsoun and Ordu and from Mersine in Cilicia. The expense of this service, while in some measure borne by the Greek Government, has none the less made large inroads upon our treasury. We also have a heavy unavoidable emergency obligation for the remainder of the winter, especially in connection with the Armenian refugees, many of whom are stranded on or near the border line of north Syria and elsewhere, and all of whom are both without home and without country.

The one fact that stands out clear in our financial records is that as a result of these various emergencies the disbursements of Near East relief in these areas during the period of the emergency in 1922 are $3,020,631.81 larger than for the corresponding period of the preceding year, while the budget for this period had been fixed at approximately 25 per cent less than the preceding year, making a total net increase in disbursements occasioned by the emergency of $3,475,631.81 over the normal budget.

II.—Resurvey of relief field—Geographical.

1. THE CAUCASUS.

ARMENIAN REFUGEES FROM TURKEY.

While large sections of Near East Relief work have been transplanted distances of from 100 to 500 miles, our largest single unit of relief work is in the Armenian Republic of the Russian Caucasus and has remained undisturbed. It is important to remember that the major portion of relief work being done in this area is among Turkish subjects in Russia. They are Armenian refugees whose ancestors for centuries had resided in Turkish Anatolia, but who in 1915 fled for safety across the Russian border into the Russian Armenian Republic of the present day. They have sacrificed their lands and their homes, and a large percentage of the able-bodied adults have perished from persecution and famine since 1915. There are to-day approximately 1,300,000 Armenians in this area.

"A NATION OF ORPHAN CHILDREN."

Aside from general relief work we now have in this area approximately 25,000 orphans, many, if not most, of whom were born in Turkish Armenia. So far as we know they have no responsible, living relatives upon whom they have any moral or legal claim for support. They are wholly dependent upon American philanthropy and would soon perish or disappear if American relief were withdrawn.

COOPERATION OF GOVERNMENT.

The Russian Soviet Armenian Republic, with serious and economic problems of its own, is giving every possible cooperation in the care and support of these visitors from across the Turkish border. The Soviet Government has placed at the command of Near East Relief, without charge, four large systems of military barracks, containing approximately 250 substantial stone buildings, which could not be reproduced for less than $5,000,000. The Government has also placed at the command of Near East Relief some 36,000 acres of land, rent free, on which to develop agricultural colonies and establish as rapidly as possible self-support for these orphans.

INTRODUCTION OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY.

Near East Relief now has 22 American farm tractors and other American agricultural machinery at work on these farms, producing as largely as possible the food supply for the orphanages. Four expert agriculturists from our American agricultural colleges have been sent to supervise this work and teach better methods of farming.

DOUBLING FARM PRODUCTION.

During the summer of 1922 one tract of 1,000 acres planted with wheat was made to produce double the usual yield per acre, greatly to the astonishment of native farmers. The secret was in deep plowing, made possible by the American tractors, as compared with the surface plowing done by the native oxen. From the standpoint of economics and the introduction of American agricultural implements and supplies, and the peaceful development of trade through these thousands of orphans—future leaders—the investment in relief work would pay many times over. Though the economic development of the country is in no sense a motive for relief work, it may in future years prove a blessing to both America and Russian Armenia by promoting mutually helpful and friendly trade relations.

ORPHANAGE DAIRY FARM.

The Soviet Armenian Government has placed at the command of Near East Relief 16,000 acres of grazing land formerly the property of the sister of the late czar. The fertility of this hay and pasture land is suggested by the fact that one of our workers last spring in less than one hour's time gathered 47 varieties of wild flowers. Our American experts are endeavoring to produce from this 16,000 acres of grazing land the milk, butter, and cheese with which to supply the orphanages and also the little item of 5,000 head of cattle required annually in order to provide meat only twice a week for the children in these orphanages.

SELF-HELP REQUIRED.

The whole policy of the orphanage work in the Caucasus, as elsewhere, is to bring the children as rapidly as possible to self-support and to productive industrial leadership. Every child of sufficient age and strength in the orphanage is required to work at least one half of every day, the other half being devoted to studies and self-development. In one of our buildings 2,000 children may be seen every week day making the clothes, shoes, and, as far as practicable, all the necessary dormitory and orphanage supplies. Naturally, however, children can not or should not be required to earn their entire support, and material assistance from America in gradually diminishing volume will be required for these Armenian orphans in Russian territory for at least a few more years. This is doubly important if we desire to conserve the heavy investment already made in saving their lives and have them go forth as productive citizens, industrial leaders, and ambassadors of friendship, good will, and peace to all men.

10,000 ORPHANS REFUSED ADMISSION.

During the inspection of this work the past summer the official representative of the Government formally requested the Near East Relief management to receive into our orphanages another 10,000 children who were declared to be without protection and in danger of starvation during the coming winter. The committee felt that our present resources did not justify the expense of this additional responsibility though recognizing the seriousness of the need.

GENERAL RELIEF.

We have earnestly endeavored to discontinue all general or adult relief, but the country as a whole is not as yet economically self-supporting. War, famine, and civil strife have removed and made impossible the replacement of an adequate number of oxen with which to cultivate the fields. The ravages of famine and breakdown of transportation systems has at crucial periods deprived the country of the necessary seed grain with which to plant the fields. Supplies of grain which even in normal times is imported from the Volga Basin and other portions of Russia were, of course, cut off by the Volga famine. The importation from Persia was impracticable because Persia demanded gold, which the people did not possess. Added to this, in the summer of 1922 an unprecedented plague of locusts swept the entire Zangezour district as clean as a threshing floor, leaving the people wholly without food just on the eve of their anticipated harvest.

To avoid the recurrence of wholesale starvation Near East Relief was again obliged to give out general relief. This, however, was given out either—

(a) In return for labor employed in constructing roads and rebuilding irrigation ditches, or

(b) In the form of seed grain, with provision for the return of the grain in connection with the next year's harvest. The value of seed grain thus distributed was $61,000.

TWO THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FIVE CARLOADS OF AMERICAN CORN GRITS.

The extent of the feeding operations in the Caucasus may be inferred from the fact that during the past year we shipped from the port of Batoum to Tiflis and Alexandropol a total of 2,565 cars of American corn grits, which if placed end to end would make a railway train something more than 12 miles long. Most of this corn grits was contributed in the form of corn by the American farmers, ground by American mills, almost without expense to Near East Relief, transported freight free to the seaboard by American railroads as a matter of charity, stored temporarily in Government warehouses, thence shipped at low rates on Shipping Board vessels, and finally delivered in the port of Batoum at a total cash expense from relief funds of less than 1 cent per pound of food.

CONSERVATION OF SEED GRAIN.

A considerable portion of this corn grits was given to people as food in exchange for seed grain in order that the seed grain might be safely stored in our warehouses, kept from direct consumption, and issued at the proper time as seed for the season's planting.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

Many of these activities, including the work of the American farm tractors and industrial and orphanage activities, were photographed during the past summer, and may be seen in a more graphic pictorial report in the form of a three-reel motion picture called "Seeing is Believing," or "Uncle America Sees it Through."

ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The administrative work of the Caucasus area has been greatly strengthened during the past year by the organization of an administrative committee to guide the work of the managing director. This committee has frequent meetings, submitting its minutes to the executive committee in New York for approval, and giving close supervision to the various departments of relief administration.

EFFICIENCY SURVEY.

During the past summer a thorough efficiency survey of the Caucasus work was made under the direction of the executive committee. The survey was chiefly for the purpose of studying methods of developing self-support, industrial training, and early financial independence. The result of the survey, embodied in an 86-page report, is available as a supplementary document.

A HALF MILLION LIVES SAVED.

The Catholicos, head of the ancient Armenian Catholic Church, residing at Etchmiadzin; the president of the Armenian Republic, and all other authorities, in deep gratitude declare that at least a half million, if not a full million, of residents in this area would have perished of sheer starvation had it not been for American relief.

This area is in no way seriously affected by nationalist military operations.

2. PERSIA AND MESOPOTAMIA.

In connection with the persecution and deportations of 1915, thousands of Armenians fled for safety from their ancestral homes in Turkish Armenia across the borders into northwest Persia. There they cast their lot with other resident Armenians and with the Nestorian and Chaldean Christians, who for centuries had occupied the plains around Urumia.

The late forced and tragic exodus of these Christians, driven by the Turkish-Kurdish sword from their ancestral homes southward across Persian deserts through Hamadan to seek temporary refuge in camps near Bagdad and their later return through Mesopotamia to Tabriz, where they are now striving for rehabilitation, are known to most readers of church and modern history.

Near East Relief has not the resources to grapple adequately with all the relief problems of this area; but by the maintenance of orphans, industries, and hospitals it is at least saving the lives of the children and aiding the adults to regain self-support, thus helping to preserve the remnant of one of the oldest Christian races known in church history.

This area is not directly affected by nationalist military operations.

The administrative committee in charge of the work among Armenian, Assyrian, and other refugees of northwest Persia and Mesopotamia has been reorganized during the year and Mr. Marion F. Rust, the new managing director, installed. Our work has now been reduced to two main, apparently inevitable lines of relief:

(1) Assistance to the exiled remnant of the ancient Assyrian race, 111,000 of whom were driven from their fertile homelands to the west of Lake Urumia into Mesopotamia in 1915 and 1918. Under slightly improved political conditions they are now permitted in limited numbers and under the severest restrictions to return to their former homes, but without oxen, seed, or other facilities for reestablishing their homes, farms, and vineyards. Such relief as the committee is able to give to adults in this area from the limited appropriation of $20,000 per month is doled out in the form of loans to families seeking to regain their self-support.

(2) The larger portion of the work, however, remains with the children and orphans who have no parents or relatives to whom they can look for support or assistance.

A more detailed report of the work in this area, especially among the scattered Assyrians, has been prepared by Mr. Laird Archer, who recently visited this section as a representative of the executive committee. His report is available for examination as Supplementary Document No. 2.

3. CONSTANTINOPLE AND ANATOLIA.

REORGANIZATION.

Early in the year 1922 an important reorganization of our work in Constantinople and Anatolia was effected for the purpose of securing greater economy and efficiency through consolidation. The offices, garage, warehouse, supply base, industrial department, personal service, and shipping operations were all concentrated into one general headquarters at Ortakeuy, Constantinople, on the Bosphorus. This concentration not only gave greatly increased efficiency but resulted in a saving of at least 25 per cent in cost of operation. A new personnel house on the Bosphorus near general headquarters was also secured, adding materially to the comfort and working efficiency of the American personnel.

PROGRESS IN SELF-SUPPORT.

A large measure of self-support had also been developed both through the industrial department and by contributions from native Armenian, Greek, and other citizens of Constantinople. Local support had been developed to the point where, previous to the recent evacuation, one-half of all relief work done in Constantinople, including the support of 15,000 orphans, was paid for by voluntary contributions from Armenian and Greek residents of Constantinople. This generosity has the greatest significance when one considers the disasters and losses through which these Greeks and Armenians have passed and the other heavy demands that are made upon their benevolence.

DISRUPTION BY MILITARY AND POLITICAL CHANGES.

All of this industrial and other constructive work, however, was disrupted by the military and political changes that began in September, culminating in the occupation of Constantinople by the Turkish nationalists in October and the subsequent evacuation of the Christian minorities from the Constantinople-Anatolia area.

EVACUATION OF ORPHANS FROM ANATOLIA.

The work of evacuation from Harpoot began in August, when local government restrictions became unbearable and 4,000 orphans were started over the mountain passes from Harpoot to northern Syria. Since that time practically all of the orphans of this area have been transferred.

The following typical cablegrams tell the story of evacuation:

All Near East Relief orphanages at Constantinople will be evacuated by Christmas Day. The last to depart will be 1,200 from the Cushman orphanage, embarking December 21. They will spend Christmas on board the ship.

RELIEF TO ADULT REFUGEES.

The service stations established by Near East Relief along the routes to sustain children in their march have inevitably been called upon to save the lives of adults also, who would faint by the roadside without nourishment that these kitchens can provide. The following cablegrams tell the story of countless thousands upon the march:

ATHENS, December 18, 1922.

CONTINUATION OF WORK IN CONSTANTINOPLE AND ANATOLIA.

For the present, however, our headquarters are retained in Constantinople and a skeleton organization maintained in most of the relief centers formerly occupied in Anatolia. This is done, first, for the purpose of protecting valuable American property that would be jeopardized if the last American relief workers were withdrawn; second, there are still straggling remnants of women and children who, not being identified with our institutions, did not leave at the time of the orphanage evacuation; third, especially in the wake of the Greek Army retreat there are large numbers of homeless Turkish women and children who are innocent sufferers from military operations; fourth, there is an almost unprecedented demand for medical aid, taxing the utmost capacity of all hospitals, clinics, doctors, and nurses that we can obtain for the interior stations of Turkish nationalist territory.

4. PALESTINE AND SYRIA.

EVACUATION OF CILICIA.

With the French evacuation of Cilicia in the winter of 1921–22 large numbers of Armenian residents of Cilicia, numbering probably more than 100,000, fearing Turkish vengeance, fled from Cilicia to northern Syria, Smyrna, or other places of supposed safety. This military evacuation of former French occupied territory also involved the removal of Near East Relief orphanages from Marash, Ourfa, Aintab, Diarbekir, and Mardin to Syria. Later, in the fall of 1922, it seemed expedient to remove also the 4,000 orphan children from Harpoot to Constantinople by way of Syria, but after about one-half of these children had reached Constantinople via sea from Beirut, the Greco-Turkish military operations blocked further transfer and left about one-half of the Harpoot orphans in northern Syria. Thus a total of 10,017 Armenian orphans from Anatolia are at least temporarily lodged in Syria and Palestine, in addition to the 1,446 Syrian orphans already established in Jerusalem and Sidon.

NEW HOMES IN PALESTINE.

New homes must be found for several thousand of these orphans. Six hundred of them are temporarily established in St. James's Monastery in Jerusalem. Forty-three 12-year-old boys are organized in a trade school in buildings on a hillside of the town of Nazareth. Others are more or less temporarily domiciled in or near such historic centers as Sidon, Jebail, Ghazir, Nahr Ibrahim, Maameltein, Junieh, Beirut, and Aleppo. Another orphanage will soon be opened in especially constructed buildings at Bethlehem. The exact location of these orphans as of January 1 will be found in a supplementary statement in the appendix.

A more detailed statement and letter from Mr. Bayard Dodge, former director for the Syria-Palestine area, concerning the Syrian orphanage situation is available as a supplementary document herewith submitted.

5. GREECE.

The evacuation of the Christian minorities from Asia Minor has forced us to enter Greece as a new area of Near East Relief operations.

ARMENIAN REFUGEES IN GREECE.

Facing the flames and fury, the distress and suffering of the Smyrna disaster, Greece threw her doors wide open to all who were oppressed. Not only did she receive hundreds of thousands of her own race—though of Turkish birth, Turkish language, and Turkish citizenship—but she received likewise tens of thousands of Armenians who did not have the remotest legal claim upon the hospitality of the Greek nation. These tens of thousands of adult refugees are still sharing with the Greek people the limited, overtaxed resources of the land.

GREEK GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS FOR HOMELESS ARMENIANS.

At a time when the doors of all others nations were closed and barred, Greece not only admitted to her shores the thousands of Armenian orphans of Turkish birth and language formerly sustained by Near East Relief in Anatolia but she gave every possible assistance by requisitioning, rent free, the necessary public buildings and private houses for the accommodation of these exiled, homeless children.

At the present time Near East Relief is supporting, with the cooperation of the Greek Government, orphans, mostly Armenian, in Greece at the following centers:

Corfu:
Kaiser's palace	1,050
Old warehouse	1,400
Old fort	300
Athens:
Zappeion Exposition Hall	900
Royal palace	470
Oropos	1,300
Loutraki	3,000
Edipsos	6,000

INCREASING NUMBER OF ORPHANS.

In spite of all efforts, the number of orphans is inevitably increasing as a result of the heavy loss of life and the separation of families incident to the disasters and forced migrations of the past months. In the loading of a single refugee boat at Ordu our relief workers recently discovered that they had aboard 700 children for whom no parents could be found. Every effort has since been made to discover parents or responsible relatives, but we still have in Constantinople 300 of these 700 children for whom there is no known living relative or guardian. This and similar groups of orphans throughout the Near East are not included in the above totals, but none the less must be given assistance. They are innocent of any crime, and morally are as much entitled to the necessities and comforts of life as are the children of more favored American homes.

GENERAL RELIEF.

The general relief work in Greece is being cared for by the American Red Cross in cooperation with the Greek Government, but as a matter of general information a map, with 13-page typewritten recapitulation, of the location of refugees in the various Greek departments is submitted as a supplementary document.

AN ORPHAN ISLAND.

Nine thousand Armenian orphans, formerly in Constantinople and Anatolia, are at the time of writing this report temporarily housed in summer hotels requisitioned for emergency use by the Greek Government. These hotels, however, must be vacated and restored to their owners before April 1, 1923. Where shall these 9,000 homeless, countryless orphans go?

They are driven out from their native land. The immigration laws of other countries bar the doors. Greece continues her generous hospitality by placing at the command of Near East relief the best available facilities on the island of Syra, central of the Cyclades group, in the Ægean Sea. This island, with Hermoupolis, once the leading seaport of the Ægean, and with widely diversified industries, including agriculture, textiles, iron foundries, and shipbuilding, offers a home and training ground for these children. Buildings, or at least shelter, however, must be provided, and if at all practicable, facilities for workshops and training schools should be added. This island may again become what it was in earlier days—a recognized center from which radiated throughout the Ægean and Near East area the leavening influence of a superior, progressive civilization.

III.—Reapprisal of relief operations, by departments.

1. DEPARTMENT OF GENERAL RELIEF.

EFFORT TO DISCONTINUE ADULT RELIEF.

For more than two years the executive committee has earnestly endeavored to discontinue all general relief, throwing responsibility for adult and general refugee support upon responsible governments or other agencies. The aim has been to confine Near East relief operations to a child-welfare program. Continuous warfare, devastating fires, wholesale famine, and other disasters have, however, blocked our resolutions and forced upon us renewed general refugee relief work of large dimensions. Clearly no American contributor would have had our executive committee turn its back upon the cry of distress that went up from the flames and smoke of burning Smyrna. Certainly every contributor may feel proud to be a shareholder in and patron of the American salvage corps that provided ships, transport, food, and safety for the 400,000 or more who escaped from Smyrna.

CILICIAN REFUGEES.

An equally important though less extensive relief service was forced upon us earlier in the year when, following the French evacuation, 100,000 Armenians from Cilicia fled into northern Syria.

SMYRNA AND ANATOLIAN REFUGEES.

A more widely flung call for the life line came with the precipitate evacuation of Anatolia in connection with the Turkish Government's "permit for all Christians to leave before November 30, 1922."

Our workers had no provision in their budgets for adult relief. They were commissioned only to evacuate the orphans, but with soup kitchens and rest stations established along the line of march for the orphans en route to the sea, what American could refuse a bowl of soup or necessary food for a helpless woman and child likewise fleeing for safety? Untold thousands were thus fed and saved, while others with strength too far gone dropped by the roadside. The able-bodied men who might have helped had either perished in previous disasters or were detained in the Turkish army as men of military age.

PROVISIONING REFUGEE SHIPS.

Perhaps a greater service was rendered in connection with the requisitioning and provisioning of ships and the embarkation and transportation of refugees assembled and waiting deliverance at the Black Sea ports of Anatolia and Mediterranean ports of Cilicia and Syria.

REFUGEES IN NORTHERN SYRIA AND THE BORDERLANDS.

Unfortunately, the demand for refugee relief does not cease with the evacuation from the homeland. At the present time 89,000 Armenian refugees are reported in Aleppo, having been driven out of Anatolia. They do not dare to go back into Turkish territory and they are not permitted to go forward into the Syrian Lebanon, which is under French mandate.

RESUMPTION OF SELF-SUPPORT.

They are industrious, ready for any kind of service, if work is available; but, under existing economic and political conditions, they are helpless. Large numbers are likewise stranded on or near other border lines of the Turkish nationalist territory, driven out from their legal homeland, and forbidden by America, England, France, and other allied nations to establish new homes under the principal allied flags. They are among the most thrifty people in the world. Despite the fact that the refugees are chiefly women, old men, and children, they quickly regain self-support if given the opportunity. Of the 27,000 that reached Beirut, Syria, in 1922, and were established in refugee camps, only 600 are now receiving aid from the relief committee, the remainder having in some way managed to earn their own support in spite of adverse social, racial, and economic environment.

UNFORESEEN EMERGENCIES.

Every effort is being made to reduce general relief to the minimum; but, just as six months ago, no one could foresee the Smyrna disaster, so it is now impossible to tell how soon another eruption may increase the demand for general relief, which we are now trying to eliminate.

Even as this paragraph is being written, a cablegram from Constantinople is laid on our desk, reading:

"Fifteen thousand refugees at Black Sea ports and 25,000 in Constantinople awaiting transportation and permission to enter Greece. Necessary that Near East continue emergency feeding."

More detailed reports concerning circumstances and conditions under which adult relief has been administered are available as supplementary documents. (Document No. 8.)

2. ORPHANAGE AND CHILD WELFARE DEPARTMENT.

The child, the innocent victim of war and racial hatred, the as yet unpoisoned, unprejudiced open mind, the future citizen and arbiter of world destinies, has been and should continue to be the chief beneficiary of American philanthropy as expressed through Near East Relief.

The general character of the child-welfare work has been suggested in the descriptions already given under geographical headings. The total number of full orphans as of December 31, 1922, under the care of Near East Relief, for whom it has been impossible to find responsible relatives or guardians, is 55,883. In addition to this, approximately 60,000 orphans or half orphans are supported under the care of a widowed refugee mother, relative, or other guardian.

INCREASED DEMANDS INEVITABLE.

Unfortunately we face, during the next few months, a period when a slight increase in the number of orphans under our care will be almost unavoidable. The toll of death in connection with the wholesale tragedies of the past months has inevitably left an increased number of fatherless, motherless children, many of whom daily are found or otherwise brought to our orphanage doors; they can not be refused without bringing shame upon our Nation with its known material wealth and reputation for unselfish humanitarian work.

AMBASSADORS OF GOOD WILL.

As has already been noted under the geographical reports, every effort is made to teach industries to the children, to develop as rapidly as possible the largest practicable measure of self-support, to train them for industrial independence and leadership, and introduce them to the larger world as ambassadors of good will, unselfish service, and world peace. Measures that have been and are being inaugurated to this end will be found treated more fully in this report under the heads of Near East Brotherhood, Near East Loan Association, Near East Industries, and International Near East Association.

3. AGRICULTURAL TRAINING.

Reference has already been made in the Caucasus report to the large tract of land allocated to Near East Relief by the Government, the 20 American tractors and other farm machinery operating on this land, and the effort to train a considerable number of the orphans in modern scientific agriculture. Similar successful experiments have been tried in varying degrees and forms in other areas, especially in Harpoot, Marsovan, Sivas, and other orphanages now transplanted into other territory. The purpose is threefold:

(a) To provide food and reduce the net expense of orphanage operation.

(b) To train the students in better methods of agriculture.

(c) To provide an example or standard that neighboring farmers will follow and that will materially increase the productiveness and economic resources of the entire country.

Since the transplanting of the Anatolian orphans to other areas the Greek Government has undertaken to collaborate with Near East Relief by securing lands in Macedonia where orphanages can be located and agricultural training provided. (See Document No. 11.)

4. AGRICULTURAL COLONIES.

No opportunity is lost to get refugees away from the large cities and concentration camps onto any available farm lands where there may be opportunity of attaining self-support. One highly successful agricultural colony of this type was established at Rodosto in eastern Thrace on the Sea of Marmora, manned with Armenians from the refugee camps of Constantinople and equipped with agricultural implements and seed provided by Near East Relief. The first year was decidedly successful, and the year 1922 would have seen the full repayment of all capital invested in the colony had not military reverses thrown eastern Thrace into the military possession of the Turks, with consequent confiscation of the 1922 crops.

Tentative plans for other forms of colonization "when adequate lands and guaranties are available" are submitted in supplementary Document No. 10.

A study is being made of the various proposals with reference to the colonization of refugees and tentative plans drafted, subject to ability to secure suitable lands with adequate guaranties.

5. INDUSTRIAL RELIEF.

Relief is never given to an adult free of charge if there is any possibility of providing any kind of work that can be done in payment for the relief. It is also gratifying to note that as a rule the refugees are eager to get to work, even at a mere living wage. In Constantinople, Beirut, and all the larger centers industries have been established for women under American supervision, and the products of their industry, whether in the form of rugs or needlework, are sold to help meet the cost of relief supplies. Most of the work done by men is local in character, and contributes toward repairs of buildings, roads, and orphanage equipment. The larger part of the work done by the women is absorbed locally in clothing for the children, equipment for hospitals and orphanages, though considerable quantities of needlework are sold through the Near East Relief shops in the local markets of Constantinople, Beirut, and other eastern cities. This needlework has also found a ready market through the offices of Near East Relief in America, the cash sales to date in America having amounted to $32,094.85, while a larger amount is now in stock in process of sale.

6. NEAR EAST INDUSTRIES.

At present Near East Relief has at least 50,000 pairs of hands in various orphanages, exclusive of the far larger number of more skilled workers among the refugees, awaiting simple equipment, raw material, and intelligent direction into channels of useful industry and self-support. It is expected that in connection with most of the orphanages at least one-half of the time will be devoted to industrial training in one form or another. These industries should be organized with a practical view to the training of the child and to the development of those products that will have a ready, profitable market.

While there must be a considerable amount of theoretical training that can have no immediate commercial return, experience shows that many articles can be made with profit by the orphans, with the possible assistance of older refugee instructors who are in urgent need of employment.

SALES DEPARTMENT.

A sales department for Near East industries can be developed in the United States and by Near East associations in other countries that will sell these articles at a considerable margin of profit, thereby helping materially to finance the other industrial and educational work of the orphanages. This kind of work finds an especially ready sale at good prices around the Christmas season, when almost unlimited quantities can be disposed of by the right kind of advance organization.

COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRIAL RELIEF.

The fact that more than $60,000 worth of laces, rugs, and other industrial products have already reached America from relief centers and that we have in our orphanages thousands of children capable of contributing toward self-support and urgently needed industrial training has led the executive committee to appoint a special committee on industrial relief and "Near East industries." This committee consists of Hon. Henry Morgenthau, Cleveland E. Dodge, Harold A. Hatch, James M. Speers, with Barclay Acheson as secretary, and Messrs. M. Karagheusian, Vartan Malcolm, and K. Thomas Pushman as advisors.

7. MEDICAL RELIEF.

A considerable medical staff and equipment is required for ministry in Near East Relief orphanages, exclusive of general medical work. In the orphanages the medical work is likewise more or less interwoven with other orphanage activities in a way that makes clear statistical differentiation difficult. Moreover, statistical summaries and reports for the year ending December 31, 1922, have not yet reached us from the remote regions of the Caucasus and from the interior stations of Anatolia, with which communication is at best intermittent.

Including hospitals connected with the orphanages, Near East Relief now has and is operating 38 hospitals. All the hospitals in the interior of Anatolia, with the exception of Harpoot, have been continued since the evacuation of the Christian populations. Inasmuch as many of the best native doctors and nurses left with the Christian population, the need for medical ministry to the remaining populations is probably greater than ever, the hospitals being taxed to their full capacity.

In Greece, the medical work of Near East Relief is under the direction of the American Women's Hospitals, which provides personnel and supports the medical work under the supervision of Dr. Mabel Elliott. During the year under revision the American Women's Hospitals has also financed and directed the medical work in the Caucasus.

In Beirut, Syria, as well as in Constantinople, well-equipped American hospitals provide hospital facilities, leaving Near East Relief responsible only for the medical work of the orphanages and clinics connected with the refugee camps.

The magnitude of medical work among children may be inferred by the fact that in the Caucasus alone we have segregated in one place 3,000 children suffering from trachoma. There are similar segregations of children suffering from tuberculosis, scabies, and various other more or less contagious diseases.

NEAR EAST RELIEF LABORATORIES.

As a rule our doctors find themselves far removed from medical supplies and modern laboratory facilities. In the Caucasus this has resulted in the establishment of a bacteriological laboratory that has provided vaccine, serums, and other laboratory products for the trans-Caucasian Republics. The detailed report of this laboratory, as well as a more detailed and extended report of the early medical organization of Near East Relief, are submitted or available as supplementary documents. (Documents No. 12 and 13.)

IV. Organization at the home base.

The ability of Near East Relief to respond promptly to the Smyrna emergency and other calls during the past year and to meet a total budget nearly $3,000,000 larger than the preceding year is largely due to the devoted and self-sacrificing services of volunteer committees, speakers, and workers in every State in the Union. It would be impracticable to name within the limits of this report the thousands of committee members and workers who have had a vital part in the rescue and saving of the 115,000 children and the much larger number of adults in the Near East during the past year.

The following chairmen and treasurers, however, of committees in various States may be mentioned as but typical of the larger number who have served with them on committees:

This includes 10 governors of States, 4 educators, 2 leading merchants, 3 bankers, 4 prominent lawyers, 4 judges, 2 bishops, and 6 outstanding business leaders.

COUNTY COMMITTEES.

In addition to the State chairmen and treasurers referred to above, Near East Relief has volunteer committees in 980 counties, with 1,088 other counties represented on the State committees by a county chairman, making a total of 2,068 counties organized or represented by county workers.

COMMUNITY CAMPAIGNS.

Under the direction of these State and county committees local community campaigns are conducted. In these community efforts chambers of commerce, banks, business men's clubs, lodges, industries, and practically every institution has given its assistance. The railroads of the country have saved us thousands of dollars by affording free transportation for carload lots of grain and clothing.

COOPERATION OF CHURCHES.

Conspicuous mention should be made of the churches for their unfailing and substantial support. The pulpits of every denomination have been opened to our speakers. Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish congregations have not only contributed with unstinted liberality but quite often have furnished volunteer committees of workers for a community effort.

NATIONAL WOMEN'S COMMITTEE.

The organized women of America also deserve great credit for what they have done. Last Easter when it was found necessary on account of insufficient resources to make a drastic cut in appropriations, threatening the death of thousands of children, the women of the country undertook to raise the needed funds, and largely through their efforts the necessity of turning out these thousands of orphans was averted. Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker is chairman of our National Women's Committee.

PUBLIC SCHOOL COOPERATION.

The cooperation of principals and teachers in public schools has doubtless been instrumental in saving the lives of hundreds of children in the Near East, while at the same time inculcating higher ideals of service and international brotherhood in the lives of many thousands of boys and girls in America. In New York City alone 316 public schools have cooperated.

SPEAKERS' DEPARTMENT.

The national speakers' department, working through State bureaus, has commanded the cooperation of a strong corps of speakers in practically every State. These have included returned relief workers from the Near East, most of whom continue loyally to serve the work which gripped their lives during their period of resident service in the Near East. Pastors, lawyers, teachers, national officers of women's clubs, and fraternal organizations have given themselves freely and effectively to the presentation of the message on the platform when once they have fully grasped and appreciated the need.

COOPERATION OF THE PRESS.

The $10,000,000 response from the general public during the past year would have been utterly impossible had not newspapers and magazines, secular and religious, cooperated by presenting to the public information concerning the need. An up-to-date photographic department, with perhaps one of the best collections of photographs of the Near East to be found anywhere in the world, has been one of the forms of effective service in presenting conditions graphically to the public through the cooperating press.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

The effectiveness of the administration overseas is in some measure due to the organization and effective cooperation of the foreign department of the New York office.

In the personal service division during the year there have been handled 3,171 "searchers" of refugees or others seeking relatives in America, and in 31 per cent of these cases we have been able to secure sums of money for transmission to the refugees with which to meet their needs or in many instances pay their expenses to America. The department has made out over 500 affidavits for relatives and handled over $100,000 of traveling expense, involving the writing of over 1,500 letters and 1,300 personal interviews.

The personal service department, with the cooperation of our orphanage managers overseas, has made a complete card record of all the orphans, with special reference to their nearest known relative, and wherever a child in an orphanage is found to have a relative or a friend in America that friend or relative is at once asked to assume financial responsibility for the child.

Our foreign shipments during the past year have amounted to 52,000,000 pounds, or approximately 26,000 tons, shipped as per the following schedule. This, of course, includes only commodities shipped from America and does not include the large food purchases made locally in Anatolia and other areas, where transportation problems make local purchases for orphanage purposes more advantageous than importation.

OVERSEAS PERSONNEL.

At the present time there are 255 American personnel on the field. During the year 1922 there were enlisted 56 new personnel, and during this same period 83 have returned from the field. Of the returned workers, 14 are being used as speakers by the national speakers' department and an indefinite number, scattered throughout the United States, are being used separately by the State directors.

Relief workers on the field, divided into lists of doctors, nurses, and relief workers, are distributed as follows in the different areas:

THE PRICE OF SERVICE.

The supreme price of service has again been paid this year by Near East Relief workers, who count not their lives dear unto themselves. To the ever-lengthening list of martyrs is this year added the names of Miss Annie Allen, who died of typhus while en route in midwinter on an urgent mission from and in behalf of our orphanage work at Harpoot to the Nationalist Government at Angora; Lester James Wright, who was shot dead from ambush, and his traveling companion, Enoch R. Applegate, wounded, as they were nearing Aleppo in connection with their relief work; and George St. John Williams, who, in directing a convoy of orphans from Sivas and Marsovan over the snow-covered roads and mountain passes to Samsoun, was laid low by rain, snow, exposure, cold, pneumonia, death. These three workers could all have saved their lives had they not placed service for others above personal interest.

There are dozens of other Near East Relief workers to-day who are equally willing to give their lives for the saving of these children and the reclaiming of the Near East. The price that has been and is being paid by these American comrades overseas puts to shame the biggest financial offering of the American public, but they do it gladly, for they have the thrill and the joy of service, and there is not one of them who would trade jobs with their friends in America who may have larger material and social advantages but not so large a field of service.

V. International cooperation.

THE BATTLE GROUND OF THE CENTURIES.

For 40 centuries the Near East has been the battle ground of the nations, and to-day the world has nothing but ruins and bitterness to show for centuries of strife. There will be no permanent world peace until good will and stable government are secured in the Near East.

THE INTERNATIONAL NEAR EAST ASSOCIATION.

Marked progress has been made during the past year in the organization and development of the International Near East Association, the object of which is "to promote cooperation and increased efficiency on the part of all organizations and individuals who are seeking to relieve suffering, provide for the care of orphans, or otherwise promote the social, economic, industrial, and educational development of the Near East."

ASIA AND EUROPE JOIN WITH AMERICA.

Near East associations or kindred societies have now been formed in 10 countries and are cooperating in an effort to solve by humanitarian relief work and peaceful methods the problems of the Near East. Asia joins with Europe and America in this endeavor. The Japanese committee, with Baron Shibasawa as active chairman, has during the past year sent to the Near East for relief more than $10,000. China and Korea have sent substantial contributions. Australia has assumed the entire support of one of the largest orphanages in Syria, to be known henceforth as the Australasian Orphanage, and the contributions reported thus far during the year from Australia amount to approximately $100,000, with regular monthly shipments of food from Australia's surplus food supplies via the Commonwealth Line of steamers direct each month from Sidney to Port Said, thence to Syria. The Philippines, with a committee headed by Governor General Wood, a member of our own board of trustees, has contributed $18,000. Hawaii renews her annual gift of approximately $26,000. Sweden and Denmark have accepted full financial support for an orphanage in Syria. Switzerland and other nations of Europe are cooperating, while England, Canada, and the British dominions continue their substantial contributions and ministry.

A VOLUNTARY CONSTRUCTIVE PEACE-TIME PROGRAM NOW OR DESTRUCTIVE WARFARE LATER.

During the Great War 23 nations, under dint of necessity and in self-defense, united in a program of destructive warfare with the Near East as one of the chief areas of conflict. They poured forth in that conflict the lifeblood of at least 8,000,000 men and hundreds of billions of treasure. Unless peace, good will, and sound government can be established in the Near East, this conflict will be renewed. But if the so-called Christian nations have enough prudence to get together voluntarily in times of peace on an unselfish constructive program of education, industrial training, and good will, we may prevent the otherwise inevitable expenditure of other millions of lives and billions of treasure in future warfare, with its vicious circle of renewed bitterness and strife.

That which battleships and battalions have failed to accomplish and can never accomplish the magic power of love, unselfish service, and world brotherhood may yet achieve.

Respectfully submitted. CHARLES V. VICKREY,
General Secretary.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 425.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 425) authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals of the several judicial districts of the United States within certain limits.

Be it enacted, etc., That the salaries of the United States attorneys and United States marshals for the several judicial districts of the United States shall be fixed by the Attorney General, beginning July 1, 1923, at rates not less than $3,000 nor more than $7,500 per annum for attorneys and at rates not less than $3,000 nor more than $6,500 per annum for marshals, the amount to be based in each instance upon the business transacted during the four years ending June 30, 1923: Provided, That the salaries of the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, the northern district of Illinois, and the District of Columbia may be fixed at rates not exceeding $10,000 per annum for each of said districts.

The Attorney General may increase or decrease any of the salaries fixed, as aforesaid, within the limits prescribed in the foregoing section if, upon investigation, he finds that there has been a material increase or decrease in the volume of business transacted: Provided, That no salary fixed under the provisions of this act shall be changed more than once in any four years.

All laws or parts of laws, in so far as they are in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the salaries of the United States attorneys and United States marshals for the several judicial districts of the United States shall be fixed by the Attorney General, beginning July 1, 1923, at rates not less than $3,000 nor more than $7,500 per annum for attorneys and at rates not less than $3,000 nor more than $6,500 per annum for marshals, the amount to be based in each instance upon the business transacted during the four years ending June 30, 1923: Provided, That the salaries of the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, the northern district of Illinois, and the District of Columbia may be fixed at rates not exceeding $10,000 per annum for each of said districts.

All laws or parts of laws, in so far as they are in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there a second demanded?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I demand a second.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] will take their places as tellers. Those who favor ordering a second will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 137, noes 1.

A second was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas has 20 minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, some 28 years ago a statute was passed fixing the salaries of district attorneys and marshals for the various districts of the United States. Since then there has been practically no change in that statute. In only a few districts has there been any change. Of course, as new districts have been created statutes have been passed fixing the pay in those districts. Attempts have been made to readjust salaries by special bills designed for that purpose, but there has seldom been any possibility of securing legislation along that line.

Some years ago—I think it was in 1919—a bill was passed giving to the Attorney General the power to fix the salaries of the clerks of court. It is believed by the committee that this way of dealing with this matter is a good deal better, more economical, and fairer.

Here is the situation: When you undertake to change by statute the salaries to be paid these officers it becomes a matter of log rolling, and besides it is impossible for any standing committee of Congress to devote the necessary time to determine definitely what the salary should be in each instance. In the end Congress must depend on the Attorney General for the information upon which to base them.

We are following, as I have just suggested, a precedent that has been established by Congress by authorizing the Attorney General to fix the salaries of clerks. We have pursued this same policy in other lines. The Attorney General now has the power to fix the salaries of the different assistant attorneys and the deputy marshals.

In the city of New York there are some forty assistant attorneys. The salaries of those are fixed by the Attorney General. Of course, we have a large number of deputy marshals. Their salaries are also fixed by the Attorney General. It is also a common practice to fix salaries in that way in other departments. Many of the employees have their salaries fixed by the heads of the various departments. Whenever we make a lump-sum appropriation for carrying out a policy the head of the department fixes the salaries.

To make it certain that there is not to be an excessively high salary the Senate put a limit on the amount that can be allowed. It is not to be less than $3,000 for either the marshal or the district attorney, but it must not exceed $7,500 for the attorneys nor more than $6,500 for the marshals except in three cities. In the city of New York, under existing law, we pay $10,000 to its district attorney. The same sum is paid at Chicago, because of the large number of men employed and the vast amount of work done at those two places. There is one other where the attorney is to receive $10,000; that is for the District of Columbia. Eight attorneys are employed in this district at the present time. The work that is being done in this district is unusually large. The war has brought to this district a great deal of work, and it is believed that the salary of the district attorney here ought to be $10,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. What authority does it give the Attorney General to reduce the salary of a marshal that is now under appointment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The Attorney General can reduce as well as increase salaries under this bill, but it is not believed that this will make any very large charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. SNYDER. What I mean is this: Does it give the Attorney General the right now to take a marshal who is already appointed and reduce his salary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It might, if his salary was disproportionate to the salaries of other marshals.

Mr. SNYDER. The bill does give him the power to reduce the salary that a marshal is now drawing?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; to reduce and to increase.

Mr. SNYDER. It also gives him the right to raise it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Only once in four years.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, the policy embraced in this bill is identical in substance with the policy embraced in the bill of 1919 with respect to the salaries of clerks.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I also understand that the act of 1919 has been very conservatively applied.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has been.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have heard the total increase under that act is only some $27,000 or $30,000.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. A little over $20,000.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And it is estimated, I believe, that this measure would result in an increase of something less than $50,000?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is very important that some increases should be made, because some cities have grown immensely, and the business with it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is a fact, is it not, that in a great many cases the salaries that now obtain have been in effect since the early nineties; that there has been an enormous increase in the volume of business?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Except in a few instances, the salaries were fixed many years ago, since when the business has greatly increased.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Did I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to say that the Attorney General now has authority to fix the salaries of all deputy United States marshals?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My understanding is that he has that power within certain limits fixed by statute.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. In other words, he has some latitude but not full power?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and the same power with reference to assistant district attorneys.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. That would apply to the first assistant and chief deputy marshal.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. How much does the bill increase the salaries here in the District of Columbia?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think some $2,000; it does raise it some.

Mr. HUSTED. I think that is a reasonable increase; I think the salary should be increased. The business of the district attorney here in Washington does not amount to as much as the statistics would lead one to believe, because in many cases which are instituted in the Department of Justice the papers are all prepared by the department and the case is actually carried on by the Department of Justice.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is a large amount of business here.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. HILL. Is it not a fact that within the past 20 years the business in the United States attorneys' offices has increased ten times, and they are getting the same salary they have had for years?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know just what the per cent of increase has been. It has increased greatly.

Mr. HILL. In the district of Maryland it is ten times beyond what it originally was.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. Has there been a schedule prepared showing the proposed increase and decrease of salaries of the United States marshals?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Not by the committee or the department, so far as I know.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. How about the United States attorneys and marshals in the outlying districts like Alaska; is it to be based on the business of 1923, or is it a flat rate?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is to be based on the business for four years. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman from Minnesota consumed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, listening to the discussion here reminds me of one of my early experiences as a lawyer. We were trying a case in a justice's court. The fact of contributory negligence, we felt, had been fully established. When the argument was concluded the jury retired to a room near by. Everybody could hear what was said. The question of contributory negligence was never mentioned. One juror moved the election of a foreman and another said, "Well, fellers, how much do you reckon we ought to give him?" We are discussing here a legislative proposition that reaches to the fundamentals of our system of government All that seems to be considered is whether the salaries being paid are high enough, the inference being that if they are not, we should shirk a constitutional duty and surrender a congressional power and discretion to one of the executive officers.

The questions asked during the interruptions seem to be a reflection from letters received from the officer to be affected.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield? I want him to know that the questions I asked were not based on any such assumption whatever, as I have had no letter from anyone.

Mr. FOSTER. And you might exclude me also.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If it is going to cause any trouble, I will make a blanket exclusion for you all. [Laughter.] Now, what is this proposition? Marshals of the district and district attorneys are nominated by the President of the United States, and their nominations are confirmed by the Senate of the United States. It is said that the clerks' salary is fixed by the Attorney General, and therefore he should fix the salary of these other officers. I am not going to discuss very much the difference between the relationship which the clerk of the court sustains to the administration of the law under our plan of government and the relationship which the marshal and the district attorney sustain, but there is an important difference. The first is purely a ministerial officer. I am not sure we should have enacted a law giving the Attorney General the power to fix the salary of clerks. But they are purely ministerial officers. The marshal is an executive officer. The district attorney is an executive officer. Each of these offices is created by the same authority and power which creates the office of Attorney General. They get their commissions from the same source. This legislation is bad from two angles—and I mean no reflection upon the man who is now Attorney General or the man who may come after him—but it is axiomatic in our system of government that whoever controls the purse strings controls the Government, whoever controls the salary controls the office. This bill gives to the Attorney General the control of the purse strings. That control belongs with the Congress. The Attorney General has now all the power which it is safe to lodge with that official or with any other official not directly responsible to the people.

I repeat that whoever can fix the salary of an officer, if he desires to do so, can largely control that officer's discretion. Under our plan of government it is contemplated that the district attorneys of the several districts shall be responsible to the authority which created them. It is violative of a fundamental principle of our Government to permit the Attorney General to fix the salaries within the limits fixed in this bill of the district attorneys of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does not the gentleman think that this kind of a system, with the right kind of an Attorney General, would in a measure tend to efficiency in the service and better results?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If you had the right kind of a czar, always wise and just, that kind of a government would be the most efficient government on earth, but we are supposed not to favor that system, first, because the experience of mankind has shown that tyranny is the child of arbitrary power; and second, we just naturally prefer to do the governing ourselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think I had better complete my statement first. I am unwilling to have the legislative branch of the Government confess its inability to function in the discharge of its constitutional duties. It is our duty to fix these salaries; our duty under the Constitution, and would be our duty under any wise plan of government. Whatever information the Attorney General of the United States has, whatever information the judges have, the district attorney, or the marshals, ought to be given to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, or the proper committee. That committee could sit down with the Attorney General of the United States and go over any schedule that he might desire to submit, and if the proposed schedule should appeal to the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary, then let that committee make its report in due order, with such modifications as it might agree on, and in proper process of legislation the Congress of the United States could enact the proper legislation.

The statements made by the distinguished chairman of this committee illustrate just what comes from this sort of legislation. We started in with the clerks and then with the deputy marshals, and now we are up to the marshal himself and to the district attorney himself. It is now proposed to turn over to a Cabinet officer the fixing of those salaries. I say that it is violative of the fundamentals of our plan of government.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. In the reclassification bill that we have in conference the Senate inserted a provision permitting the board, notwithstanding the schedule of salaries fixed in the bill, in certain cases to fix another salary. The House conferees refused to agree to any such proposition, taking the same ground that my colleague takes—that Congress itself ought to fix all of the salaries.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right; but I want to impress upon the gentlemen who are going to vote on this question that this is a very different proposition from that. It is very different from having the head of a department fix the salaries of administrative agents in his department. There he is responsible; but here it is proposed that one officer shall fix the salary of many other officers who are commissioned by the President and the Senate, just as he is. This shifts control to the Attorney General, because he is given control to a great degree over their salaries. Think of the situation: The Attorney General is nominated by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. The district attorneys of the several districts are nominated by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate; and here this Congress in the closing hours of this session proposes to say to the Attorney General of the United States that we can not determine what compensation they should receive, and that we will turn over to him the matter of fixing the salaries of these officers who come from the very same source that he comes from. I do not think we ought to do it. I am willing to take all of the time necessary with the Attorney General. I am willing to take all of the time necessary with the district judges and the district attorneys and the marshals, and hear their complaints, and bring in here a bill that will represent the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, but I shall never cast my vote for a measure that turns over the discharge of a legislative duty to one of the officers of the Government, as is proposed here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Assuming that the Attorney General should exercise this discretion up to the maximum amount, what would be the increase entailed on the Treasury of the United States under this bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I could not answer the gentleman except to say that I am quite sure that it would run to $100,000 per annum, perhaps much higher than that. I have not examined that, because I do not care if it would not take a cent. I am not going to discuss the question of dollars in a bill as fundamentally objectionable as this.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. What difference would there be between this plan and the plan now in vogue in respect to the fixing of the salaries of postmasters? The Postmaster General is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The postmasters are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. As I understand it, the Post Office Department fixes the salaries of the postmasters upon the basis of their receipts. I understand that these salaries are to be fixed upon the proportionate basis of work done.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In the first place, the postmaster is a purely ministerial officer, and in the second place there is a basis upon which his salary can be fixed with practical accuracy. It is fixed, practically automatically in most cases, I believe. But I say that if we are doing somewhere else that which is wrong, and I am not going to discuss whether or not we are, it does not justify us in doing that which is wrong this afternoon. A bad act, a bad precedent, never excuses another bad transaction. The only consistency which I think anybody ought to try to adhere to is that each time when he comes to act he use his latest and best judgment with regard to the matter being dealt with.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Do I understand that the bill provides that the salary is to be fixed by the Attorney General according to the amount of business done?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think so.

Mr. HUSTED. What is the language used?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The bill provides that the salaries of the United States attorneys and United States marshals for the several judicial districts of the United States shall be fixed by the Attorney General, between certain figures ranging from $3,000 to $7,500 per annum, the amount to be based in each instance upon the business transaction during the four years ending June 30, 1923.

Mr. HUSTED. How is that to be determined? Is that to be determined by the number of cases, by the amount involved in the cases, by the amount of time actually engaged, or by the return from the cases? Does it not practically leave to the discretion of the Attorney General to a very large extent what the increase in any individual case may be?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Certainly it does. That must be the effect of this bill. How is he to arrive at his conclusions and who is to question or exercise any check upon his discretion?

The effect of this bill would not be changed if it were to provide in its terms that within the wide range of salaries carried in the bill the Attorney General is authorized to fix the salaries of district attorneys and marshals. No such power ought to be surrendered by the Congress.

Now, the question of the gentleman from New York shows that that must be so.

Mr. HUSTED. I think so.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course.

Mr. HUSTED. And, as I understand, then the gentleman's objection runs only against the major officers; it does not run against the deputies?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is all we are discussing here; that is all this bill provides.

Mr. HUSTED. It certainly would not be practical to have Congress fix the salaries of deputies. It might be practical to have the Congress fix the salaries of United States attorneys in different districts, and of the marshal's office, and clerks of court, but it certainly would not be practicable to have the Congress fix the salaries of deputies, except within certain limits.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We spend more money for that purpose.

Mr. HUSTED. Very much more; vastly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I was only trying to discuss what is carried in this bill and in fixing the salary of marshals and district attorneys.

Mr. HUSTED. I am very much inclined to agree with the gentleman, so far as the clerk's office, marshals, and United States attorneys are concerned. It certainly would place in the hands of the Attorney General very great power and control if he had even within a limited discretion the right to fix the salary of every marshal.

Mr. DOMINICK. The clerks are already there.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNYDER. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). On this roll call 298 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SNYDER. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent the House stand in recess for 30 minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes) the House stood in recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Gentlemen of the House, a quarter of a century of intelligent, honest, painstaking public service marks the record of our distinguished leader, now about to retire from the House, which he does voluntarily. That record is filled to overflowing with brilliant achievements. Coming from a State for which land laws must be enacted to meet the needs of the sturdy pioneers, he applied himself to a study of the problems of the West and made himself the leading authority in the Nation on that subject. His industry carried him into every field of legislation and he was soon recognized as a walking encyclopedia on every subject coming before the Congress. He possessed the courage of his convictions. He never trimmed sail to meet the passing breeze. He stood foursquare against every wind that blew. He has been a real force for good in the House. He has earned the right to retire from his arduous labors here. We regret to see him go. His devotion to the cause of good government has been steadfast, so steadfast that it has known no turning. We will miss his influence and eloquence in the next Congress. He has been a matchless leader. He has earned the love and confidence of all who have been associated with him. A stalwart Republican, he nevertheless was always fair in his dealings with the Democrats. His word was never doubted, once given it was sacred. He has been unselfish, and patriotic, always for America. Men like Mr. MONDELL [applause] have helped to make America great. He had no personal ax to grind—his was a service for the people, and for them alone. He had opinions and the courage to express them. He is a common everyday citizen, not too proud to listen to the humblest citizen on the most unimportant subject. Big enough to meet the most exhalted on the paramount questions of the day. He is the ideal public servant. His clientele has been the Nation—his mind, his heart, his soul, has been given to the Nation's cause. His colleagues here pour out their love to him as he is about to leave us. We rejoice that he is not to leave the public service, but his great ability and knowledge and experience is to be retained and utilized in the War Finance Corporation, where we are all proud to think he adds to the glory he has achieved as a legislator. My dear MONDELL, your colleagues take pride in presenting you this beautiful tribute of their affection. This chest of sterling silver is presented because it is emblematic of the purity of your life and the lasting quality of our devotion. Accept it in the spirit in which it is given, and as you and your good wife look upon its beauty think of the love the donors bear you. God bless and prosper you and your family, and bring that happiness into your home which your labors here have brought into thousands of homes throughout the land. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Presiding Officer and Mr. Majority Leader, this is an hour of deep emotion.

I shall not attempt in any way to review the long and distinguished record which the majority leader of this House has made as a legislator. His activities in behalf of the great State from which he comes and in behalf of the great western country are written in imperishable words in the history of the Nation. [Applause.] I have, of course, known him as a legislator for 16 years. For four years I have known him as the titular leader of his party, and for the last two years circumstances have caused me to come in closer touch with him than have, perhaps, many other Members of the House. The gentleman said "no" a good many times when I wanted him to say "yes." He said "yes" a good many times when I wanted him to say "no," but he has always had the courage to say either "yes" or "no" according to his own convictions of what should be said. [Applause.] And that is what we need in public men. Living in a conspicuous position, one of the most conspicuous positions in the world, the leader of a great party in a great era, in a period fraught with difficulties, saturated with troubles, the gentleman from Wyoming measured up to the highest standard of American citizenship, and has been true to American traditions and has preserved unsullied the honor of that great position of leadership which he held. [Applause.] No hint has ever been thrown out by anyone which cast the slightest reflection upon his integrity of purpose, his character, his honor as a legislator or as a leader. Oh, I know he has passed through trying times, his responsibilities have been tremendous, and he has met them with honor, with courtesy, with credit to himself and with credit to his party, and with honor to the whole House of Representatives. [Applause.] So, for you and yours, Mr. MONDELL, and those who are to come after you, those who down the generations will look back to the honor you have made for your name, I wish you and yours and those who are to come all the good things you and they can have. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat trying occasion. I have attended many ceremonies in this House in which gentlemen have euologized their departed colleagues. I am thankful to-day that I have had the opportunity of being here present and hearing said the kindly things so many of our colleagues have had said about them when they no longer could hear them. I appreciate more than I can say the kindly, considerate, the very generous words uttered by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee.

I hope that in some measure, at least, I am worthy of their kindly expressions, and I hope that it is true that I have measured up, partly at least, to the high standard of their generous expressions, to the high praise which they have been kind enough to utter here in the presence of my colleagues.

I am leaving the House voluntarily after a service of more than a quarter of a century, and while the severance is voluntary, it is nevertheless with the keenest regret, for in 25 years of service this Chamber has become a very familiar place to me; this service has come to be a large part of my life, and I realize what a loss it will be, how great a change it will be, when I am no more entitled to respond to the roll call.

I came here as a comparatively young man, and I remember when Uncle JOE [applause], when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in moments when I was inclined to be just a little insubordinate and turbulent, would lay his kindly hand on my shoulder and say, "Now, my boy, let us talk it over." It was "my boy" then; but as the years have passed Uncle JOE and I have grown nearer of an age, and we are both going out older than we were, but still young. [Applause.]

I came here a stranger to all the country east of the Mississippi River, and with all the appreciation of the grandeur and glory of this Capital of the Republic and the high honor of this service that one can possibly have. I am leaving after 26 years, with the novelty worn off, but with an even higher regard for the dignity of the Nation and the honor of this service than I had on the day I came. [Applause.]

I leave the House, as I have said, with very great regret. I can not say that of the service as floor leader. There are some things of which any reasonable man may have enough. [Laughter and applause.]

And I hope I am at least a reasonable man. If I were to remain in the House I would much prefer to remain the Member from Wyoming, looking after her interests, and in a position to give undivided attention to that interest, viewed in the light of the national interest, rather than with the great responsibilities that have been upon me for the past four years.

Gentlemen have been kindly and considerate and all that, and I appreciate it more than I can say. I have not been an ideal floor leader; I know that. A man to be an ideal floor leader should not have any temper at all. [Laughter.] He should not allow himself to get ruffled. He should not disagree with folks, and he should not cultivate the habit of saying "No." What a lovely time he could have of it—to agree with all the gentlemen on that side and all the gentlemen on this side!

In my next incarnation, should I again be in political life and have the fortune, good or ill, as you may view it, of rising to a position of such responsibility, I shall hope that I may be able to agree with everybody in all things. [Applause.]

That has not been possible. Unfortunately a position of responsibility in a House like this—with 435 splendid, virile, forceful Members, each and all of them quick and earnest in the interest of the people and of the Nation; all anxious to do those things which they think should be done in the way they believe it should be done—all this presents a tremendous problem to one who to a greater or less extent must suggest what shall be done, how it shall be done, and when it shall be done.

I leave here with the most profound appreciation of the kindness and the courtesy of the Members of this House. You have borne with me and with my faults with Christian grace and charity, and you have in a very fine way aided in carrying on the work of Congress.

I want to pay tribute to the minority and to the minority leader. [Applause.] Of course, we have not always agreed. But that is not to be expected and would not be possible so long as we represent opposite parties. But I have found him always square, honorable, straightforward, a man who did not make a promise quickly or easily, but one who when he made it always kept it to the letter. [Applause.]

I want to thank the minority. They could have made it much more difficult than they have done if they had been pleased to. I want particularly to express my appreciation of those of them, including their leader, who are real stalwart Democrats. [Applause.] If there is anything we need in this country and in this House in these days as an anchor to that courage which is above all things the first essential, it is sincere belief in and an honest and unswerving adherence to the principles of the party to whose standards and beliefs we give our allegiance. [Applause.] It will be a sad day for the country when party principle shall be obscured and forgotten and when men shall no longer realize the tremendous importance of standing by party policies and upholding party principles.

I want to thank my colleagues on the Republican side. There have been various occasions when a number of the brethren have not been inclined to view things my way. I hope that through it all and out of it all we have still remained good friends. I know that many of the men who have differed with me the most—all the men who have differed with me, and with what I was inclined to consider party policies—did so because they were very earnest in the views they held. I am rather hoping that in the not distant future the brethren on this side will come to look at things in a little more united way. [Laughter and applause.] I think it will be a very good thing for the country if that should happen.

Mr. Speaker, may I speak a word in regard to this House as an institution of Government, as I have known it for 26 years? In my opinion the fate of the Republic, its future, ill or good, rests more with this House and its membership than with any other part of our Government. [Applause.] What the future shall bring to America, what we shall be in the future, will largely depend on what you gentlemen who are to remain, and those who are to serve with you, and after you shall decide and determine. We all realize that in these days when the world is properly moving forward in government, in legislation, as it is in all other things, there is just a little temptation—Ah! there is great temptation—to forget the fundamentals, to lose sight of the basic principles, to forget whence we come, the road we have traveled, and the attitude and position we must maintain if here in America we shall continue a Government of the people, for and by the people, of States dignified and independent within their sovereignty, and a Federal Government armed and equipped to do all these things necessary to be done within the jurisdiction provided for it within the four corners of the Constitution. [Applause.]

I have served here with many men, some very wise, some not so wise; with many men that I have agreed with and with many men that I disagreed with. I have had a very great pleasure in the latter days of my service in serving with four delightful, charming, and splendid women. [Applause.]

And of all these I am prepared to say that while I thought some of the men folks were a little odd in their views and some not overwise, they have practically, without exception, been men and women whose one purpose, whose one desire, was to serve their constituency and their country to the very best of their ability. [Applause.] The membership of this House has been honest, well intentioned, and faithful during all my service. Would it be kindly, after having said all this, to say that I think we have sometimes just a little lacked in courage? I think, of all things we need here, we need courage most—courage to withstand the onslaughts of active minorities. [Applause.] Courage to stand against manufactured propaganda; the courage to stand against minorities well organized, who know what they want and how to get it; courage to stand for those things and by those things we believe in, though the heavens fall. [Applause.]

My dear colleagues, as the time approaches to leave you I greet you as splendid, stalwart, faithful representatives of the American people, and in so doing I pay my tribute to those who sent you here. If this House were not the honest, faithful, conscientious body of men that it has been during my service, then the fault would be of the American people; but the heart of the American people is sound, sane, and honest. [Applause.]

If I were to express a wish for you and your successors, above all others it would be that your constituents, having sent you here, would leave you to do your best according to your own judgment and without overmuch advice or urging from them. You have in your hands the destiny of the greatest nation on earth, and the destiny of the greatest nation on earth is in a considerable degree the destiny of all the world, for as America goes, as America stands, so stands the world. [Applause.]

Our moral influence is almost limitless. It extends to every corner of the globe wherever men live, so that what we do here not only affects the people of this land but the people of the entire globe. The American people can leave these great interests in the hands of the American Congress, confident that you will perform your duty to those whom you immediately serve, to the Nation to which you have sworn allegiance, and to the world which is affected by your deeds, with confidence in your honor and your integrity. [Applause.]

I accept this chest of sterling silver and this silver service on behalf of Mrs. Mondell and myself with very great appreciation of the kindness of my colleagues who have donated it. These articles of sterling silver will remind us continually and always of the good friends with whom I have served and whose kindly regard we shall always cherish.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House, at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes, was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings during the recess be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess from 6.30 this evening to 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that at 6.30 o'clock this evening the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know when the conference report on the agricultural credits bill will come up.

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to take it up immediately after we reconvene. In the meantime there are some matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WINGO. I have had that hope for about four hours.

Mr. MONDELL. We are all as anxious to dispose of that matter as is the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Why can not that be taken ahead of these other matters? What is the trouble?

Mr. MONDELL. No trouble at all, except that we have some measures that must go to the Senate and be acted upon there. It will take a little time. We have been trying to dispose of them first.

Mr. WINGO. This conference report is going to take some time in the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we ought to get it over there quite early in the evening, but I am perfectly willing to take it up after our return.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the recess is to be from 6.30 o'clock until 8?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it quite sure that the conference report on the so-called rural credits bill will be taken up immediately upon reconvening?

Mr. MONDELL. We will take up nothing else that will take any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can not the majority leader give us positive assurance that that will be taken up upon reconvening?

Mr. MONDELL. We may have some little thing on the Speaker's table. It will be taken up approximately the first thing. If there is a bill on the Speaker's table that ought to be sent to the Senate, of course, we ought to send it there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS AND UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Speaker, when interrupted we were considering the Senate bill authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of district attorneys and United States marshals. During the past six years the salaries of all Government employees have increased excepting those of district attorneys and United States marshals. Bonuses have been paid and are being paid. Not only have Government employees received increased compensation but the same condition has prevailed throughout civil life, not alone in America but throughout the entire world, to meet the increased cost of living conditions superinduced, perhaps, by an inflated currency.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAL. The gentleman will excuse me; I have not the time. The salaries of district attorneys and United States marshals have not been increased, although the burden of work that has been placed upon them has increased generally, and in many instances has been tripled and quadrupled. Since the enactment of the prohibition laws we all know that the work of the courts has been very great, so that the labor which has been placed upon these men has been doubled and in some instances tripled and quadrupled. For more than 10 years their salaries have not been increased. We have provided that the clerks of the courts shall have their compensation increased in the discretion of the Attorney General. This bill provides that the same plan may apply to district attorneys and United States marshals, within the limits, however, of not less than $3,000 nor more than $6,500 for marshals or $7,500 for district attorneys. I am advised that throughout the Union the district attorneys and the marshals have been overcrowded with work. Certainly within my own district this has been the case. Over 1,100 cases were placed on the docket and tried during the past 12 months in the eastern district of Virginia. We have a long stretch of seacoast, one of the largest and most extensive harbors perhaps in the world, certainly including its tributaries. It is, therefore, very difficult to prevent smuggling and violation of the prohibition laws. This has increased the work of our district attorney many times. The Government activities within that district have embraced aviation fields, Shipping Board cases, the naval station at Yorktown, the naval base at Hampton Roads, the Army bases, navy yards, and many other activities of the Government. Many cases that have been on the docket have involved several hundred thousand dollars, and the fact remains that the district attorney under these circumstances has been unable to have an increase of his salary for more than 10 years. Assistants are receiving larger salaries than the district attorney, and in some cases the marshal.

Mr. RICKETTS. What is the salary of the assistant United States marshal, or the deputy marshals, as we call them?

Mr. DEAL. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. RICKETTS. The fact is that they get a salary of $1,000, with a bonus of $250. That has been the salary for a number of years, and while I am heartily in favor of increasing the salaries of the district attorneys and of the marshals, I think the deputy marshals ought to have their salaries increased also.

Mr. DEAL. I agree with the gentleman, but it is not within my power to have these salaries raised. The only thing I can do is to indorse the bill that we have before us to-day. This is a step in the right direction.

Mr. RICKETTS. It makes no provision for the deputies?

Mr. DEAL. None, as I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. The debate has shown heretofore that the increase of their salaries is in the discretion of the Attorney General now.

Mr. DEAL. I am not posted on that. I know it is in the discretion of the Attorney General to increase the salaries of the clerks, and in some instances the clerks are to-day receiving larger salaries than are the district attorneys.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, just as sure as we pass this bill the salary of every district attorney will be increased almost automatically to $7,500 a year, and the salary of every marshal almost automatically will be increased to at least $6,500 a year.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH].

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I introduced a companion measure to this bill in the House, and the House bill was thoroughly considered by the Judiciary Committee. This bill is not an attempt to raise the salaries of the district attorneys, as stated by the Representative from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but merely corrects the existing inequality of salaries of United States district attorneys and marshals. Those who are at all familiar with the situation well know that under existing law there is an inequality of salaries of our district attorneys and marshals that should be corrected by Congress without delay. This bill merely authorizes the Attorney General to regulate and fix the salaries of United States attorneys and marshals within certain minimum and maximum amounts in accordance with the volume of work done in their respective districts. Without a doubt such a measure is a wise one. In some districts the volume of work for both of these officers is quite heavy, while in others very little work is required, and it is nonsense to say that the pay, where such inequality exists, should be the same. This measure corrects that evil. I do not have in mind any other way by which this situation can be better corrected than is proposed in this bill. The measure has the approval of the Department of Justice, and so far as I know is approved by the district attorneys and United States marshals. At least, that is true to some extent, for I have had this matter up with some of them and have no hesitancy in stating that the measure meets with their approval. I hope the House will realize the importance of the measure and not confuse it with some of the chaff that has been going through the hopper in the closing hours of this session and fail to give it the consideration and deliberate judgment that it deserves. I am sure that if you will give it sober and thoughtful attention that you will vote for the bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the statement made awhile ago, before we were interrupted in this magnificent proceeding in honor of our floor leader, in the statement that was made by our distinguished Member from Texas that it is not a safe policy to give the salary-fixing power to an executive officer, and especially if he has the power to make a maximum and minimum. But that is not the case here. The law here fixes the minimum and also the maximum. I am not in agreement with my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] who has just now spoken, who says that where you have any leeway that you always make the minimum the maximum; or, in other words, if you fix the limit it will be the maximum rather than the minimum. Of course, we must give credence to those who are responsible for the department of which they are the head, and the very fact that we make a fair leeway of $3,000 minimum and $7,500 in one case and $6,500 in another the maximum shows the vast stretch of variety of the amount of the work that is done in one section in contrast with the work that is done in another section. In other words, if we examine the records we will see that in one section the work is arduous, very comprehensive, much enlarged over other sections. The salary can not be uniform unless no distinction is to be made for different degrees of work. We recognize this lack of uniformity. We have a $3,000 minimum and a $7,500 maximum for the office; that presupposes that there is a variety of work to be done. It is simply impossible for the Congress to fix the salary scientifically that will be adequate to the amount of work where the difference or the stretch is from one to two, like from $3,000 in one case to $7,500 in the other; and gentlemen have made that very clear that certain increased work in a section of eastern Virginia that has come about in recent years has so much enlarged the work of that place that to make the salary of a person who is there in control the same as it was before it expanded, or the same as in another district, is not scientific. It is not sensible, and the fact that the work increased in one section constantly and decreased in another section constantly should allow the Attorney General to accommodate the salary to the amount of work. It can not be regulated in a legislative body like this. Ministerial work, it is true, does not require the same discretion that the policy-fixing function of the officer requires.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 6.30 having arrived the House will stand in recess until 8 o'clock.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, at 8 o'clock p. m. the House was called to order by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas as Speaker pro tempore.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The debate on the bill having been concluded, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understood that there were three minutes remaining, and of that three minutes I yielded one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], which left two minutes remaining to me.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the gentleman from Texas has two minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] had given to his colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] the remainder of his time, and his colleague used the three minutes, so that the debate is exhausted.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood the gentleman yielded to me one minute.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Unfortunately, I was not the timekeeper.

Mr. SISSON. I think, Mr. Speaker, under the rules a mistake has been made at the desk by not charging up time to the man who had control of the time, so that it was just a matter of mismanagement.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am under agreement to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], but I believe he is not in the Hall. The Chair has been so gracious in waiving the ordinary rule in my behalf that I will not insist on exacting the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 425) authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals of the several judicial districts of the United States within certain limits. As many as favor the motion will answer "aye." Those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this a very important bill. I think we ought to have a roll call on this bill. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to suspend the rules and pass the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 195, nays 70, not voting 162, as follows:

Should a Federal intermediate credit bank be dissolved or go into liquidation, after the payment of all debts and other obligations as hereinbefore provided, any surplus remaining shall be paid to and become the property of the United States and shall be similarly applied.

"SEC. 207. That any Federal intermediate credit bank issuing debentures or other such obligations under this title shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of the coupons for interest payments due upon any such debentures or obligations issued by any other Federal intermediate credit bank and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of the other Federal intermediate credit bank. Any Federal intermediate credit bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of debentures or obligations so issued as are not paid after the assets of such other Federal intermediate credit bank have been liquidated and distributed. Such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal Farm Loan Board against solvent Federal intermediate credit banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of capital stock, surplus, and debentures or other such obligations which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment. Every Federal intermediate credit bank shall, by appropriate action of its board of directors duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on debentures and other such obligations as provided in this section.

(D) Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the corporation or shall purchase to secure debts due to it.

(7) To act as custodian, trustee, or agent for holders of notes, drafts, or bills of exchange sold or negotiated under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (a) of this section or under section 207.

(8) To issue, subject to such regulations as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe, collateral trust notes or debentures, with a maturity not exceeding three years, and to pledge as security for such notes or debentures any notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other securities held by the corporation under the terms of this title. The regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe the form of notes or debentures, and of notes, drafts, bills of exchange, warehouse receipts, chattel mortgages, or other instruments which may be pledged as security therefor, the provisions which may be made with regard to release, substitution, or exchange of such securities, and with regard to protection, supervision, inspection, and reinspection of the agricultural commodities or live stock pledged or mortgaged as security therefor.

(b) The United States Government shall assume no liability, direct or indirect, for any debentures or other obligations issued under this title, and all such debentures and other obligations shall contain conspicuous and appropriate language, to be prescribed in form and substance by the Comptroller of the Currency and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, clearly indicating that no such liability is assumed.

LIMITATIONS.

SEC. 204. Except as hereinafter provided in section 207 of this title, no national agricultural credit corporation shall incur liabilities, whether direct or contingent, in excess of ten times its paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus; nor shall any such corporation make advances to or hold notes or other direct obligations of any person or corporation, or have outstanding acceptances for any person or corporation, in an amount exceeding 20 per centum of the paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus of such corporation, unless such advances, notes, acceptances, or other obligations are adequately secured by warehouse receipts representing readily marketable and nonperishable agricultural commodities, in which event the amount of such advances to, or notes or other direct obligations of, or acceptances for, such one person, association, or corporation shall not exceed 50 per centum of such paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus. No such corporation shall purchase, own, or deal in any live stock except live stock taken in the course of liquidation of obligations held by it.

INTEREST RATES.

SEC. 205. (a) Any national agricultural credit corporation may charge on any loan or discount made, or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidence of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State in which such corporation is located.

(b) The taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by subdivision (a), when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt carries with it or which has been agreed to be paid thereon. In case the greater rate of interest has been paid, the person by whom it has been paid, or his legal representative, may recover back in an action in the nature of an action for debt twice the amount of the interest thus paid from the corporation taking or receiving the same, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious interest was collected.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 206. (a) That no national agricultural credit corporation shall be permitted to commence business with a paid-in capital of less than $250,000; and no permit to begin business shall be issued to any such corporation by the Comptroller of the Currency until there shall have been filed with him a certificate signed by the president or treasurer and by individuals comprising a majority of the board of directors of such corporation showing that at least 50 per cent of the authorized capital stock of such corporation has been paid in in cash; and the remainder of the capital stock of such corporation shall be paid in installments of at least 10 per cent each on the whole amount of the capital, and the entire authorized capital stock shall be paid in within six months from the date upon which such corporation shall be authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business. The payment of each installment shall be certified to the Comptroller of the Currency under oath by the president or cashier of such corporation.

(b) The capital stock of any such corporation may be increased at any time with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency by a vote of two-thirds of the holders of its issued and outstanding capital stock, or by written consent of all of its shareholders without a meeting and without a formal vote; and may be reduced in like manner: Provided, That in no event shall such capital stock be reduced to an amount less than one-tenth of its then outstanding indebtedness, direct or contingent, or to an amount less than $250,000, nor without at the same time reducing proportionately outstanding liabilities. No national agricultural credit corporation, except as herein provided, shall withdraw or permit to be withdrawn, either in the form of dividends or otherwise, any portion of its paid-in capital; and section 5204 of the Revised Statutes, prohibiting the payment of unearned dividends or the withdrawal of capital of national banks, shall be held to apply to national agricultural credit corporations.

(c) The provisions and limitations contained in section 5139 of the Revised Statutes, relative to transfer of the shares of the capital stock of national banks, shall apply to national agricultural credit corporations.

(d) Whenever any shareholder or his assign fails, upon demand of the Comptroller of the Currency, to pay his subscription or any part thereof on stock of any national agricultural credit corporation subscribed to by him, the directors of the corporation, after 15 days' notice, shall proceed in the manner prescribed by section 5141 of the Revised Statutes for the collection of unpaid subscriptions to stock of national banks.

(e) Section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, which relates to the right of shareholders of national banks to vote by proxy, shall be held to apply to shareholders of national agricultural credit corporations.

REDISCOUNT CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 207. (a) That national agricultural credit corporations having an authorized capital stock of $1,000,000 or over may be organized under the provisions of this title, to exercise all the powers enumerated in section 203, except that in lieu of the powers conferred in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (a) of such section, such corporations shall have power—

(1) Upon the indorsement of any national agricultural credit corporation, or of any bank or trust company which is a member of the Federal reserve system, to rediscount for such corporation, bank, or trust company, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and acceptances, which conform to the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (a) of section 203. Such indorsement shall be deemed to be a waiver of demand notice and protest by such corporation as to its own indorsement exclusively.

(2) To discount or purchase notes, drafts, or bills of exchange issued or drawn by cooperative associations of producers of agricultural products, provided such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange are secured at the time of discount or purchase by warehouse receipts or other like documents conveying or securing title to nonperishable and readily marketable agricultural products and have a maturity at the time of discount or purchase not exceeding nine months.

(3) To sell or negotiate with or without recourse any note, draft, or bill of exchange discounted or purchased hereunder.

(b) National agricultural credit corporations organized under the provisions of this section shall not be subject to the limitations contained in section 204, but the Comptroller of the Currency may, by general regulations, from time to time prescribe the amount of indebtedness, direct or contingent, which such corporations may incur, and the aggregate amount of paper of different types which such corporations may rediscount for any one corporation.

(c) Corporations with powers limited, as provided in this section, shall not be subject to the requirements as to deposit of bonds or other obligations of the United States, as provided in section 208 of this title.

PERMIT TO BEGIN BUSINESS.

SEC. 208. (a) That no national agricultural credit corporation, except corporations with powers limited as provided in section 207, shall commence business until it has deposited with the Federal reserve bank of the district wherein it has its place of business, bonds or other obligations of the United States in an aggregate face amount of at least 25 per cent of its paid-in capital stock. Each such corporation shall at all times keep on deposit with such Federal reserve bank an amount of such bonds or other obligations of the United States at least equal in face value to 7½ per cent of the aggregate indebtedness of such corporation, direct or contingent, said amount to include the 25 per cent deposited as hereinbefore by this section provided. Except as hereinafter provided, such bonds or other obligations shall be held by such Federal reserve bank, subject to the direction and control of the Comptroller of the Currency, in trust for the equal and pro rata protection and benefit of all holders of notes, debentures, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances upon which such corporation may be directly or contingently liable. Upon receipt of proper evidence that the amount of such bonds or other obligations of the United States so deposited exceeds 7½ per cent of such aggregate indebtedness, the Comptroller of the Currency may release such excess, provided that the amount remaining on deposit shall in no event be reduced below 25 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such corporation. Under such regulations as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe, a Federal reserve bank may, upon request of the corporation which deposited the same, sell any such bonds or obligations for account of such corporation and permit such corporation to use the proceeds thereof for the protection or preservation of any property pledged or mortgaged as security for obligations owned or indorsed by the corporation. If by reason of such sale the face amount of such bonds or other obligations of the United States remaining on deposit with such Federal reserve bank shall be less than 7½ per cent of such aggregate indebtedness of the corporation, no further advances shall be made, or notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted, rediscounted, accepted, or purchased, by such corporation until sufficient additional bonds or other obligations of the United States have been deposited to make good the deficiency.

(b) In determining whether to grant permission to do business to any National Agricultural Credit Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall take into account the extent to which the laws of the State or States in which the corporation will do business afford adequate protection to advances made upon the security of warehouse receipts covering agricultural commodities or chattel mortgages upon live stock with respect to (1) bonding, licensing, and inspection of warehouses; (2) recordation of chattel mortgages or deeds of trust on live stock; (3) recordation of brands or other identifying marks on live stock; (4) reporting and recording of interstate shipments and slaughter of live stock; and (5) right of mortgagee to release a portion of the mortgaged property without prejudice to the priority of lien as against junior lienors or other creditors of the mortgagor.

MISCELLANEOUS ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

SEC. 209. (a) That all National Agricultural Credit Corporations shall be under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall be charged with the execution of all laws of the United States relating to the organization, regulation, and control of such corporations. The Comptroller of the Currency shall exercise the same general power of supervision over such corporations as he now exercises over national banks organized under the laws of the United States.

(b) In addition to the two Deputy Comptrollers of the Currency now provided for by law, there shall be in the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency a third Deputy Comptroller of the Currency who shall be appointed in the same manner and shall take a like oath of office and give a like bond as the deputy comptrollers now provided for by law. Under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, such additional deputy comptroller shall have charge of the administration of the provisions of this title relating to the organization and operation of national agricultural credit corporations and shall perform such other duties as shall be assigned to him by the Comptroller of the Currency. The Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to employ such additional examiners, clerks, and other employees as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and to assign to duty in the office of his bureau in Washington such examiners and assistant examiners as he shall deem necessary to assist in the performance of the work of that bureau. The salaries of the Deputy Comptrollers of the Currency and of such additional examiners, assistant examiners, clerks, and other employees shall be fixed in advance by the Comptroller of the Currency. The salaries of the two deputy comptrollers now provided for by law and of all national-bank examiners and assistant examiners assigned to duty in the office of the bureau in Washington in connection with the supervision of national banks shall be considered part of the expenses of the examinations provided for by section 5240 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and the salaries of such additional deputy comptroller and of all examiners, assistant examiners, clerks, and other employees appointed under the terms of this title and assigned to duty in connection with the administration of this title shall be considered part of the expenses of the administration of this title: Provided, however, That the salary of the additional deputy comptroller provided for by this subdivision shall be considered partly an expense of the administration of this title in proportions to be determined from time to time by the Comptroller of the Currency with a view to a fair apportionment of such expense, until such time as it shall be necessary for such additional deputy comptroller to give his full time to the administration of this title. The Comptroller of the Currency shall have power to levy semiannually upon the national agricultural credit corporations operating under the provisions of this title, in proportion to their total assets, an assessment sufficient to pay the expenses of the administration of this title for the ensuing half year, together with any deficit carried forward from the preceding half year. Each such corporation shall pay the amount so assessed against it to the Treasurer of the United States subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency to be disbursed by the comptroller in payment of expenses incurred in the administration of this title.

(c) The Comptroller of the Currency shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of examiners to examine National Agricultural Credit Corporations or to use national bank examiners for this purpose. All examiners appointed by him shall be subject to existing provisions of law relating to national bank examiners and to the provisions of the Federal reserve act which prohibit national bank examiners from performing any service for compensation for any bank or officer and from disclosing the names of borrowers or the collateral for loans without obtaining the written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, and such provisions shall be held to apply to examiners appointed to examine corporations organized under the provisions of this title.

(d) The expense of all of the examinations of National Agricultural Credit Corporations shall be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency upon the corporations examined in proportion to assets or resources held by the corporations upon the dates of examination of the various corporations: Provided, That a minimum charge of $50 shall be made for each such examination.

(e) The provisions of the Federal reserve act which prohibit any member bank from making loans or granting a gratuity to any national bank examiner shall be applicable to National Agricultural Credit Corporations.

(f) National Agricultural Credit Corporations shall be required to make reports to the Comptroller of the Currency at the time and in the manner required by sections 5211 and 5212 of the Revised Statutes, and shall be subject to the provisions, so far as the same may be held by said comptroller to be applicable of section 5213 of the Revised Statutes.

(g) The Secretary of Agriculture may issue a license to any person, upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent to inspect live stock as a basis for loans. The Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued by him under this subdivision whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given to the licensee, the Secretary shall determine that such licensee is incompetent, or has knowingly or carelessly made false or erroneous inspection reports with respect to any live stock, or has accepted any money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has in any other manner shown himself to be unfit to act as a live-stock inspector. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems it necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without a hearing. It shall be unlawful for any person other than a holder of a license duly issued under this subdivision, or any person whose license has been suspended or revoked under the terms of this subdivision, to represent that he is a Federally licensed live-stock inspector, and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

(h) Any inspector licensed under the provisions of subdivision (g) who makes any statement in any inspection report or to any person for the purpose of obtaining for himself, or any other person, any advance on the security of the live stock inspected, knowing the same to be false, or who willfully overvalues any security by which an advance is secured, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(i) The Comptroller of the Currency shall allot to the Department of Agriculture from time to time such sums as may be estimated to be necessary for the administration of the functions vested in that department by this title, and may ratably assess the same from time to time against national agricultural credit corporations.

BANKS MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM MAY BECOME STOCKHOLDERS.

SEC. 210. That any member bank of the Federal reserve system may file application with the Comptroller of the Currency for permission to invest an amount not exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of its paid-in capital stock and surplus in the stock of one or more of the national agricultural credit corporations, and upon approval of such application may purchase said stock. The Comptroller of the Currency shall have discretion to approve or reject such application in whole or in part.

TAXATION.

SEC. 211. That taxation by a State of the shares in national agricultural credit corporations, or of dividends derived therefrom, or of the income of said corporations, or real estate owned by them, shall be such only as is or may be authorized by law in the case of national banking associations; and taxation by a State of the debentures or other obligations of such corporations shall not be at a higher rate than the rate applicable to other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens thereof.

DEPOSITS.

SEC. 212. That the moneys of national agricultural credit corporations may be kept on deposit subject to check in any member bank of the Federal reserve system.

CONVERSION OF CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 213. (a) That any agricultural or live-stock financing corporation incorporated by special law of any State or organized under the general laws of any State and having an unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national agricultural credit corporation may, by the vote of the shareholders owning not less than 51 per centum of the capital stock of such corporation, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, be converted into a national agricultural credit corporation under this title, with any name approved by the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That the said conversion shall not be in contravention of the State law.

(b) In such case the articles of association and organization certificate may be executed by a majority of the directors of the corporation, and the certificate shall declare that the owners of 51 per centum of the capital stock have authorized the directors to make such certificate and to change or convert the corporation into a national agricultural credit corporation. A majority of the directors, after executing the articles of association and the organization certificate, shall have power to execute all other papers and to do whatever may be required to make its organization perfect and complete as a national agricultural credit corporation. The shares of any such corporation may continue to be for the same amount each as they were before the conversion, and the directors may continue to be directors of the corporation until others are elected or appointed.

(c) When the Comptroller of the Currency has given to such corporation a certificate that the provisions of this title have been complied with, such corporation, and all its stockholders, owners, and employees, shall have the same powers and privileges and shall be subject to the same duties, liabilities, and regulations, in all respects, as shall have been prescribed by this title for corporations originally organized as national agricultural credit corporations.

CONSOLIDATION OF CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 214. (a) That any two or more national agricultural credit corporations, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, may consolidate into one corporation under the charter of either or any of the existing corporations on such terms and conditions as may be lawfully agreed upon by a majority of the board of directors of each corporation proposing to consolidate, such agreement to be ratified and confirmed by the affirmative vote of the shareholders of each of such corporations owning at least two-thirds of its capital stock outstanding, at a meeting to be held on the call of the directors after publishing notice of the time, place, and object of the meeting for four consecutive weeks in some newspaper published in the place where the said corporation is located, and if no newspaper is published in the place, then in a paper published nearest thereto, and after sending such notice to each shareholder of record by registered mail at least 10 days prior to said meeting: Provided, That the capital stock of such consolidated corporation shall not be less than $250,000 paid in if the corporations consolidated are organized to exercise the powers covered by section 203, or less than $1,000,000 paid in if the corporations consolidated are those organized under section 207.

(b) When such consolidation shall have been effected and approved by the Comptroller of the Currency any shareholder of either of the corporations so consolidated who has not voted for such consolidation may give notice to the board of directors of the corporation in which he is interested, within 20 days from the date of the certificate of approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, that he dissents from the plan of consolidation as adopted and approved, whereupon he shall be entitled to receive the value of the shares so held by him, to be ascertained by an appraisal made by a committee of three persons, one to be selected by the shareholder, one by the directors, and the third by the two so chosen; and in case the value so affixed shall not be satisfactory to the shareholder, he may within five days after being notified of the appraisal appeal to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall cause a reappraisal to be made, which shall be final and binding; and if said reappraisal shall exceed the value affixed by said committee, the corporation shall pay the expense of the reappraisal, otherwise the appellant shall pay said expense; and the value so ascertained and determined shall be deemed to be a debt due and be forthwith paid to said shareholder by said corporation, and the shares so paid shall be surrendered and after due notice sold at public auction within 30 days after the final appraisement provided for by this title.

(c) Where corporations consolidate under the provisions of this title, all of the rights, franchises, and interest of said corporations shall be consolidated in and to every species of property, personal and mixed, and choses in action thereto belonging, and shall be deemed to be transferred to and vested in the corporation into which it is consolidated without any deed or other transfer, and the said consolidated corporation shall hold and enjoy the same and all rights of property, franchises, and interest, in the same manner and to the same extent as they were held and enjoyed by the corporations so consolidated therewith.

INSOLVENCY, RECEIVERSHIP, AND LIQUIDATION.

SEC. 215. (a) That whenever any national agricultural credit corporation shall be dissolved and its rights, privileges, and franchises declared forfeited as prescribed in the preceding section, or whenever any creditor of any such corporation shall have obtained a judgment against it in any court of record and made application accompanied by a certificate from the clerk of the court, stating that such judgment has been rendered and has remained unpaid for the space of 30 days or whenever the Comptroller of the Currency shall become satisfied of the insolvency of such corporation, he may, after due examination of its affairs in either case, appoint a receiver who shall proceed to wind up the affairs of such corporation. The receiver so appointed shall exercise the powers and be subject to the restrictions of receivers of national banks; and the Comptroller of the Currency shall have the same powers and duties in connection with the administration of such receivership as he has in reference to the receivership of national banks.

(b) Shareholders' agents for shareholders of national agricultural credit corporations may be appointed in the manner prescribed by section 3 of the act of June 30, 1876, as amended, and shall have the same general powers and duties and be subject to the same restrictions as shareholders' agents of a national bank.

(c) Any national agricultural credit corporation may go into liquidation and be closed by the vote of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock. Whenever a vote is taken to go into liquidation it shall be the duty of the board of directors to cause notice of this fact to be certified under the seal of the corporation by its president or cashier to the Comptroller of the Currency and publication thereof to be made for a period of two months in a newspaper published in the city or town in which the corporation is located, or if no newspaper is there published, in the newspaper published nearest thereto, that the corporation is closing up its affairs and notifying the creditors to present their claims against the corporation for payment. All such claims shall be presented to and approved by a liquidating agent to be appointed by the board of directors of such corporation, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the affairs of such corporation shall be liquidated by such agent and under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall, prior to June 30, 1923, and each six months thereafter, estimate the expenses and salaries of the Federal Farm Loan Board, its officers and employees, farm-loan registrars, deputy registrars, the examiners and reviewing appraisers, and apportion the same among the Federal and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets at the time of such apportionment and make an assessment upon each of such banks pursuant to such apportionment, payable on the 1st of July or January next ensuing. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land-bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico and the Territory of Alaska; and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in Porto Rico, and a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in the Territory of Alaska. Loans made by each such branch bank shall not exceed the sum of $10,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that each such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and, subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe, the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, That no loan shall be made in Porto Rico or Alaska by such branch bank for a longer term than 20 years."

SEC. 304. That the twentieth to twenty-fifth paragraphs, inclusive, of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act are amended to read as follows:

"The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of seven members. Three of said directors shall be known as local directors and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies; three shall be known as district directors and shall be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board and represent the public interest. The term of office of local and district directors shall be three years.

"Within 30 days from the date of passage of the agricultural credits act of 1923, and thereafter at least two months before each election, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall divide each land-bank district into three divisions, as nearly equal as possible, according to the number of borrowers and the voting strength of national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies, and the farm loan commissioner shall thereupon notify each association and agency in writing that an election is to be held for one local director from each of said divisions and requesting each association and agency to nominate one candidate for each division. Within 10 days of receipt of such notice each national farm-loan association and borrower through agencies shall forward nominations of residents of their respective divisions for one director for such division to said farm loan commissioner. The farm loan commissioner shall then prepare a list of candidates for local directors, consisting of the 10 persons receiving the highest number of votes from national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies for each division.

"At least one month before said election the farm loan commissioner shall mail to each national farm-loan association and to each borrower through agencies the list of candidates for their respective divisions. The directors of each national farm-loan association shall cast the vote of said association for one of the candidates on said list and shall forward said vote to the said farm loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received. In voting under this section each association shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to the total voting strength of the stockholders in association meetings, and each borrower through agencies shall be entitled to cast one vote for each share of stock held by him in the Federal land bank not exceeding 20 shares, and shall forward said vote to the said farm loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received. The candidate receiving the highest number of votes in his division shall be declared elected as local director of the Federal land-bank district from his division. In case of a tie, the farm loan commissioner shall determine the choice. The nominations from which the list of candidates is prepared, and the votes of the respective associations and borrowers through agencies for such candidates, as counted, shall be tabulated and preserved, subject to examination by any candidate, for at least one year after the result of the election is announced.

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate one of the district directors to serve until December 31, 1924, one to serve till December 31, 1925, and one to serve till December 31, 1926. After their first appointment each district director shall be appointed for a term of three years. At the first regular meeting of the board of directors of each Federal land bank the local directors shall designate one of their members to serve till December 31, 1924, one to serve till December 31, 1925, and one to serve till December 31, 1926. Thereafter each local director shall be chosen as hereinbefore provided and shall hold office for a term of three years. Any vacancies that may occur in the board of directors shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner provided herein for the original selection of such directors. At the same time that the associations and borrowers through agencies nominate the candidates for the local directors, each association and each borrower through agencies shall also nominate one candidate for director at large for the entire district, and from the three persons having the greatest number of votes for nominee for director at large the Federal Farm Loan Board shall select a director at large, whose term of office shall terminate on the 31st day of December, 1925, and every three years thereafter. Such seventh director may be removed by the Federal Farm Loan Board for neglect of duty, incapacity for the work, or malfeasance in office after charges duly preferred and a hearing had thereon, and in such cases the associations of the district shall in like manner nominate candidates for another director at large to fill the vacancy, for whom the Federal Farm Loan Board shall in same manner select a successor, but any person who is removed can not be nominated to succeed himself. The board of directors thus selected shall, upon qualification, immediately take over the management of each bank.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall have been, for at least two years, residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected, and a local director shall be a resident of his division when elected. No district director of a Federal land bank shall, during his continuance in office, act as an officer, director, or employee of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making or selling land-mortgage loans.

"Directors of the Federal land bank shall receive, in addition to any compensation otherwise provided, a reasonable allowance for necessary expenses in attending meetings of their boards, to be paid by the respective Federal land banks. Any compensation that may be provided by boards of directors of the Federal land banks for directors, officers, or employees shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board."

SEC. 305. That the fourth paragraph of section 7 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding thereto the following: "No such secretary-treasurer shall engage in the making of land-mortgage loans eligible at a Federal land bank through or for any other land-mortgage company or agency, and the making of any such loan by any secretary-treasurer shall forthwith work a forfeiture of his office."

SEC. 306. That subdivision (d) of paragraph "Fourth" of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged, incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to January 1, 1922."

SEC. 307. That paragraph "Seventh" of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"Seventh. The amount of loans to any one borrower shall in no case exceed a maximum of $25,000, nor shall any one loan be for a less sum than $100, but preference shall be given to applications for loans of $10,000 and under."

SEC. 308. That section 21 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof 12 new paragraphs to read as follows:

"Whenever it shall appear desirable to issue consolidated bonds of the 12 Federal land banks and to sell them through a common selling agency, and the Federal land banks shall, by resolution, consent to the same, the banks may issue and sell said bonds as hereinafter provided.

"Every bond so issued shall be signed by the Farm Loan Commissioner and attested by the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and their signatures may be either written or engraved thereon and shall recite in the face of the bond the fact that it is the joint and several obligation of the 12 Federal land banks, and shall in all respects be governed by the provisions of the Federal farm loan act not inconsistent herewith.

"The consolidated bonds issued under this provision shall be made payable at any Federal land bank, and may be made payable at any Federal reserve bank or banks designated in the face of the bond.

"Each Federal land bank on whose behalf consolidated bonds shall be issued under this provision shall in all respects be bound by the act of the Farm Loan Commissioner and the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board in executing such bonds.

"Every Federal land bank, before participation in a consolidated issue, as herein provided, shall by appropriate action of its board of directors, duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on Federal farm loan bonds as provided in this section and be bound by the action of the Farm Loan Commissioner and the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board in executing the same.

"Every farm loan bond issued hereunder shall contain on the face thereof a certificate signed by the Farm Loan Commissioner to the effect that it is issued under the authority of Title I of the Federal farm loan act, has the approval in form and issue of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and is legal and regular in all respects; that it is not taxable by national, State, municipal, or local authority; that it is issued against collateral security consisting of obligations of the United States Government, or indorsed first mortgages on farm lands, at least equal in amount to the bonds issued; and that all Federal land banks are liable for the payment of each bond.

"When any Federal land bank shall desire to participate in a consolidated issue of farm loan bonds it shall make application to the Federal Farm Loan Board for the approval on its behalf of such issue and tender to the registrar approved farm mortgages, or obligations of the United States Government, as security therefor, and no banks shall participate in such consolidated issue until such application has been approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Each bank shall pay when due, without notice, all bonds and coupons issued on its behalf hereunder.

"If any Federal land bank shall fail to pay its proportion of interest or principal as herein prescribed, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall immediately call upon the other Federal land banks for the amount necessary to make said payment, the assessments to be made in proportion to the capital stock of each, which assessments shall be forthwith paid by said banks.

"The presidents of the 12 Federal land banks shall constitute the bond committee of the Federal land banks and shall select a chairman from among their number. The vice president may act in place of the president on the president's request or in case he fails to act.

"When an issue of consolidated bonds is contemplated, the bond committee shall determine the amount of such issue, the rate of interest which it is to bear, and the participation of the several banks therein, and submit their recommendations to the Federal Farm Loan Board for approval. When approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board the bonds shall be executed by the Farm Loan Commissioner and the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board, as herein provided.

"The expenses of the bond committee and of the sale of bonds shall be charged against the several land banks in proportion to their participation in the proceeds.

"The presidents of the Federal land banks shall receive no additional compensation for their services as members of the bond committee, but shall be paid necessary traveling expenses."

SEC. 309. That subdivisions (a) and (b) of the eighth paragraph of section 22 of the Federal farm loan act are amended to read as follows:

SEC. 310. That section 25 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 25. That if there shall be default under the terms of any indorsed first mortgage held by a Federal land bank under the provisions of this title, the National Farm Loan Association through which said mortgage was received by said Federal land bank shall be notified of said default. Said association may thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to make good such default, either by payment of the amount unpaid thereon in cash or by the substitution of an equal amount of Federal farm loan bonds, with all unmatured coupons attached."

SEC. 311. That section 29 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Upon liquidation of any national farm-loan association, the stock in the Federal land bank held by such association shall be canceled and the Federal land bank shall thereupon issue to the borrowers through such association an amount of stock in the Federal land bank equal to the amount of stock held by such borrowers in the liquidated association, such stock to be held by the bank as collateral to the loans of such borrowers and to be paid off and retired at par in the same manner as stock held by borrowers in farm-loan associations, and the Federal land bank shall pay to the borrowers holding such stock the same dividends as are paid to national farm-loan associations by such bank. The personal liability of the stockholders in such liquidated association to the association shall survive such liquidation and shall be vested in the bank in that district, which may enforce the same as fully as the association could if in existence."

TITLE IV.—AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

SEC. 401. That the ninth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal reserve act is amended to read as follows:

"No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal reserve bank unless (a) it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provision of the national bank act, or (b) it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital of at least 60 per cent of the amount sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the national bank act and, under penalty of loss of membership complies with rules and regulations which the Federal Reserve Board shall prescribe fixing the time within which and the method by which the unimpaired capital of such bank shall be increased out of the net income to equal the capital which would have been required if such bank had been admitted to membership under the provisions of clause (a) of this paragraph: Provided, That every such rule or regulation shall require the applying bank to set aside annually not less than 20 per cent of its net income of the preceding year as a fund exclusively applicable to such capital increase."

SEC. 402. That the second paragraph of section 13 of the Federal reserve act is amended and divided into two paragraphs to read as follows:

"Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the Federal Reserve Board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise from being eligible for such discount, and the notes, drafts, and bills of exchange of factors issued as such making advances exclusively to producers of staple agricultural products in their raw state shall be eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States. Notes, drafts, and bills admitted to discount under the terms of this paragraph must have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days, exclusive of days of grace.

"Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice, and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, and subject to regulations and limitations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, any Federal reserve bank may discount or purchase bills of exchange payable at sight or on demand which are drawn to finance the domestic shipment of nonperishable, readily marketable staple agricultural products and are secured by bills of lading or other shipping documents, conveying or securing title to such staples: Provided, That all such bills of exchange shall be forwarded promptly for collection, and demand for payment shall be made with reasonable promptness after the arrival of such staples at their destination: Provided further, That no such bill shall in any event be held by or for the account of a Federal reserve bank for a period in excess of 90 days. In discounting such bills Federal reserve banks may compute the interest to be deducted on the basis of the estimated life of each bill and adjust the discount after payment of such bills to conform to the actual life thereof."

SEC. 403. That the fourth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal reserve act is amended to read as follows:

"Any Federal reserve bank may discount acceptances of the kinds hereinafter described, which have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days' sight, exclusive of days of grace, and which are indorsed by at least one member bank: Provided, That such acceptances if drawn for an agricultural purpose and secured at the time of acceptance by warehouse receipts or other such documents conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples, may be discounted with a maturity at the time of discount of not more than six months' sight, exclusive of days of grace."

SEC. 404. That the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end of section 13 a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 13a. Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice, and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may, subject to regulations and limitations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for an agricultural purpose, or based upon live stock, and having a maturity, at the time of discount, exclusive of days of grace, not exceeding nine months, and such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange may be offered as collateral security for the issuance of Federal reserve notes under the provisions of section 16 of this act: Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills of exchange with maturities in excess of six months shall not be eligible as a basis for the issuance of Federal reserve notes unless secured by warehouse receipts or other such negotiable documents conveying or securing title to readily marketable staple agricultural products or by chattel mortgage upon live stock which is being fattened for market.

"That any Federal reserve bank may, subject to regulations and limitations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, rediscount such notes, drafts, and bills for any Federal intermediate credit bank, except that no Federal reserve bank shall rediscount for a Federal intermediate credit bank any such note or obligation which bears the indorsement of a nonmember State bank or trust company which is eligible for membership in the Federal reserve system, in accordance with section 9 of this act.

"Any Federal reserve bank may also buy and sell debentures and other such obligations issued by a Federal intermediate credit bank or by a national agricultural credit corporation, but only to the same extent as and subject to the same limitations as those upon which it may buy and sell bonds issued under Title I of the Federal farm loan act.

"Notes, drafts, bills of exchange or acceptances issued or drawn by cooperative marketing associations composed of producers of agricultural products shall be deemed to have been issued or drawn for an agricultural purpose, within the meaning of this section, if the proceeds thereof have been or are to be advanced by such association to any members thereof for an agricultural purpose, or have been or are to be used by such association in making payments to any members thereof on account of agricultural products delivered by such members to the association, or if such proceeds have been or are to be used by such association to meet expenditures incurred or to be incurred by the association in connection with the grading, processing, packing, preparation for market, or marketing of any agricultural product handled by such association for any of its members: Provided, That the express enumeration in this paragraph of certain classes of paper of cooperative marketing associations as eligible for rediscount shall not be construed as rendering ineligible any other class of paper of such associations which is now eligible for rediscount.

"The Federal Reserve Board may, by regulation, limit to a percentage of the assets of a Federal reserve bank the amount of notes, drafts, acceptances, or bills having a maturity in excess of three months, but not exceeding six months, exclusive of days of grace, which may be discounted by such bank, and the amount of notes, drafts, bills, or acceptances having a maturity in excess of six months, but not exceeding nine months, which may be discounted by such bank."

SEC. 405. That section 14 of the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositories for and fiscal agents of any national agricultural credit corporation or Federal intermediate credit bank."

SEC. 407. That the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act," approved April 13, 1920, is repealed.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4280) to provide for the incorporation and supervision of corporations formed for the purpose of making agricultural and live-stock loans; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The amendment of the House strikes out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill. The Senate recedes from its disagreement with the House amendment with an amendment which is a substitute for the House amendment. The effect of the substitute amendment is explained in the following paragraphs:

The House bill so restricted the scope of the operations of the national agricultural credit corporations that they would not be able to function. The managers on the part of the House have taken for granted, in the consideration in conference, the fact that it was the intention of the House to make this dual rural credit bill function to the full extent of its ability. Therefore, the conferees have agreed in substance to the provisions in the Senate bill which reinstate in this bill certain features which were eliminated previously by the Committee on Banking and Currency in their desire to harmonize the so-called Capper-McFadden, Lenroot-Anderson, Strong bills into a single composite measure. In doing this there is being created in this bill two distinct and separate rural-credit organizations, namely, the Federal intermediate credit banks and the national agricultural credit corporations. The former is placed under the control and management of the Federal Farm Loan Board and the latter under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

While the two systems will furnish relief to the agricultural interests of the country, the Federal intermediate credit banks will more particularly take care of the needs of a certain class and might come nearer than do the national agricultural credit corporations in taking care of the entire needs of the general agricultural public; the national agricultural credit corporations will make certain the caring for, in a national way, of the live-stock and cooperative marketing requirements.

Your managers took into consideration also the fact that the national agricultural credit corporations will be organized along the same lines that national banks are organized, namely, by private subscription to capital, and, secondly, that the acceptances, collateral trust notes, or debentures issued by them under the provisions of the act carry no tax-exemption privileges, whereas Federal intermediate credit banks are capitalized by the United States Government and are permitted to issue tax-free debentures.

The managers on the part of the House, in agreeing to the Senate provision in regard to the increase from $10,000 to $25,000, as the maximum amount of loans which can be made to an individual by the Federal farm loan system, in lieu of the provision in the House bill which provided the maximum loan limit of $16,000, which, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, might in special cases be raised to $25,000, insisted upon the proviso in the House bill that preference shall be given to applications for loans of $10,000 and under, upon the theory that it was better to fix definitely the loan limit than to leave it to the discretion of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The managers on the part of the House agreed to the inclusion under the operations of the Federal farm loan system of a provision which will bring the Territory of Alaska under the operations of the Federal farm loan system under rules and regulations to be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The managers on the part of the House yielded to the pressure for the extension of the legal life of the War Finance Corporation for a period of nine months instead of for the period of six months as provided in the House bill. Under the provisions agreed upon the active operations of the War Finance Corporation can continue until April 1, 1924. Your managers were governed by the fact that the organization of these credit banks under this bill will take some period of time, and inasmuch as the War Finance Corporation is at present financing the rural credit needs to an extent of nearly $150,000,000, it was thought best to safeguard the possible requirements of the rural credit interests of the country during the interval, it being agreed as a natural sequence of the coming into full operation of these two new credit agencies, supplemented by the increased operations of the Federal land banks and the broadening of the operations of the Federal reserve system to meet the needs of the agricultural interests, that the operation of the War Finance Corporation would gradually be reduced, so that the complete liquidation of this corporation might be had without an additional extension beyond that already provided for in this bill.

The House bill provided for the fixing of the rate of interest to be paid by the borrowers from the national agricultural credit corporations. Your managers gave very careful consideration to this provision and after full conference were compelled to recede to the Senate provision upon the theory that we should not attempt to fix the rate of interest paid by borrowers, as that was a question entirely in the hands of the States, and any attempt on the part of Congress to fix the rate of interest that should be charged borrowers in the several States would be usurping a right which belongs entirely to the States, and if the precedent were established in this instance it might mean the limiting of rates of interest charged by national banks as well, and the further reason that it might deprive the national agricultural credit corporations of the right to fully serve the needs of their agricultural borrowers at a critical time when the rates for money might be high and in the competitive market the collateral trust certificates or debentures issued by these institutions would not be in as favored a position as other obligations issued bearing tax-exemption privileges.

LOUIS T. MCFADDEN,
PORTER H. DALE,
A. P. NELSON,
OTIS WINGO,
HENRY B. STEAGALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield 30 minutes of my hour to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to use or parcel out as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the managers in connection with the conference report on this bill have had a pretty troublesome job on their hands. At the outset and at this moment I want to extend my appreciation to my colleagues, the conferees, both Republicans and Democrats. I also want, as chairman of the committee, to voice my sincere appreciation of the cooperation of those who were opposed to and in favor of this bill in the House Committee on Banking and Currency. They have cooperated faithfully in the development of this bill from time to time, and it has made possible the consummation of this important piece of legislation.

The Senate sent to us two very important measures, the Lenroot-Anderson and Capper-McFadden bills. The House had passed the so-called Strong bill, making certain important amendments to the Federal farm-loan system. The committee consolidated the bill into one composite measure, and the conferees have perfected the bill into what I believe is a workable, dual system of short-time rural credits.

Now, in the few minutes that I have, I want, if possible, to explain to the House the purposes and operation of these two institutions that are provided for in this bill. The first portion of the bill provides for the establishment of the Federal intermediate credit banks, a system which is an adjunct to the Federal farm-loan system; it creates 12 separate individual reservoirs of intermediate credits which are under the management and control of the Federal Farm Loan Board in the 12 Federal land-bank districts.

The management of each institution will be under a board of directors which will be chosen by and under the supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board. These institutions are capitalized by Government money at $60,000,000. You will recall that there was a provision in the bill which provided under certain circumstances—I am speaking of the Senate bill—that the capital could be raised another $60,000,000, making a total capital of $120,000,000. The intended purpose of this was to provide working capital for these institutions to meet the immediate demands of the borrowers. The conferees took into consideration the fact that these institutions are permitted to issue debentures and other obligations which will be sold to the investing public, and the only purpose for which the capital stock was authorized in the first instance was to provide money in sufficient amounts to permit the banks to function in an orderly manner. The conferees took into consideration the fact that a $60,000,000 capital would permit the accumulation of enough credit instruments so that debentures might be issued from time to time and be available for sale to the public to replenish their treasury until the operation could again be repeated. Therefore it was not necessary to increase the capital beyond that provided in the House bill, namely, $60,000,000. In all probability these intermediate credit banks will provide for the issuance and sale of these debentures in lots of $50,000,000 or more, much in the same manner that the Farm Loan Board now issues and sells through banking syndicates the several issues of farm-loan bonds to the investing public.

There is a provision in this bill which makes it possible for the farmers to organize to borrow either through their own banks or through cooperative associations and otherwise. This system was designed more particularly to take care of the Northwest, the Middle West, and the South, but at the same time it would, under certain circumstances, take care of the financing of the remaining sections of the country where present rural banking facilities are not adequate, and is so constituted to also give relief to cooperative marketing associations and to live-stock cattle organizations.

Just a moment to the other kind of banks which we have been pleased to call "national agriculture credit associations" in this measure. The theory of this system has been based largely upon the experience of the operations of the War Finance Corporation during the past few years and is patterned very much after the national bank act. Therefore, the conferees thought best to provide for the management of these institutions in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, because of the fact that the supervision provided in that office at this time is perhaps better fitted and more capable of handling that class of business than other offices. These institutions are to be organized and operated with private capital. The bill provides for the organization of these corporations with $250,000 capital or more. It also provides that these institutions may subscribe up to 20 per cent of their stock in the stock of the rediscount corporation, for which the bill also provides an organization plan, which can give relief and provide additional credits when needed for the farmers of the country by providing these additional discount facilities. These rediscount corporations, whose capital shall be not less than $1,000,000, and the $250,000 corporations have the right to issue debentures and other obligations. These obligations issued by these national agricultural associations do not have the tax exemption privilege, and they do not use nor ask for Government capital. They are private institutions similar to national banks but are not permitted to take deposits and get their money from the sale of acceptances or debentures, under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The other institutions are provided with Government capital and have the right to issue tax-exempt securities.

We have tried to create institutions which would function independently of each other and meet fully the requirements of the agricultural interests of the country, and at the same time provide sufficient safeguards in the way of supervision and security to keep them in the investment channels when their securities were long-time securities rather than to get these new securities into the liquid channels of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. What was the idea, when organizing two kinds of credit institutions, one public and the other private, to grant one the right of tax-exempt securities, or the issue of debentures, and so forth, and deprive the other of that privilege? That ought to be sufficient to show that there will not be any private institutions and that it was intended that there should be none.

Mr. McFADDEN. Oh, the gentleman is entirely wrong, because the gentlemen who appeared before the committee and asked for this legislation did not ask for Government assistance; they said they did not want it. All they wanted was the right to organize and have the right to have these institutions supervised in the same manner as national banks. One thing in particular these people wanted—and I am speaking now of the cattle loan people—was that there should be embodied in this bill a provision which would provide for the licensing of appraisers, men who would go out and investigate the security back of the cattle loans, men whose names meant something. Therefore we have provided that the Secretary of Agriculture shall grant licenses to competent men, when they have passed certain requirements, so that they will be known as national appraisers.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman if those who desired the commercial banks knew at the time they said that they would not want tax-free debentures that the Government was going to have tax-free debentures under the farm-loan bank proposition?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; they knew that. They had full knowledge of that fact, because legislation was pending.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman says that they understood that. Is there anything in the record to show anywhere that there was such a statement made?

Mr. McFADDEN. There is; the statement of Mr. Bixby, president of the National Live Stock Association.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand that there has been inserted into the bill now what was practically section 5 of the Strong bill, creating agencies that were frowned upon by the House and voted out of the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is mistaken. That has not been done. The items from the Strong bill that have been put in are, first, the assumption by the farm loan banks of the operating expenses which are now being paid out of the Treasury. The Federal land banks are fully capable of meeting those expenses. The next item is the permanent organization of the Federal farm loan system, which provides for the election of directors. The other provision is for the consolidated bond issue, and the other proposition provides for fixing the loan limit maximum at $25,000. With the limitation that preference shall be given to applications for loans of $10,000 or under so the poor farmer will always have the preference.

Mr. SNYDER. Then there is nothing in the bill now that compensates for section 5 of the Strong bill, so far as the individual agencies are concerned?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; that was taken out of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman explain what security is behind the debentures issued by the privately owned banks, and what supervision there is over those securities to see that they are ample?

Mr. McFADDEN. I shall be very glad to. These concerns have the right to make loans and advances to borrowers up to 75 per cent of the value of the property pledged, secured by warehouse receipts, chattel mortgages on cattle and other readily marketable products such as eggs, butter, cheese, wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, and so forth.

This will mean that no loan can be made in a greater amount than that per cent of margin which at all times must be kept good. One of the provisions in regard to the cattle loans is for the appraisers to make investigations and appraisals of live stock under license from the Secretary of Agriculture. As I understand the cattle-loaning business, it is necessary that these appraisers and these institutions which make loans must have accurate knowledge of the condition of the herds which are used as security for the loans. These herds are generally out over the ranges, and it is my understanding that we have provided in this bill for most expert examinations so that the banks that make the loans will know that the security is ample and is being properly protected. Now, the bill has a provision for securing——

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman has not answered the question.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will answer if the gentleman will give me time. There is an additional provision that the loans can be made and secured by marketable commodities or warehouse receipts or any evidence showing goods in transit, and they are permitted to loan up to 75 per cent of the value. There are other safeguards, such as supervision by the Comptroller of the Currency and the same protection in the way of management that any other bank has.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask if all these provisions, except perhaps that of the appraisers, were in the House bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. Many were.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire information as to what changes the conferees have made in the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that owing to the short time in conference it has been impossible for us to get the report printed and back from the printing office. There are many changes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What I desire to know is, What fundamental changes are made?

Mr. McFADDEN. They are these: We have transferred the management of these privately owned credit banks, which are known as agricultural credits banks, from the Federal farm-loan system to the management of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and we have provided, also, for appraisers and examiners to be licensed by the Secretary of Agriculture. We have made some changes in regard to the issuance of debentures—giving to these institutions the right of issue, and, also, to issue acceptances.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There are no fundamental changes?

Mr. McFADDEN. Those are some of the changes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish the gentleman would answer the question which I have asked. I do not think he has answered it. My question was this: What is the security behind the debentures which these privately owned institutions issue, and what supervision is given anywhere over the amount of security and its character upon which the debentures are issued?

Mr. McFADDEN. In the first place the farmer goes to one of the $250,000 banks—or it may have a larger capital. He gives his note secured by warehouse certificates or other evidence that a certain amount of goods are held. You have the borrower's note secured by goods with more than 25 per cent of the face value of the loan and these loans can not be made at a greater rate than 75 cents on the dollar; or it may be that the borrower is a live-stock man who puts up a chattel mortgage at 75 cents on the dollar; or if he be a cotton planter he puts up cotton to secure his note in the same manner. Now, if the bank which makes these loans, later on needs more money to take care of its demands, it can take these secured notes, indorse them and take them to the rediscount bank and guarantee them. When debentures are issued all of these securities are placed in trust to secure same, and the debentures are placed in the hands of the investing public by sale in the same manner as any other bond or security is sold. They are amply secured first by the maker; then by the goods, at 75 per cent of their value; and then the bank and then the rediscount bank. It will be readily seen therefore that the loan is well secured and the provision about which the gentleman has asked amply protects the maker of the loan, first, through the scrutiny of the bank making the initial loan; second, through the scrutiny of the rediscount corporation; and third, through the supervision by the live-stock appraisers appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the bank examiners appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will first yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, my colleague.

Mr. LUCE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the directors of the farm-loan banks operating as intermediate credit banks are named by the Government?

Mr. McFADDEN. I said they could act as directors. I may have misspoke myself in that respect, but I think not. In the Strong bill provision is made for the election of directors of the Federal land banks where the Farm Loan Board elects three directors, the association or agency elects three, and the gentleman is familiar with the process by which they choose the seventh man——

Mr. LUCE. I am.

Mr. McFADDEN. These directors may act in the management——

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will permit, is it not absolutely prescribed in the bill that the directors of the Federal farm-loan banks shall be directors of the intermediate credit banks? I understood the gentleman to say something indicating a change in the conference.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I was explaining more particularly the operation of these banks under the terms of the bill.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman will remember that the Strong bill, while we contemplated only a farm-mortgage system, provided for the election of four out of seven directors by the borrowers on real-estate mortgages. Does the bill in its present shape still provide that the loaning of money on personal chattel security to the extent of $600,000,000 shall be in the hands of directors, the majority of whom have been chosen by the sufferance of borrowers on real security?

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, the provision in the bill is very clear that these directors may be the same directors. The gentleman has virtually answered his own question.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. LUCE. In the confusion I could not hear distinctly the reading of the title of the bill, but I understood the reading clerk to say that it included a phrase "to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds." Did I hear correctly?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LUCE. I do not recall, in any of the three bills which the committee had under consideration, any provision relating to the extending and stabilizing of the market for United States bonds. Has any such provision been inserted?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think it has. That is the usual language followed in the amendment of these different acts. I imagine the same course is pursued here. There is, however, I will say to the gentleman, a provision with which he is perfectly familiar: That these institutions are designated as fiscal agents of the Government and can buy and sell Government bonds. It may be that in this respect that construction can be given, that this power to act as fiscal agents would have a stabilizing effect on Government bonds. There is no other provision in the bill that tends to stabilize the market for Government bonds that I know of.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I now used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used 22 minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. BEGG. The thing that I am most interested in is the security. If I should buy in the warehouse $100,000 worth of cotton at 40 cents a pound, could I borrow from this bank and mortgage that cotton for $75,000?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; but you would have to look the banker in the eye, just as you do now. He would take into consideration the same elements of risk that he takes when you go to the banker now. This proposition does not mean easy money for the borrower any more than the operation of any other institution means that. The banker who loans money will always see to it that the margin of collateral is always maintained. But a man must not expect to get money for nothing under this bill, and he must at all times be willing, and compelled, to put up ample security.

Mr. BEGG. Let us carry that on one step farther. Suppose I get the $75,000 and cotton then breaks in price while it is in the warehouse. What is the security that the man in New York has behind the debentures?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is playing on his imagination a little bit. That is an ordinary banking transaction, and those transactions are protected by all bankers. I can not imagine any banker permitting a loan to be made on that kind of a basis and permitting his security to depreciate. If he does, he will suffer a considerable loss. My experience with banks is that they are watching those things, and watching the collateral at all times.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. He will call for a margin?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; he will call for a margin or dispose of the goods which are held as security before the price drops below the face of his loan.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. Have the conferees made any change at all in the plan of organization and control of the 12 intermediate credit banks? And is the money still exclusively to be supplied by the Government, and is all of the stock to be held by the Government?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; so far as capital is concerned; and the particular additional capital which these banks will require will be obtained from the sale of the obligations and debentures.

Mr. HUSTED. Then, so far as the 12 intermediate banks are concerned, the conferees have made no change?

Mr. McFADDEN. Not of any moment.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Under one of the provisions of the bill the advance of 75 per cent can only be obtained in cases where the product is practically to be immediately marketed?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the conference report extend the life of the War Finance Corporation up to March 1, 1924?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; it does. The House bill provided for an extension up to January 1, and the Senate provision provided the nine months' extension, and the House conferees, under the circumstances, yielded to the Senators.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under that provision the War Finance Corporation, after March 1, 1924, can not advance money to the farm-credit associations to market their products after that date. What is the maximum amount that can be borrowed by any farm cooperative association through the banks set up by this bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. It has been estimated at somewhere from $600,000,000 to $1,200,000,000. Under the rediscount provision some of these institutions could rediscount with the Federal reserve system.

It also provides for the sale of acceptances to banks and to the Federal reserve system through open-market transactions. So it will be difficult to answer what amount of credit might be available.

Mr. BARKLEY. The committee's idea is that any such association will be able to borrow all the money that it needs.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the idea, and I think they will soon organize, so there will be no need to continue the War Finance Corporation beyond this date. I think these institutions will care for the needs of the farmer, so that the corporation will go out of business March 1 next.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Do the 12 Government land banks have the power to issue $60,000,000 of exempt securities?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; and many times that amount. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I will try to make a brief and concise statement of the purposes of this bill as well as I can in the short time allotted to me. I ask not to be interrupted until I finish my statement. In passing, before I forget it, I want to state that I do not agree with all that is in the statement that has been made by the managers on the part of the House. The principal changes that have been made in conference is what you are interested in. This bill as now reported combines into one bill the three bills known as the Strong bill, the Capper-McFadden bill, and the Lenroot-Anderson bill. So far as the Strong bill is concerned, the bill is the same as it passed the House, with two exceptions—that is, as the Strong bill passed the House the other day. Section 5, which caused so much controversy in the House, and which provided for the direct loan, is not in the bill, was not in this bill as it passed the House, and it is not included in the conference report.

There are only two changes that are in the Strong bill that were not in the Strong bill when it passed the House. They are the ones with reference to the secretary-treasurers and the other with reference to Alaska.

Section 305 in the conference report has the provision that no such secretary-treasurer—that is, of the local farm-loan association—shall engage in making loans eligible at the Federal land bank through any other mortgage company or agency and the making of any such loan by a secretary-treasurer shall forthwith work a forfeiture of his office.

That was in the triplet bill that passed the other day, but it was not in the Strong bill as it passed separately. In conference we have agreed to a proposition proposed by the Senate that would authorize the Farm Loan Board to permit, and is intended to permit if they see fit, one Pacific coast Federal land bank to set up a branch bank in Alaska available under the same permit that the House authorized in Porto Rico. Those are the only two possible changes in the Strong bill as it originally passed the House.

That leaves the Capper bill and the Lenroot-Anderson bill and what changes have the conferees made? That is what you are entitled to know. There are several minor changes, but the major change which would perhaps cause a man to doubt and come to a different conclusion than he had when the bill passed the House is this: As the bill passed the House, it was urged by the Senators that we had absolutely destroyed the Capper corporations—that is, the system that provided for independent private capital with no Government aid. They said, and truly, that we had taken away from both the $250,000 corporations authorized by the Capper bill and the $1,000,000 rediscount corporations the right to issue debentures and left them so that they were compelled to go for funds to the intermediate credit banks created under the Lenroot-Anderson proposition, being in the Federal land banks, the officers and directors of which are the officers and directors of the Federal land banks and the capital stock of which is contributed and subscribed by the United States Government to the extent of $5,000,000 for each of the 12 banks.

They contended that the House bill left the Capper corporations, the Capper banks, the private banks, with the only recourse for a workable capital other than their capital stock, to go to these intermediate credit banks. This is the position of the Senate. They said that they should have had the right to have a separate and independent control, just like national banks had, to be under the same control as national banks—that is, the Comptroller of the Currency; that they should be permitted to issue debentures as originally provided by the Capper bill when it passed the Senate. On these two propositions a majority of the House conferees yielded to the Senate, so the bill as we bring it back to you to-night restores the independence of the Capper corporations. They will have absolutely no connection, legally or otherwise, through rediscounts, or anything else, with the intermediate credit banks created under the Lenroot-Anderson Government-aided corporations, but they will be under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency. They furnish their own capital stock by private subscription. They may issue debentures to the extent of ten times their capital stock. They are identical with the original national banks with two exceptions, or almost identical. The skeleton outline of the formation of the smaller corporations, the $250,000 corporations, are identical with the original plan of the national banks with two exceptions. One is they do not have the right of note issue, and the other is that they do not have the right to receive demand deposits. They get their funds only in two ways, either by borrowing on bills payable or issuing debentures. That is the change that was made in conference with respect to the Capper corporations.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I would rather wait until I have finished the complete statement. What other changes have we made? First, there was another change in the Capper corporations. As the bill passed the House we had provided that the interest to be charged to the customers, to use a common expression, on rediscount, trust companies, or cooperative associations that might bring paper to them, should not exceed the rediscount rate at the intermediate credit banks by more than 1½ per cent. That was in lieu of the Senate provision which, upon the question of interest charges, provided that the law of the State in which the Capper bank is located should control upon that point. The Senate conferees insisted strenuously that that restriction should not be placed upon these private corporations. They said, first of all, that the House provision was objectionable because it made the basic rate the same as the basic rate of a Government-controlled institution, a Government-subsidized institution, an institution that had the benefit of exemption from taxation, and that those benefits in all probability would so reduce its rediscount rate as to absorb completely the 1½ per cent spread and would leave the Capper corporations practically helpless, so that they could not operate. The Senate conferees further insisted to the House that as these were private corporations, formed for the purpose of making money, competitive banks, they could be depended upon within the limits of the usury laws of the States to protect those who dealt with them. Finally a majority of the House conferees yielded on that proposition. Those are the major changes that were made in the Capper bill.

I did forget one change that was made in the Strong bill, and I will return to it for a moment. As the conferees bring you the Strong bill to-night the maximum loan to any one person, land loan, under the Federal farm loan act is increased to $25,000, the Senate provision, with one of the House provisions, giving preference to loans of $10,000 or less.

Now, let us take up the Lenroot-Anderson proposition. As a matter of fact, there are no changes in the Lenroot-Anderson bill made in the conference to which any friend of that bill would object, but those who are against it will ask whether there are any changes to which those who oppose the Lenroot-Anderson bill would object. I think not. I can understand the basic objection that some gentlemen have, and for their objection I have great respect, and that one basic objection is that the Government furnishes the capital for these Lenroot-Anderson institutions. The bill as we bring it to you to-night is unchanged in that respect. We did cut out one provision, and that is technical, which was really put in there through a mistaken idea on the part of the House, that would do the opposite of what the House intended to do and which was a restriction that was tighter than any commercial bank now has, either under section 5200 of the Federal statutes or any State bank in Ohio or elsewhere.

Let me say this to you conservative men who have been afraid of these institutions: I have studied this question and I want to say to you in my judgment there is not one single thing that you can object to in either one of these bills on the question of soundness, except your basic objection to the Government furnishing the capital of these Lenroot-Anderson banks. Why do I say that? What about the paper, what about the security, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and others ask? Why, under the Federal law at this hour, under the national bank law at this hour, national banks can loan on notes secured by warehouse receipts 87½ per cent on the value of cotton and other basic commodities in the process of marketing. Have you heard of any protests to that? You hear protests on the part of honest, cautious bankers that that is too close a restriction. The loans under both sections of this bill are as safe, are as sound, as any loans that any national bank is authorized to make under your national banking law, and in some respects they are more closely restricted. I challenge any man to point to the contrary. I grant you that as the Capper bill and the Lenroot-Anderson bill came from the Senate I would not have signed my name to any report that approved them. They were wide open at both ends and loose in the middle.

But your committee has amended them as best they could in the limited time we had. They put in the customary limitation clause, and they put in the customary penalty clauses that are now in the national bank law, and it is my judgment, gentlemen, while the bill is not going to do what the farmer has been led by some to believe it will do, yet in my candid judgment the good in it outweighs the bad, and any man this night can vote for this bill feeling sure that if disappointment comes it is going to be upon the part of the farmer and not upon the part of some conservative legislator fearful that he is voting for something unsound.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I understood from the colloquy which the gentleman from Arkansas has had that these loans could only be made on products readily marketable?

Mr. WINGO. The loans to which I referred are those secured by warehouse receipts on readily marketable staple agricultural products. You will find in section 5200 of the national bank law to-day almost the identical language that authorizes the national banks to loan on paper thus secured by 115 per cent of value, which means a loan to about 87 per cent of value of the commodity. In other words, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I am insisting and I made a fight before the conferees to get section 5200 liberalized. Why did we do it? Because I know that all over this land national banks are absolutely losing safe, sound loans of this character, because the State banks doing business across the street from them are not subject to the restrictions of section 5200 while the national banks are. There is no question about it.

Mr. BURTON. But will the gentleman please explain how, if these products are to be readily marketable, the time is fixed on them from six months to three years? Do national banks make loans on three years' time or even one year's time?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the gentleman knows that national banks, banks of demand deposits, that must at all times keep their assets liquid in order to meet the deposit demand, do not make these long loans. If they did, under the law, if the maturity is over six months, the paper is not eligible for rediscount at the Federal reserve bank. Such paper is not barred because unsound or unsafe, but solely because of long maturity it is not eligible for note issue. That is the reason why this new system is proposed, free from the demand of demand deposits. Instead of issuing demand currency on rediscount it is proposed to issue long-time debentures.

Mr. BURTON. I still do not understand why the period of three years should have been inserted here.

Mr. WINGO. Well, the gentleman is certainly very badly mistaken if he does not make a clear distinction between the particular classes of loans to which his colleague referred on the third proposition. The gentleman read the bill as it passed the House on that proposition, did he not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. It is more conservative in the conference report, if anything, than as the bill passed the House.

Mr. BURTON. One other thing. The gentleman from Arkansas says the private banks are subject to a secondary liability. Is the secondary liability attached to that equally with the other class of banks? That is a very material difference, is it not?

Mr. WINGO. There is not any provision covering that that I recall at the moment.

Mr. BURTON. That is a very material difference. Is there any provision in this bill which exempts the Government in specific language from any liability?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman read that?

Mr. WINGO. We have inserted in conference at the insistence of the House conferees this provision on that question:

> The United States Government shall assume no liability, direct or indirect, for any debentures or other obligations issued under this section, and all such debentures and other obligations shall contain conspicuous and appropriate language, to be prescribed in form and substance by the Federal Farm Loan Board and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, clearly indicating that no such liability is assumed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I repeat that the bill reported by the conference and which is offered for your adoption is a composite bill embodying the three different bills known as the Strong bill, the McFadden-Capper bill, and the Lenroot-

Anderson bill. The Strong bill embodies certain amendments to the Federal farm loan act to which the House agreed the other day when it passed that bill as a separate measure. The so-called Capper-McFadden bill provides for the creation of two separate kinds of corporations. Both of these corporations are to have their capital stock subscribed entirely through private capital. One class of corporations is to have a capital stock of not less than $250,000 and the other class, known as the rediscounting corporation, must have a capital stock of at least $1,000,000. These corporations are banks in effect, but are not permitted to receive demand deposits. The smaller corporation procures its working capital, other than its capital stock, through either an issue of debentures, the sale of its paper, or the rediscounting of its paper at the rediscount corporation. The rediscount corporation procures its additional working capital through either bills payable, the sale of its paper, or the issuance of debentures, or by all three methods. It is contended that these corporations will be used primarily to finance the live-stock industry, though they are authorized to handle agricultural paper of a general character having maturity of not exceeding nine months, while the live-stock paper may have a maturity of not exceeding three years.

The Lenroot-Anderson system provides for 12 intermediate credit banks, each having a capital stock of five million contributed by the Government, which banks are set up in connection with the 12 Federal land banks. The directors of the Federal land banks are made ex officio directors of the intermediate credit banks, and the Federal Farm Loan Board will have the same control over these banks that it has over the Federal land banks. The function and chief business of these intermediate credit banks will be to discount or purchase from banks, agricultural credit corporations, incorporated live-stock loan companies, cooperative banks, and incorporated cooperative credit or marketing associations paper representing loans which have been made in the first instance for an agricultural purpose or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of live stock. It is intended that these banks will thus rediscount that class of paper having a maturity that is longer than the maturity now permitted to be rediscounted at the Federal reserve banks. The express provision on that point limits them to paper having a maturity of not less than six months or more than three years, while under the Federal reserve act such paper can not be rediscounted at the Federal reserve bank having a maturity of more than six months, although this very bill carries an amendment to the Federal reserve act which will permit the rediscount at the Federal reserve banks of some paper issued for agricultural purposes or based upon live stock having a maturity of not exceeding nine months.

These intermediate credit banks will procure their additional funds other than their capital stock by issuing bills payable or long-time debentures with a maturity not exceeding five years and limited in an amount not in excess of ten times the paid-up capital stock and surplus. Nowhere in the act are these intermediate credit banks authorized to make loans direct to the farmers, but the farmer to get the benefits of it must come through some bank or incorporated organization of the character which I have named.

In addition to setting up the two new systems which I have described, this act makes certain amendments to the Federal reserve act which are very necessary, among them being a specific provision repealing the so-called progressive rediscount rate law. The bill also provides for an extension of the War Finance Corporation to February 29, 1924.

I wish to reiterate what I have said before, that this bill does not contain all the evil that has been charged to it, nor does it contain all the virtues that have been ascribed to it. The farmers, who have been led to believe that this bill will bring about a credit millennium, are doomed to disappointment. I also wish to direct attention to the fact that there is nothing in the bill that requires a bank to loan money to a farmer without security or for any length of time that the farmer wishes, as some enthusiastic friends of the measure seem to think. The old, old problem of credits, especially rural credits, is not entirely solved by this measure. The best that can be said is that it makes a start in taking care of the so-called intermediate credits. Let me say to my Democratic friends that the Democratic members of the committee have taken this bill as the best thing that the administration would permit us to have for the farmer. As a matter of fact, the Capper bill and the Lenroot-Anderson bill were held up in the Senate until just a few days ago, and were rushed through the Senate finally when the Republicans found that it was necessary to get them out of the way of the ship subsidy bill. Many Senators have frankly admitted that they did not know what the bills really contained, and many of them voted for the bills not because they favored this class of legislation, but solely to get them out of the way of the ship subsidy bill. They unloaded these bills upon the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, with the private assurance that whatever evils they contained would be eliminated by the House committee, and that that committee could be depended upon to cure their defects. Unfortunately the time has been so short and the pressure so great on our committee that we have not had the opportunity to give these bills the consideration and the attention which their magnitude required. I doubt not that in our haste we have overlooked some things and have left some things in that may rise up and plague us, but we have done the best we could.

The Democratic members of the committee have felt that it was the intention of the Republican leaders of both Houses to get this measure in a jam so that it could not be brought out in time to be enacted into law and that a situation could be created by which the Democrats could be blamed for the failure to act. But the Democratic members of the committee have at all times stood ready and willing to cooperate and have put forth every effort to prevent a failure, and as a matter of fact when a majority of the Republicans following the sincere judgment of a majority of the Republican House leaders failed to report the bill out of the committee we Democrats went to the rescue. On Saturday night the Republicans outvoted us so that my motion to report the bill failed on a tie vote, but Sunday afternoon I got more of the Democratic members present and finally our motion to report the bill out was adopted.

I regret that for two years this administration has drifted along without doing anything to solve that other great problem which must be solved before agriculture can prosper, and that is the question of transportation and marketing. Freight rates are still so high and so discriminatory that in many sections of the country farm products rot in the fields while the ultimate consumer is either compelled to do without them or must pay an exorbitant price. At one end stands the farmer who in many instances gets less than the cost of production, while at the other end stands the consuming public paying an ever constantly rising exorbitant price for the same products. This Republican Congress either lacks the capacity to deal with this problem or else it is indifferent to the distress which such a situation has produced. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND].

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks, I submit the following letters from Mr. Roy B. Epps, of Athens, Ga., my home city, an ex-service man who is now a patient in United States Veterans' Hospital No. 63, Lake City, Fla. I do not know anything about the situation at this hospital or the treatment the inmates generally are receiving. I do know, however, that Mr. Epps is an honorable and truthful man and enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him. I am printing these letters by his permission. I consented to do so in the interest of the service generally, and particularly in the interest of Mr. Epps and other inmates in this hospital. I think the conduct referred to by Mr. Epps as set forth in these communications is an outrage, and every physician and officer who is a party to it should be called to account therefor. I particularly call the attention of the Senate investigating committee, of which Mr. REED of Missouri is chairman, to these letters and the charges set forth therein:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' HOSPITAL NO. 63,
Lake City, Fla., January 23, 1923.

Hon. C. H. BRAND,
Athens, Ga.

DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * * *

Millions of the people's money is being spent for the treatment of disabled veterans, and I know that these people expect the very best treatment that money can provide. The general public does not know the inefficiency, the incompetency, and neglect with which some of these hospitals are handled. Lake City is certainly a case in point.

As you know, I was sent to Lake City hospital in November for treatment for asthma. After being examined by the ward surgeon, he informed me that nothing could be done for my disability. I then requested to be sent back home, since nothing could be done here; asked him verbally more than once and then by letter, and was told that I could not be discharged under three months except against medical advice. But I needed treatment, and I knew that treatment could be had at home; so I wrote the Atlanta office asking that authority be given for my immediate discharge. The reply, dated December 4, is inclosed, reference to which will be made in a later paragraph of this letter. My writing Atlanta seems to have incensed the medical officer in charge and the ward surgeon, and they have seemingly done everything possible since to make life disagreeable for me.

The ward surgeon practically ignored my case, even while I was quite sick with dengue fever. All the medicine ordered while under his care was aspirin on two different occasions. I persisted in asking that something be done, to have him walk off generally leaving me talking to myself. Then one day he said there were symptoms of tuberculosis, but that I could not be transferred to a tuberculosis ward at that time, as no beds were available in those wards. The fact is that there were available beds, and I was so informed by the surgeon of those wards and by certain patients there I knew. I therefore took the matter up with the medical officer in charge in an endeavor to get the transfer, stating that if I did have symptoms of tuberculosis I should be in charge of a tuberculosis specialist for observation and treatment. He promised to handle my case at once, to make the transfer, and also to talk to the new surgeon about my asthma. Nothing whatever was done. Several days later, while sick and disgusted, I told the ward surgeon frankly what I thought of such treatment and that something had to be done. That day, after giving me a general upbraiding for finding fault with a "doctor," he did complete the transfer.

The new surgeon made an examination, listened to my history, and ordered a dose of calomel. I had taken calomel on the day preceding, so this made me very sick. After a couple of days I felt better, and then was told by the nurse that other medicine had been prescribed for me. Thinking that I had a right to know the nature of the medicine, I asked and was told that a patient was not supposed to know anything about the medicine he took, and she grew very angry. Well, it seemed that I would be compelled to leave the hospital and go somewhere for ordinarily humane treatment. Decided, however, that I ought to tell the medical officer in charge about it once more, and if he wouldn't make any effort in my behalf I would leave. This officer promised that things would be righted at once, that he would talk to the surgeon and see that I got adequate attention. This he either did not do or the ward surgeon has failed to comply with his instructions. I have repeatedly asked him for treatment and tried to tell him of the case, only to get the reply, "Oh, forget it." The only special medicine that I have gotten has been a home doctor's prescription, copy of which I asked the assistant surgeon to have filled for me, and it took a "near fight" to get that.

Some time ago I went to the dentist for necessary dental work. Teeth were in bad condition and work was actually needed. The dentist absolutely refused to do a thing without definite authority from the district office. It became necessary for me to wire Mr. Bryson to get the attention, a thing that other patients get on request from the dentist. Only this morning the dentist called me over for an appointment.

Eyes gave me trouble. After examination by the eye doctor, was told that I needed new glasses badly, but that same could not be furnished at Government expense. He said that lenses would cost me $12 and the frames $5. I asked him to order them and I would try to get reimbursed later. Seeing him again after a few days, he informed me that he would be able to furnish the glasses complete for $12. Other men are furnished glasses free of charge as necessary medical treatment.

In the ward no sick calls are made, as is the daily custom in other hospitals. Never have I seen the ward surgeon go to the patients and listen to complaints on service, etc. The medical officer in charge of the hospial has never been known to do such a thing.

A workingman's diet is served to all patients. Ambulatory patients, infirmary patients, and all get the same food, prepared in the same way. Complaints galore as to half-cooked meats, dirty dishes, etc., are made to nurses and doctors without avail. I wish you could see for yourself from the standpoint of the sick man. A syphilitic negro cook was employed in the general kitchen until the commanding officer discharged him, only when forced to do so by pressure of the patients. I understand that this same negro is back on duty in the hospital bakery, even though the hospital bacteriologist made a written statement that a blood test of this man showed that he was suffering from syphilis.

Referring to the letter addressed to me from Mr. Bryson, district manager in re matter of discharge, inclosed, the ward surgeon one day told me that he had a letter from Atlanta on my case in the office and that I might come down and read it. There it was on his desk—an open letter, the envelope gone, and addressed to me personally. I demanded to know who had opened it and where he had found it, and was referred to the commanding officer. The commanding officer finally said that the letter had come through the office—and I could get no other information on it. All patients' mail is handled through the personnel office, there being no post office on the reservation. Then, it seems that he had intercepted my letter. I am especially anxious that you start an investigation of this matter as a protection to patients and public in general in the future. The commander of the local D. A. V. post will make affidavit to the fact that the commanding officer requested him to have all D. A. V. mail come through the hospital. The inference is clear.

You can understand, Judge, from the foregoing that I have personally been under a terrible mental strain since being in this place, and that I am very desirous of getting away. I want you to use your influence in getting me home treatment, or else compensation sufficient to allow me to go home and secure the proper medical treatment. In conclusion, I want to thank you for the interest you have taken in me in the past and assure you that I will appreciate anything that you can do for me in this instance.

Any investigation as to conditions in this hospital will have to be made through the patients, instead of through the medical officers, if these things are uncovered.

Very respectfully,

ROY B. EPPS.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU, HOSPITAL NO. 63,
Lake City, Fla., February 14, 1923.

Hon. C. H. BRAND,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Supplementing the facts given in my previous letter to you regarding conditions in this hospital, I wish to add the following:

When I first came here I was placed in a room with a patient who was taking treatment for syphilis. Later on still another man suffering with the same disease and with a running sore was placed in the bed next to mine. Due to the fact that but one wash bowl and one stool was available, it was necessary for me and 17 other men to have to use the same equipment. These men were not removed until a vigorous protest was made.

When I was transferred from this ward to another, supposedly for observation for tuberculosis, I was placed in a bed next to a man who was almost dead with the disease. Patients are not segregated in any way, but placed together, whether under observation or far advanced, and you can readily see that a man without the disease is placed in great danger, especially in my case.

In my case no treatment was begun whatever except as mentioned in previous letter until about the 27th of January, when my three months' period was about up. Now they are trying to do something for me in order to keep me here longer.

I mention these facts to show the utter indifference and carelessness with which men are handled in this hospital. If I do not already have tuberculosis I have certainly had the very best opportunity for contracting it that a man ever had. All statements that I have made to you in regard to these conditions can be fully substantiated.

Hoping that you will be able to do something and advise me of same, I am Very respectfully yours,

ROY B. EPPS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] very properly pointed out the main cases for legitimate criticism of this bill. I can understand the viewpoint of gentlemen who oppose the bill for what they regard as fundamental defects. I have no quarrel with any gentleman who objects to either of the fundamental principles of this measure against which objection has been lodged. Such views are natural for those of more conservative ideas. I refer to the provision by which the Government becomes a stockholder and the owner of the capital stock of the Federal intermediate credit banks established under the Lenroot-Anderson plan, and I refer also to the provision which gives the Federal intermediate credit banks the privilege of tax-free securities. I can understand the viewpoint of objection to that provision. But I have discovered that not many gentlemen in this House who are so earnestly opposed to the issuance of tax-free securities have found any trouble in supporting this bill, which in effect looks toward the issuance of some $600,000,000 of additional securities of that kind by the Federal intermediate credit banks.

Those objections, on the part of any gentleman who holds these views, may properly be lodged against this bill. The only other objection that can be substantiated and sustained is that the measure, to some extent at least, is not scientifically drawn, is not drawn in an orderly manner, and sets up two systems—one in competition with the other. But you all know the circumstances under which this legislation has been prepared, and I may say to you that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, after having reported the Strong bill and its passage through this body, took up the Capper bill and had that ready to submit to the House. Just as we had finished that work the suggestion was submitted to us that we must have the Lenroot-Anderson bill and put them both in one measure and the Strong bill was to be included—making three bills in one. So when we took up that task we were forced to go about it without sufficient time, and I am frank to confess that there is something of inconsistency in attempting to set up in the same measure the two systems under the bill passed by the House.

The Capper banks, as originally contemplated, were bound by the limitations as to interest rates and the control that the Government institutions were bound by, and yet without the advantages which the Government institution have. The Federal intermediate credit banks were to be owned by the Government and given the right to issue tax-free securities. And so, when we got into conference on these measures the conference committee was in the same attitude that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House found itself in at the outset. We were, in the first place, ordered to take these two measures and put them into one, and make them workable, each side demanding that its scheme be preserved in all its purity, and that some things in the other be eliminated.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Not now; my time is limited. And when the House passed the two measures it struck out of the Capper bill, as to both of the banks provided for in the Capper bill, the right to issue debentures under the same terms and threw the same interest-rate restrictions around them that were carried in the other measure—the Federal intermediate credit banks.

It is easy to see that the Capper banks could not function if bound by the same restrictions in interest to be charged as applied to the Federal intermediate credit banks, which have the right to issue tax-exempt debentures and enjoy Government subsidies not extended the other institutions. The conference committee desired to do all considered possible to make the plan work. We labored hard night and day at our task in utmost endeavor to carry out the mandate imposed upon us by the House.

When we began our report the conference committee had the job of taking the two measures, putting them into one bill, and making it workable. The House had so amended the Capper bill that in my judgment we might as well not have attempted to provide for the organization of any of these institutions. No institutions would have been organized other than these intermediate credit banks provided for in the measure that passed the House.

When we got into conference we soon found the Capper bill had some friends, and they insisted on the right to issue debentures being restored to the $250,000 corporation, and also the rediscount corporations provided for in the Capper bill. They further insisted that the restrictions as to interest rates, which would have made it impossible for these institutions to do business, should be stricken from the bill.

The conference committee took it for granted that the House meant what it said when they attempted to pass the two measures embodied in one, and so to meet the necessities of the situation and to carry out the manifest purpose of the House, we tried to reach such agreement as will enable these institutions provided in the Capper bill to do business as well as the intermediate credit banks. Without some of these changes, I do not hesitate to say that the rediscount banks provided in the Capper bill would never have been organized, because there would have been no reason for anybody to invest money in such institutions.

The fact is that we were confronted with a situation which required that we either strike the rediscount banks from the bill or find a way to make them workable. This was the contention that confronted the conference committee. We did the best we could. The result is before you.

Now, I want to call attention to another thing. The House yielded on one proposition in the Strong bill. You remember when the matter was up the other day—I refer to the maximum limit of loans to be authorized by the Federal land banks. When that measure was before the House I opposed the plan embodied in the Strong bill as against all other members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, with two or three exceptions. But we submitted that question to a vote and the House adopted the plan fixing the limit at $16,000 and providing $25,000 might be loaned in special cases when approved by the Farm Loan Board.

It was insisted that would lead to confusion and we struck it out. The argument was made that it would be unwise to have the Farm Loan Board passing on individual cases, that the result would be that the Farm Loan Board would simply issue regulations to the various land banks authorizing loans to the amount of $25,000, so it was decided to set that amount as the limit, with provision that preference be given loans not exceeding $10,000. In my judgment this change in the farm loan act is a mistake. I fought it, but the House was against me in one instance and the conference committee in the other. We had to do the best we could in this as in other instances as to the control of the farm loan banks; we worked out a plan that divides the power between the associations, borrowers, and the Farm Loan Board. The associations select the seventh member, naming three, one of whom shall be designated by the board, with the right of removal for cause. I believe the plan will work well and should satisfy all concerned. I hope the House will approve the report. The bill will help the farmers of the country to some extent at least. But I wish to say in this connection that in my judgment it will fall far short of curing all his ills. The farmer of the country must be relieved of some of his burdens in taxes—direct and indirect—and transportation charges, before he can prosper as he should, and something must be done to cut down the spread between what he gets for his products and the price paid by the consumer. Nothing short of this will bring real relief to agriculture.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, for some time past I have taken an interest in the national cemeteries in Europe, of which there are eight—six being in France, one in Belgium, and one in England, and in which cemeteries there are now 30,587 bodies. I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD a communication signed by Thomas V. Fields, State commander of the National Disabled Soldiers' League, who has visited each of these cemeteries and who has made a detailed report. I ask that that be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL DISABLED SOLDIERS' LEAGUE,
NEW JERSEY STATE HEADQUARTERS,
Journal Square, Jersey City, February 8, 1923.

Congressman WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN GOODYKOONTZ: I am very glad to acknowledge your letter of January 29. I deeply regret that I was unable to answer prior to now, but I have been away resting from the effects of a very severe ocean voyage.

As you request, I am very glad to herewith furnish you a detailed account of my observation in the American cemeteries in France, Belgium, and England. I am going to relate to you in a plain, ordinary way, without camouflage or exaggerating, just what I saw and learned while on this trip.

There are eight national cemeteries in Europe, six of which are in France, one in Belgium, and one in England. There are 30,587 bodies at present in Europe, distributed as follows:

Meuse-Argonne American Cemetery, No. 1232:
Romagne-sous-Montfaucon (Meuse), France	13,938
Unknown	483
St. Mihiel American Cemetery, No. 1233:
Thiaucourt, Meurthe et Moselle, France	4,231
Unknown	157
Somme American Cemetery, No. 636:
Bony, Aisne, France	1,830
Unknown	154
Oise-Aisne American Cemetery, No. 608:
Seringes-et-Nesles, Aisne, France	6,071
Unknown	698
Aisne-Marne American Cemetery, No. 1764:
Belleau, Aisne, France	2,220
Unknown	224
Suresnes American Cemetery, No. 34:
Suresnes, Paris, Seine, France	1,497
Unknown	2
Flanders Field American Cemetery, No. 1252:
Waereghem, Belgium	365
Unknown	29
Brookwood American Cemetery, No. 107-E:
Brookwood, Surrey, England	435

I first visited Suresnes Cemetery, just outside of Paris, and I found this to be the nicest and best kept of all the American cemeteries, which can probably be accounted for because of its close proximity to Paris. However, this cemetery has no chapel or other place where one may offer service or seek shelter. While I was at this cemetery a light rain came up, and I was drenched before I finally reached an old, dilapidated dugout. While in this dugout a mother of one of the boys who rested in this cemetery came in, and she too had to rest in this old dugout until the rain had ceased. I realized then how neglectful we were in not providing a proper place where these mothers and other relatives who visited these cemeteries could retire to offer some prayer for their loved ones resting in this cemetery.

I next visited Aisne-Marne Cemetery, and I found this cemetery in just a fair condition. As in Suresnes, there was no chapel or other place where one could suitably find shelter or rest, and I found the employees or caretakers at this cemetery very unsympathetic. The cemetery itself could be greatly improved in condition, such as roads, sodding the graves, painting the crosses, and a little cooperation from those who are employed there, such as making an honest effort to furnish transportation to visitors and also make efforts to make them feel as though the United States Government really wanted to welcome them in trying to make them feel at home and welcome in their visit to their loved ones' graves who had died for their flag. I say furnish transportation, because there is a car there idle and the cemetery is several miles from the railroad station, and the car is idle, I was informed, most of the time, and the taxi fare from Belleau to the cemetery is outrageous.

I next visited Meuse-Argonne Cemetery, and I found this to be the largest of our cemeteries overseas. The cemetery itself is 6 miles from the nearest railroad station, and this station is upon one of the most poorly conducted branches of the French railroads, and few, if any, go that route. Most people motor from Verdun to the cemetery and return, paying something like $40 for the trip. However, those in poor circumstances have to use the shorter route on this terrible branch railroad, and on reaching there they are then required to pay taxi fare amounting to, as they return the same day, which is in most cases probable, $10. The cemetery itself is laid out upon a slight rise, forming what one would call a slope, and the first appearance is rather nice; but, however, as I entered the cemetery I sank knee-deep in mud. I found the cemetery torn up for the laying of drainage pipes. I found the crosses in a poor condition. Directly facing the cemetery is a large hill, upon which has been built many barracks used for the housing of the men who were employed in the cemetery; also numerous houses used for the officers. I also found a long barracks building, about 75 feet in length, and used as a hostess house. The hostess house itself is a dilapidated affair and impossible to keep warm due to its poor construction. It is maintained by the Young Women's Christian Association, and they have two American ladies who have charge and who do their utmost to make one at home. There are accommodations with 25 beds for those who wish to make a stay not exceeding three days. While in the cemetery I met Mrs. L. J. Hill, of 1441 E Street SE., Washington, D. C., and also of 3228 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, who was visiting the grave of her brother, First Sergt. Hiram J. Johnson. Mrs. Hill felt terribly sad over the condition of the cemetery and complained to me about misrepresentation in letters she received from the War Department at Washington, D. C., informing her how well the graves are being cared for. Mrs. Hill advised me that she had requested the body of her brother to be brought back to the United States, so that she could personally do what the Government was neglecting. I also met a Mr. James T. Richards while at the cemetery, whose address is the Hotel des Allies, Romagne-sous-Montfaucon, who is formally an investigator for the American Graves Registration Service in France and who acted as an investigator and a locater of missing bodies.

Mr. Richards told me—and some 20 other men who were also present at the time, and engaged in the same work, also agreed to the statement—that there are still several hundred bodies in the Argonne Forest that could be located and brought in, but that this work was never vigorously pushed, and that there is absolutely no work of that kind going on now. The inhabitants of the village, which has suffered severely from shell fire, are of a very nice type, but they are loud in their denunciation of the Americans, and especially of the officers who are in command, for the unsympathetic way they handled the American bodies. I found no chapel at this cemetery, and no place where any service could be held, and if it were not for the hostess house it would be a very sad condition indeed. In my wanderings over the reservation I came to the warehouse—at least that was what it resembled to me, though I was later informed that it was a morgue—and resting in this morgue I counted 16 caskets, and upon questioning I was informed that these were to be buried at a later date. The caskets were of the same type as those which our boys were sent home in, and each casket was covered with a flag. There could be no complaint along these lines, except that there was no honor guard, and there seemed to be no good reason for the bodies resting in the morgue.

I next visited Somme American Cemetery, in Bony, Aisne, France. I found this cemetery in a deplorable condition—in fact, most of the bodies are still lying as buried during hostilities—and those in charge informed me that none of these bodies had caskets, but were just buried in blankets and such as could be done under the circumstances existing at that time. There is a lot of room for improvement here. I have been led to believe that there has been some influences brought to bear in Washington, D. C., to prevent the disinterment of these bodies; or, in other words, some influences have been working to prevent these boys receiving the same honors as those in the other cemeteries. And I might add that there are 698 unknown soldiers in this cemetery, and if they were disinterred the presumption is that a large number of these unknowns would be identified. The same could be said regarding Fere en Tordenois, Chateau Thierry, Belleau Woods, for in these cemeteries there are also many who have not been disinterred and been given the proper military burial.

Flanders Field Cemetery was next visited and found to be in a splendid condition; and then Brookwood, in England, was visited and also found in a splendid condition.

There are a great many nasty rumors current in the American quarters that there has been a lot of extravagance and also insufficient handling of funds. One rumor, I might add, and which seems to have a lot of truth in it was to the effect that several thousand embalmers were sent to France to embalm bodies that had been in earth for over a year; and, of course, everyone knows that bodies that have been in the earth for upward of a year can not be embalmed.

When the big lay-off came over there the first work that was stopped was the locating of missing bodies, and yet it was known that as the days go on it becomes more difficult to locate those who are missing; and yet there is still held on the pay roll at several thousand dollars per year salary a labor foreman to keep 17 laborers and also an engineer and an assistant engineer at some thousand dollars salary to keep these same 17 men employed; and it seems, my dear Congressman, that this money could be used to better advantage in locating the missing bodies.

One of the things that hurt me most in our national cemeteries was the utter lack of respect for our fallen heroes. As I was guided to the different graves I was amazed at the number of graves that we trod upon; in fact, we made the shortest cuts possible and dodged around crosses. I realized then how sad it must be if some mother was taken over the same route that I traveled; and, my dear Congressman, it was known in France that I was there as the representative of the National Disabled Soldiers' League, and that I was securing data for that organization. This incident brought out to me very strongly that those who are to remain permanently in our American cemeteries should be trained personnel, and I believe, my dear Congressman, that the finest persons that the Government select will be disabled soldiers especially trained by the United States Veterans' Bureau for this work.

We will then have some assurance that those who visit our national cemeteries in France will be made to feel that the United States Government really welcomes them, and that an honest effort is being made to show that the Government appreciates the sacrifices made, and if this plan were accepted, you will appreciate, I am sure, that these men would be trained in the various problems that would arise in a cemetery, and therefore would be equipped to represent the Government in a very greater extent than is now the case with the present incumbents, and also it would furnish a means of rehabilitating 150 disabled men.

The Young Women's Christian Association, which maintains the hostess house at Romagne, should be commended and encouraged to carry on the splendid work that they are now doing; but I assure you that they will not be able to go on much longer in the tumble-down shack that the Government provided for them, and which they are now holding forth in. In my humble opinion, the Government should provide a splendid hostess house at Romagne, and allow this organization, the Young Women's Christian Association, to continue on, because they are furnishing to-day the only real sympathetic comfort in this the largest of our cemeteries in Europe.

After your appropriation is made to continue this graves-registration work in France, the work will be immediately resumed, I believe, and it would be a godsend, my dear Congressman, if some provision were made whereby the Americans who are now in France would be employed, because, I believe, you will agree that in this work the majority of the employees should be Americans and this provision would help a great many of our Americans who are overseas, 90 per cent of whom are ex-service men, and who have married French or Belgian wives and have made their homes overseas.

The selection of the national cemeteries in France I sometimes think has not been the wisest, because of the great distances from railroads and other transportation means, but then there may be some good reason for the selection of these sites, but surely, my dear Congressman, there should be some obligation to furnish transportation from the nearest railroad station to these cemeteries, because the majority of these people, relatives of those who have been left overseas, are not wealthy people, and in many cases feel keenly this added expense.

The day that I was in Fere en Tardenois a Frenchman was walking around the cemetery, and he was addressed by one of the employees of the cemetery, and asked what his business was, and his reply was this: "This is my ground; you have not paid me for it, and until such time as you do I intend to walk around. It is about time that your rich Government paid a poor man like me." I have no reason to doubt this Frenchman, and I believe if you will inquire at the American Graves Registration Service in Washington, D. C., that this could be sustained, and if it is, well, it is a sad condition of affairs. I was confidently informed in the Paris office of the American Graves Registration Service that we have other cemeteries which have not been paid for.

I had originally intended, my dear Congressman, to make this letter some 15 pages in length, so that you could get a good, clear idea of my observations during my recent trip to France, but due to a return of my disability contracted in service, I have been confined to bed until to-day, and realized that Congress will very shortly adjourn. I send this letter, such as it is, trusting that you will overlook the various mistakes and corrections, because this work has been performed by a disabled soldier whom we are trying to rehabilitate, so that he can once more enter a gainful occupation, and as he is not very proficient upon the machine, hence these many errors do not give you all the details that I intended; but if you are still interested, and if it would do any good, I shall be very glad to immediately forward the rest to you.

I do, in the name of the National Disabled Soldiers' League, extend our appreciation for your interest.

Yours very respectfully,

THOMAS V. FIELDS,
State Commander, Chairman Overseas Committee.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I do not have the honor of a personal acquaintance with Commander Thomas V. Fields, of Jersey City, the author of the communication, but the fact that he is the commander for the State of New Jersey and the chairman of the overseas committee of the National Disabled Soldiers' League ought to be a sufficient evidence of his character and responsibility, and, therefore, of the accuracy of the statements contained in the document I have placed in the RECORD.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WINGO. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 276, nays 34, answering "present" 2, not voting 114, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, during the Sixty-seventh Congress the assertion has been frequently made upon the floor of the House that Massachusetts was in the saddle and that she would probably receive more than her fair share of favorable consideration. This was partially due to the fact that the Vice President of the Nation and presiding officer of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, the majority leader of the Senate, the Secretary of War, and several House chairmanships were held by men who hailed from Massachusetts. In spite of this wealth of material and position, I call your attention to the fact that Massachusetts and New England have suffered from certain legislation but more because of lack of legislation. The new tariff was not particularly favorable to New England; in fact, against our interests as a whole. Legislation which has been passed by the organization known as the farm bloc will prove anything but beneficial to New England. We have been grievously disappointed in the defeat of the Cape Cod Canal waterway project, which was in the interest of national defense and which the Government in the past has favorably considered in other similar projects located elsewhere. The merchant marine bill, of great importance to the country as a whole and of especial importance to every State on the Atlantic seaboard and of particular importance to Massachusetts, was also defeated. Both of these measures failed of passage not by the votes of Congress but by the indirect method of filibuster by Members located to a large extent in the South and Middle West.

Experiencing the most severe climate in the country, we have been denied priorities in the movement of coal, and our people have suffered most grievously.

We have tried to secure favorable consideration for the Boston Navy Yard, one of the most thoroughly equipped plants belonging to the Government, with an overhead of less than any other navy yard, and the reputation for good work second to none. The Leviathan, which could have been reconditioned at this yard at a saving of several hundred thousand dollars, was sent elsewhere. More civilian employees have been discharged from this yard than any other of the Government naval stations. The steamship Mount Vernon, now lying in East Boston, adjacent to the Boston Navy Yard, is to be reconditioned at a considerable expense. This vessel should be repaired at the Boston yard and advantage taken of the plant and personnel, which are now almost out of commission.

I trust that when this Congress adjourns that the apparent prejudice against Massachusetts and New England will disappear and that this section of the country may receive equal consideration with other sections by the heads of the various departments. I do not wish to be understood as criticizing any individual. We have probably been the victims of circumstances.

The New England Representatives have been generous in recognizing claims of other sections of the country. Some of us may have disagreed on questions of economics, but none of us have refused to come to the assistance of any other part of the country on questions where there has been need of national aid.

I trust that the Sixty-eighth Congress may have a more kindly feeling toward New England, in spite of the fact that we have furnished some conspicuous leaders. Heaven only knows what would have become of us if we had not had them to assist in our defense.

I take this opportunity to urge every Member of Congress to visit Massachusetts. Come up from the South or West via the Cape Cod Canal, make a tour of quaint, delightful Cape Cod, visit Plymouth and the rock of your liberties, see Boston Harbor and the Commonwealth piers, upon which the State has spent over $10,000,000. Look over the wonderful plant at the Boston Navy Yard and put your feet on the deck of the Constitution—"Old Ironsides." Get the thrill of Concord, Lexington, Bunker Hill, Faneuil Hall—the "Cradle of Liberty"—the Old North and Old South Churches. Visit the beautiful and historic Deerfield Valley and the Berkshires. Look over quaint old Provincetown, Marblehead, and Gloucester. There is no end to the pleasure and sight-seeing awaiting you in Massachusetts and New England. It is the Nation's playgroud in the summer time. Every part of the State is accessible by excellent State roads or highways, smooth as the floor, and an automobile trip anywhere within its confines is a delight to the tourist. The people are not of the cold, austere type, but truly hospitable. Come up and get acquainted with your neighbors.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in 8-point type an address delivered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] at the Washington Day exercises at the University of Pennsylvania. I might add, in that connection, a statement which will be of interest to his colleagues, that on that occasion the distinguished gentleman from Virginia was made a doctor of laws by that historic institution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address referred to is as follows:

SPEECH DELIVERED BY HON. A. J. MONTAGUE AT THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA ON FEBRUARY 22, 1923, ON GEORGE WASHINGTON.

"Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Provost, Ladies, and Gentlemen, nearly a century of observance of the 22d day of February by the University of Pennsylvania deserves and commands the reverent approval of many thousands of your alumni and of your fellow citizens throughout America. Naturally have you fallen upon this patriotic custom, for Washington performed the major portion of his public services in Pennsylvania, especially in Philadelphia. In taking the note to the French commandant in 1753, protesting against further aggression upon the Ohio country, he found his most perilous journey within the confines of Pennsylvania. He presented en route a letter from the Governor of Virginia to the Governor of Pennsylvania, containing the interesting expression that young Washington was 'a person of distinction.'

"It was in Pennsylvania, at Fort Necessity in 1754, that his reckless courage bore him to a temporary victory which almost encompassed the destruction of his troops.

"It was in Pennsylvania in 1755 that he saved the remnant of the ill-fated Braddock expedition, and it was in Pennsylvania three years thereafter that he again traversed the Great Meadows to accomplish the conquest of Fort Duquesne, renaming it Fort Pitt, and unfurling the British colors from its rude ramparts.

"He revisited Pittsburgh in 1774, and thence down the Ohio by canoe to the Great Kanawha, studying all the while the possibilities of water transportation between the West and the East and the association of the contiguous colonies for the maintenance of the great enterprise.

"He became a landowner in Pennsylvania, and 1784 he sets forth to the county of Washington, wherein these lands were situated, to make an examination of them and to secure the protection of his rights therein.

"In Philadelphia he takes his seat in the first and second Continental Congresses, and from the latter he received his commission as Commander in Chief of the Continental forces, shortly thereafter returning with his army through your streets and leaving to attack with ferocious energy and great skill the enemy at Germantown, despite the tremendous odds he had to encounter. Then the heroic agony of Valley Forge, followed by his brilliant assault at Monmouth upon the enemy, who would have been captured or destroyed but for the treachery of Charles Lee (who was no kin to the Virginia Lees), which was a depressing prelude to the defeat of the incompetent Gates at Camden and the treason of Arnold at West Point. But cabal and defeat and treason could not daunt the lion-hearted commander, and he seized the opportunity, long cherished and planned, to strike southward, and Yorktown soon made one of the immortal chapters of history, for without the decisive victory at Yorktown the great Franklin said that American independence would have been set back a thousand years.

"An incomparable convention assembles in your city in 1787, and Washington presides over its momentous deliberations, from which issued the organic charter of a new republic.

"We next find him the first President of the Republic, and not long after his inauguration in New York he takes up his official residence in this city, where for some seven anxious years he administers the untried powers of a new government, with a tact and patience so extraordinary, with an energy and courage so prodigious, and with a sagacity and patriotism so consummate that his success revealed him as a magistrate and a statesman of the highest order.

"Before the days of battle, before the days of the Congress, he knew Philadelphia. Here he had been a welcome guest on more than one occasion. Here he purchased his brave clothes to appear in Boston and demand of Shirley his military rank and status. Here in his hours of recreation he attended, in 1770 and 1773, the races of the Philadelphia Jockey Club. But amidst his comings and goings, amidst his exacting labors and formidable vicissitudes, he was proudly pleased to receive the hospitality of this historic university. He attended its commencements in 1775 and 1782, and in 1787 he accompanied his hostess, Mrs. Robert Morris, to a 'charity reading' in your college hall. He sought these academic associations, not so much by reason of the delights of scholarship as by reason of the power and range of a great mind that instantly and accurately appraised the influence of collegiate training upon a young and growing people.

"He was present in 1790 to hear James Wilson deliver his introductory lecture in your law school, and he made a felicitous and appreciative recognition of your diploma, conferring upon him in 1783 the degree of doctor of laws.

"It was in Philadelphia, at the close of his term of office as President, that he delivered his immortal "Farewell Address" on the anniversary of the signing of the Constitution, which in force and prestige ranks along with George Mason's Bill of Rights and Jefferson's Declaration of Independence.

"It was his friend, Benjamin Franklin, the greatest Pennsylvanian, who selected the famous artist, Houdon, to chisel in marble the 'counterfeit presentment' of Washington that has so long adorned the rotunda of the capitol of Virginia, and which is perhaps the most priceless piece of statuary on this hemisphere.

"And when his great life closed, it was in Philadelphia that John Marshall, then a Member of Congress from the district now represented by your speaker, announced to the House of Representatives his untimely death, and within a few weeks thereafter in a 'meeting house' near this spot, in the presence of the assembled Congress and a host of distinguished citizens and patriots, his long-time friend and neighbor, Henry Lee (the father of Robert Edward Lee), delivered a funeral oration declaring, in a memorable climax, that Washington was 'First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.'

"So when a Virginian comes to Philadelphia he comes to learn of Washington, to touch the visible associations of his activities, and to absorb the nourishing traditions and to appropriate the ideals that here took form and vigor, rather than to bring any new interpretation of his marvelous life.

"I might bring you from Virginia some faint picture of him as a youth; of the boy eager to enroll as a midshipman in His Majesty's navy; of the young surveyor doing his work with fidelity and efficiency under the authority and seal of the old and historic College of William and Mary; of his associations with the Fairfaxes and others of equal culture and refinement; of his romances and his marriage and of a love which he in his old age confessed under his own hand he had not outlived and from which he had received his first and noblest inspirations; of his happy days at Mount Vernon, with his horse and horn and hounds; of him as a planter and manager of estates; of him as a miller, a justice of the peace, a vestryman, a Mason, a neighbor, and friend; of the young burgess, maturely and decisively casting aside all social and friendly besetments to pursue with relentless conviction the recovery and establishment of what he believed to be the inalienable rights and liberties of the people of the Colonies; and of the young officer so grave and commanding and recognized by all as made of a finer metal and cast in a loftier mold than all others in the service of his Virginian colony.

"But I must desist save to suggest a bare outline of the environment within which he grew and developed. Let the sons of Massachusetts speak. In writing of the soldiers, statesmen, and jurists who were Washington's neighbors, friends, associates, and compatriots in Virginia, HENRY CABOT LODGE declares that—

"We must go back to Athens to find another instance of a society so small in numbers and yet capable of such an outburst of ability and force.

"And in more glowing words the late Senator Hoar said, in referring to this period and environment:

"What a constellation then arose upon the sky. The list of her great names in that wonderful period is like a catalogue of fixed stars. For all time the American youth who would learn the principles of liberty protected by law; who would learn to frame constitutions and statutes; who would seek models of the character of the patriot, of the statesman, of the soldier, may find instruction from her—may study her history as in a great university.

"This society was a simple but powerful environment, and in it he was bred and schooled to move upon the world's portentous stage.

"Was Washington a great military captain? The answer is found in the comparison of the resources of the two nations at war; of the number and training of the two armies; in the cabals and treachery, poverty, and suffering of the one and the unity, comfort, and appalling odds of the other; in the substantial unanimity of the British and in the ominous disloyalty in the Colonies; and in the results of the long struggle.

"In commenting upon the skill with which Washington employed his Army of 6,000 between New York and Yorktown, Cornwallis stated:

"But, after all, your excellency's achievements in New Jersey were such that nothing could surpass them.

"Frederick the Great declared this same campaign to have been the most brilliant of the century.

"When General Wilson, of the American Army, saw a portrait of Washington, by Stuart, in Wellington's home, the eldest son, the second duke, responding to an inquiry, said:

"It was placed there by my father, who esteemed Washington as perhaps the purest and the noblest character of modern times—possibly of all time—and, considering the material of the armies with which he successfully met the trained and veteran soldiers of the Old World, fairly entitles him to a place among the great captains of the eighteenth century.

"As a statesman, perhaps Washington looms larger than as a soldier. He possessed two qualities which rarely, if ever, are found in statesmen. He never desired or sought public place. A striking instance of this trait of character appears in his letter to his wife upon his appointment as commander in chief of the Continental Armies:

"I assure you, in the most solemn manner," he said, "that, so far from seeking this appointment, I have used every endeavor in my power to avoid it. * * * It was utterly out of my power to refuse this appointment without exposing my character to such censure as would have reflected dishonor upon myself and given pain to my friends."

"When, however, he accepted a public trust he was embarrassed by no diffidence or lack of confidence. He was as sure of himself in war as he was confident of himself in peace; and this self-confidence, together with his ability, his valor, and devotion, inevitably brought to him the unbounded respect and confidence of all who came in contact with him.

"We thus understand his other great quality, namely, his incomparable influence among his fellow citizens. No man in human history ever wielded so potent an influence. It was the result of his strength of mind, his vigorous sense of justice, his courage, and his unwavering devotion to the public welfare. It was this influence that held in line of service an army suffering in rags and tatters through the neglect of their States. It was this influence that secured reenlistments of soldiers whose terms of service were too short to effect their training. It was this influence that held together the dissolving bonds of the Colonies at the close of the Revolution. And it was this influence that engendered and solidified public sentiment for the establishment of a more perfect union of the States under a new Constitution.

"It is this influence which has for over a century and a quarter persuaded the American people to support a policy of opposition to foreign alliances as outlined in his farewell address. Whether Washington, if living to-day, would approve in its entirety the opinion expressed on this subject is questioned by many, in view of the changed economic, mechanical, and political conditions of the world. He approved of an alliance with France to establish the Republic. Would he approve of an alliance to save the Republic? Would he, if living, approve a league or an association of nations to preserve the peace and perhaps the civilization of the world? Would he support the establishment of a permanent international court of justice for the purpose of accomplishing a like end? To attempt an answer might violate the proprieties of this occasion, but the interest of the American people in so stupendous a subject at least justifies the inquiry.

"And it is the influence of his example that has almost read into the Constitution the salutary ineligibility of the President to hold office for a third consecutive term.

"Washington was no moralist or metaphysician. He indulged in no speculations in political philosophy. He saw troubles and he undertook to cure them. He met obstacles to the progress and freedom of the people and he at once set about to remove them.

"Earlier than any statesman of his day, unless it be Patrick Henry, he foresaw the Revolution was more than a protest against British oppression. He sought no precedents or academic reasoning to validate this conclusion. He would not debate; he would equip an army of 1,000 at his own expense and march to the assistance of Boston. He saw the necessity of separation, and he hurriedly left New York to urge upon Congress at Philadelphia the immediate adoption of a Declaration of Independence. Well does Mr. Thayer characterize him as the greatest 'actual statesman' of all time.

"Washington had the biggest mind for public business of any man that ever sat in the President's chair. He suffered no illusions. He knew man and his needs. He believed in liberty, but he also believed in order and law. He vividly saw that the Government under the Articles of Confederation was a failure. Therefore he undertook to coordinate the forces of commerce and liberty and law in order to establish a Federal union.

"In the Constitutional Convention he offered no reflections upon the growth and evolution of representative government as did Madison. The analogies of the Amphictyonic or Achaian leagues were negligible; the necessity and the practicability of the Union were obvious to him. He might not draw the details of the structure of the ship of state, but he knew that such a ship was needed, and he knew better than anybody else the dimensions and the strength of the craft, and the course and distance and object of the voyage.

"He spoke most infrequently in the convention, although he was considered as possessing the most solid information and the soundest judgment of any Member of the Continental Congress. One memorable speech he made according to the record in the convention. Leaving the chair of the presiding officer, and standing in dignity and majesty upon the floor, with emotion suppressed, and in tones of ominous solemnity, he addressed the timid and the doubting, by saying:

"It is too probable that no plan we propose will be adopted. Perhaps another dreadful conflict is to be sustained. If, to please the people, we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair; the event is in the hands of God.

"And from this convention came the instrument declared by Gladstone to be the—"Greatest work ever struck off at one time by the brain and purpose of man.

"Whether it was done at one time is debatable, but that it was done is largely attributable to Washington.

"He realized the significance of the achievement, and he at once exerted his great influence with pen and speech, with energy and tact, to secure its adoption by the States. This accomplished, all eyes were again turned to him as the one person to establish the government of the new constitution. He was most reluctant to accept the trust; but he responded as he did when chosen to command the armies.

He must have subscribed heartily to William Penn's practical governmental philosophy, which contains these remarkable words:

"Governments, like clocks, go from the motion men give them; and as governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined, too.

"Therefore, Washington selected great statesmen and advisers to set the clock in motion. Jefferson and Randolph, of Virginia, Hamilton, of New York, and General Knox, of Massachusetts, formed his first Cabinet. Would his example in this respect had always been followed by his successors! Washington believed as President what he believed as a member of the convention, that government was not "influence" or "advice"; that it was an institution for the maintenance and promotion of law and order and freedom under organic sanctions and limitations whereby civilization might be steadily advanced.

"He did not at first believe in parties; he thought public opinion at that time was too embryonic to be disturbed by conflicting counsels and ambitions. He would consolidate and direct public opinion solely to the establishment of the Government. So he endeavored to select a nonpartisan or coalition Cabinet. But his Cabinets were composed of such vigorous and diverse types and tempers that sooner or later conflicting views and policies inevitably arose. With extraordinary energy and sagacity he pursued his fixed purpose of first placing the Government securely upon its feet, and before he died he not only saw it surmount almost insuperable obstacles but progress in well-defined paths to a place of commanding dignity and power in the family of nations. This was the test of his statesmanship.

"The several powers of the new Government had to be tried and developed. Those relating to internal affairs—such as commerce, which was the germ of the Union—must first be dealt with. So very soon taxation and the banking powers of the Federal Government became acute controversies.

"The relations of the Executive to the legislative department involved delicate and difficult treatment. His own relations with the Senate give an interesting chapter in the political history of our country.

"Taking advantage of the so-called 'whisky insurrection' in Pennsylvania, he procured the act of February 28, 1795, 'to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions,' which was, rightfully or wrongfully, as viewed by the Southern and Northern States, invoked by Abraham Lincoln, regarded the most illustrious of Washington's successors, in calling out troops in the late war between the States.

"The Genet episode well illustrates his Americanism and his application of the usages of foreign intercourse. The gratitude of America to France and the reaction of the French Revolution upon American democracy lent to Genet's meddlesome conduct a dangerous popularity. Washington struck at the appropriate hour, Genet was recalled, and henceforth America was master in its own house.

"Yet withal, and in spite of his inexperience in foreign affairs, he dealt with France, our great ally in the Revolution, a nation so conventional and sensitively proud, in a manner so tactful, wise, and firm as to preserve peace throughout his entire administration and at the same time to retain the affections of this high-strung and generous people.

"Time and occasion forbid any further mention of his varying activities, many of which only need to be recalled to experience an exaltation of our patriotism. He has passed into the ages, and his immortal fame is beyond the detraction of men.

"For many years," says Mr. LODGE, "I have studied minutely the career of Washington, and with every step the greatness of the man has grown upon me; every analysis has failed to discover the act of his life which, under the conditions of the time, I could unhesitatingly pronounce to have been an error."

"Thomas Jefferson said of him that he was—

"The only man in the United States who possessed the confidence of all. There was no other one who was considered as anything more than a party leader.

"The whole of his character was in its mass perfect, in nothing bad, in a few points indifferent. And it may be truly said that never did nature and fortune combine more perfectly to make a man great and to place him in the same constellation with whatever worthies have merited from man an everlasting remembrance."

"Upon his death Napoleon issued a decree from which I beg to quote the following:

"The name of Washington is inseparably linked with a memorable epoch. He adorned this epoch by his talents and the nobility of his character, and with virtues that even envy dared not assail. History offers few examples of such renown. Great from the outset of his career, patriotic before his country had become a Nation, brilliant and universal despite the passions and political resentments that would gladly have checked his career, his fame is to-day imperishable, fortune having consecrated his claim to greatness, while the prosperity of a people destined for grand achievements is the best evidence of a fame ever to increase.

"Lord Brougham, with entrancing language, declared:

"It will be the duty of the historian and the sage, in all ages, to let no occasion pass of commemorating this illustrious man; and until time shall be no more will a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and in virtue be derived from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington.

"If I can not add to these veracious tributes no word of mine shall detract from them. I beg, nevertheless, in this presence to voice my opinion that Washington was easily the most transcendent figure in the world of his day, and that in the immeasurable epoch through which he moved he was at once the Army, the Revolution, the Constitution, and the Government of these United States."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill which has just been passed. I have not had time to say what I do not know about this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DISBURSING AGENTS, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4637, for the relief of certain disbursing agents under the Department of Commerce, and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up a Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the respective accounts of disbursing agents under the Department of Commerce for payments of loss by exchange on salary and per diem checks issued under appropriations respectively for the fiscal years 1917 to 1922, inclusive, containing a provision for "exchange on official checks," the accounts of which payments may have been heretofore settled or may hereafter become the matter of settlement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us how much this will involve?

Mr. WINSLOW. It will involve about $20,000, and it does not take any money out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, the proposition in respect of this measure is this: It does not take any money out of the Treasury. Under the practice of the disbursing agents of the Department of Commerce in various parts of the world, outside of the United States, they were allowed to make up to those on the pay rolls whatever may have been lost to them by virtue of variation in rates of exchange. They had reimbursed employees of the Government who had so suffered. The department here in Washington suddenly determined that they would not recognize that allowance and that determination was made without advice of the fact being sent early enough to the disbursing agents abroad. These disbursing agents kept on making good to those whom they had to pay, and one day they were refused reimbursement from the Washington office.

That meant that various disbursing agents lost sums ranging from $1,000 up and down, to the total amount of about $20,000, which they have had to pay out of their own pockets. The money has already been appropriated, but through one of those funny quirks and twists which we hear about in the departments these disbursing agents can not be reimbursed. The query is, Shall we let a lot of good fellows, who have been doing their duty along the lines of a previous custom, with the approval of the department, suffer for the want of this reimbursement?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the situation, this money has already been appropriated.

Mr. WINSLOW. Quite so.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the only reason this is necessary is in order to correct a situation brought about by a decision of the General Accounting Office.

Mr. WINSLOW. Quite so; after the previous method had been followed for a number of years.

Mr. BARKLEY. It resolves itself into a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE RIVER.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 3874) granting the consent of Congress for a bridge across the Rio Grande River was passed by the House this afternoon, and I shall ask that a resolution be sent to the Senate requesting the return of the bill to the House. The situation is this: This afternoon, in the effort of the leader of the majority to help along the cause of passing bills, by accident this particular bill got into his grist and went through the House. It was not intended that it should go through. All of the people interested in the bill were equally asleep or otherwise missed the cue and failed to follow the gentle and soothing mumbling of the reading clerk. An injustice has been done by passing the bill to the people in interest. The purpose is to send the bill back to the Senate and in the interest of everyone have it returned to the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not very probable that by this time the Senate has passed the bill? It takes very quick action sometimes.

Mr. WINSLOW. It was a Senate bill that we passed, and it was the wrong one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 3874) granting the consent of Congress for a bridge across the Rio Grande River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOINT COMMISSION OF GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 287, creating the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves to suspend the rules and pass the Senate Joint Resolution 287 as amended, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 287.

Resolved, etc., That a joint commission is hereby created, to be known as the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress on January 1, 1924, upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the continuing decrease in the production of gold and silver.

2. The causes of the depressed condition of the gold and silver industry in the United States.

3. The production, reduction, refining, transportation, marketing, sale, and uses of gold and silver in the United States and elsewhere.

4. The effect of the decreased production of gold and silver upon commerce, industry, exchange, and prices.

The said commission is further authorized:

1. To confer with citizens, associations, or corporations of foreign countries with a view to the stabilization and wider use of silver in exchange.

2. To propose, either formally or informally, to the President of the United States, or the heads of the proper departments, plans for negotiations with foreign governments to the same end.

The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission or any subcommittee of its members is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, or adjournments of the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in continental United States, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary, not to exceed the sum of $15,000, to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditure shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives in equal proportions, upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, miscellaneous items, and expenses of special select committees, the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purpose of this joint resolution, for the payment of one-half of the expense herein authorized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas to 20 minutes.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is the resolution that came up two or three days ago on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] saw fit to object. The first thing to which I wish to call the attention of the House is that this resolution has been amended in such a way as to meet certain suggestions by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr GRAHAM] and the objections of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate has already passed this resolution. The House Committee on Mines and Mining has reported the resolution. It is on both the Unanimous Consent and Union Calendars. The House Committee on Mines and Mining, while it did not hold extensive hearings on this resolution, had before it some of the witnesses who appeared before the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining, and we examined very carefully the hearings which were held by that committee.

We found that a large number of men, eminent economists and authorities on the question of mining and metallurgy, appeared before the committee and gave testimony. It was the consensus of opinion among those who testified that a most unusual condition exists in the United States with regard to the gold and silver industry. In fact, gentlemen, we have never seen a time in our day and generation when such unusual conditions confront the gold and silver mining industry of the United States. In the first place, during the war period a great many gold and silver mines in the United States were compelled to close down because of the high cost of operation. The price of silver to-day, I believe, is about 67 cents per ounce; and if it were not for the fact that under existing law the price of silver is fixed, to-day it would probably be 56 or 57 cents an ounce.

In other words, on the expiration of the Pittman Act, which will expire by virtue of its own terms within the next seven months, or, I should say, when 270,000,000 ounces of silver shall have been purchased, the opinion of the people best informed on the subject is that the price of silver will fall below 60 cents per ounce. It is apparent unless something is done to secure a better market for silver the price of silver must fall. Another thing, gentlemen, because of the consequences of the great World War every country in continental Europe has already begun to debase its silver currency. England is doing it, and a great many subject countries of the British Empire are doing it. It is also true in the oriental countries. The greatest market for American silver is found in China and in India, and the testimony of Professor Jenks on this point, who appeared before the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining, was corroborated by the testimony of other eminent men.

They believe that steps ought to be taken at once on the part of the United States to prevent, if possible, the disaster that is sure to follow. Professor Jenks is the man President Roosevelt sent in 1901 to the Far East to study monetary conditions in that country. He is the man who went to Mexico in 1904 for the purpose of making a study of the mining and monetary questions of that country, and this House will do well to give heed to the evidence that is set forth in this wonderful report of the Senate Mining Committee. I want to submit, gentlemen of the House, this fact, that the world's annual production of gold has been rapidly declining the last few years. Do you know, my friends, in 1919 more gold went into jewelry and in the fine arts in the United States than was produced that year. The judgment of your committee is that the commission should be created for the purpose of making an inquiry into this subject and submitting to Congress the result of such inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. How much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed nine minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RHODES. If the gentleman will make it brief, I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The Congress closes to-morrow at noon. Does not the gentleman think it a wise provision to limit the members of this committee to the Members of the Sixty-eighth Congress?

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, if it had not been for the persistent inconsistency of the gentleman from Texas, which marks his usual course, this bill would have passed this House two days ago.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Texas——

Mr. RHODES. I decline to yield further, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reserves the remainder of his time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, whenever you put a coal of fire on a terrapin's back the terrapin is going to move. I asked the gentleman from Missouri a courteous question and a pertinent question, and a question that deserved a courteous answer.

Mr. RHODES. Which the gentleman from Texas refused to give this gentleman day before yesterday.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, the gentleman from Missouri is not going to interfere with my speech, not at all, so he may just as well sit down. He was discourteous to me when I asked him a courteous question. This Congress closes to-morrow at noon. Oh, yes it does, regardless of your head shaking, unless the gentleman has lost his bearings.

The Sixty-seventh Congress closes at noon to-morrow, and yet the resolution that the gentleman has brought in here for passage at this late hour does not limit the appointment of these five Congressmen from the House of Representatives to the Sixty-eighth Congress. If this resolution passes and becomes a law, the Speaker could appoint five "lame ducks" from the present Congress on this committee.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. Let me illustrate, for instance: He could appoint a "lame duck" from Missouri on this commission. [Laughter.] He could appoint a "lame duck" from out in Nevada. He could appoint a "lame duck" from any other part of the West; and they would serve. [Laughter.]

It is true that this resolution does not provide any salary, but I have seen resolutions like this pass before. There was one passed in the Sixty-fifth Congress in its dying days, and it did not provide for any salary for men who were retiring from Congress. But after the Congress closed up and the retiring "lame-duck" Members were put on that board, the Congress came along later on and allowed them $7,500 a year salary.

I know something about these resolutions, although I have been here only a comparatively short time. I have been watchful in the closing hours of Congress. I sat up here all night long when the Sixty-fifth Congress closed, when we had just such resolutions, and we are still having them.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. You let a fellow want to get on a junket, and he is afraid his junket is going to fail, and he realizes that the hours are fleeting, and he gets in a bad humor; and when you ask him a courteous question he gets mad and answers you discourteously. That is not right.

Now let me tell you something about this resolution. These five Congressmen and these five Senators who would be appointed under this resolution could meet together to-morrow evening and plan their first meeting in San Francisco a week from to-morrow. They could employ their stenographers and take them with them, and their clerical help, and they could go out there on the Pacific coast and spend three months summering on the coast.

Let me tell you about the stenographers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield myself five minutes more. [Laughter.]

Did you know that over in the House Office Building right now—or we did have them to-day—we have four reporters who usually serve committees, stenographic reporters, who draw $6,000 a year of the people's money? And, beginning to-morrow, if the rumors are correct, and no special session is called, they will not have one single thing to do from to-morrow until the 1st of December next. But they will draw this $6,000 a year of the people's money and do nothing for nine months.

Mr. TILSON. How about the gentleman from Texas? Is he not going to take a little rest from now until then? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Connecticut could see my desk now, piled up with papers a foot or two high, he would understand that there is probably two or three months' hard work there right now. I want to tell you something: When the distinguished parliamentarian of this House who hails from Connecticut goes home next week he will have to begin to answer questions that the people will ask him, and he will think he has done more to earn his money by answering those questions than he ever did to earn it before, because it is going to be the hardest task he ever performed to answer those questions satisfactorily to the people. [Laughter.]

You are going to have a job in front of you, Brother TILSON, and that is one reason why at least five other Congressmen do not want to go home. [Laughter.] They want to go on a nine months' junket so that they can visit Seattle and San Francisco and Miami, Fla., and Boston, and elsewhere here and there, until January 1, 1924, and spend $15,000 and more of the people's money.

I want to tell you something about what these special committees have cost lately. I will not mention this $600,000 coal committee—$600,000 that you are giving that coal committee when the winter is now over. But let me call your attention to what a few select committees of this kind have cost. I will not talk about the special committee that you provided for last night, chosen from the membership of the Committee on Agriculture—another junketing committee. That has just $5,000 to expend. But you had another so-called agricultural one not long ago that traveled over a large part of the United States. Here is what it cost the people of this country: It cost $10,913.21. Those figures are correct, because I got them from the office of my good friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and his figures are always correct when you go to his expert bookkeeper in there and get them. [Laughter.]

Now, let me tell you what the distinguished Joe Walsh committee cost, the committee that went out to the Pacific coast in a special train of Pullman cars and lived in them for months out there, from California to Seattle. Do you know how much that Joe Walsh junketing trip cost? It cost $43,969.04. Tell me one single benefit that the people have ever gotten out of it. Then let me come down to the special junketing committee of the new floor leader of the House, my dear friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

How much did his special committee cost? Let me tell you. He never has told you. I have been waiting for him to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has occupied 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am constrained to yield myself two minutes more. Let me show you what this special Graham committee cost. It cost $157,109.91. Ah, my colleagues, you ought to stop it. It is not right. It is not just to the people. Let me tell you what the Bergdoll committee cost—$6,441.85. That report, filed by that distinguished committee, has been pigeonholed for over a year. That report recommended to Congress that it take action against the Army officers of our Government who let that infamous draft dodger escape. You have let that resolution sleep in the pigeonhole for months. You have not called it up. Why do you not call that up and take proper action on it before you call up another?

I do not blame the gentleman from Missouri for getting angry at me, because he knew what I was going to tell him. I plead guilty; I have kept you for two days from passing this resolution. I am not ashamed of it; I am going to the American people with my record on it. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if there was any need for this commission I, for one, would not object to what it cost to carry it out. But I can not understand why we should have a joint commission, to be known as the joint commission on gold and silver inquiry. As I understand it now, we have the Interior Department, and in that department we have a bureau of experts under the Bureau of Mines. That is all that that department is for, is to investigate just such matters as the commission appointed under this resolution would investigate, and the Government of the United States is paying for that service now. I can not understand, gentlemen of the House, why, in this late hour of the session, when the majority have declined to allow the cotton-producing States of this Union to bring in a resolution that has been unanimously indorsed from the Senate on down through the Rules Committee, and by agreement we were to vote on it to combat the boll weevil, why this resolution, which will cost we know not how much to investigate, something about gold and silver? Why take up the time of the House with this?

If you are not going to pass any more major legislation, why not adjourn, observe the Lord's day, go to church to-morrow morning instead of sitting here passing a junketing trip? That is what you are doing. The majority leader—and I like him; I think he is a nice man—allows this matter to be considered, but when it comes to the question of doing anything for the cotton farmer of the South, he can not see what in the world nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate has to do with the boll weevil. [Laughter.] He is willing that we should come here at this late hour to-night to pass this resolution. Listen to it. It says "to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this article."

Now, that is an open proposition—it allows them to spend any amount of money they want to. I think we had better go to church in the morning, read the prayer book, get down on our knees, and pray to God to forgive us for some of the things we have voted for here and are passing at this late hour in the session. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the practical situation which confronts us about this matter is somewhat peculiar, and I think for the purposes of the RECORD it should be stated. I sympathize with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS], but here is the practical condition: The Senate passed this resolution some days ago. To-day the Senate passed another simple Senate resolution, providing to go it alone in the event that the joint resolution does not pass. The Senate resolution providing for the committee to go it alone is absolutely unlimited as to expenditure. This resolution limits the expenses to $15,000. If this shall pass, therefore, it will take the place of an independent Senate committee and will be a joint committee. That is the peculiar situation with which we are confronted, and I think it is in the interest of economy to agree to it.

Mr. OLIVER. Was there a proviso in the Senate resolution that this should supersede that in the event that this would pass?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not say about that, but I understand that it will do so.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Do I understand that the gentleman is for this resolution because he thinks it is less harmful than the Senate resolution, or because he thinks this resolution is right?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So far as my investigation of the resolution has gone, I think it has merit justifying its support, standing alone; but certainly under the conditions that confront us I think we should pass the resolution.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I can answer the last question that was asked of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] by saying that if this resolution does pass, it does supersede the Senate resolution. The Senate passed that resolution this afternoon, fearing that we were not going to pass this, and owing to the very great interest which this resolution has to the western mining States, they wanted to be sure and have this investigation.

The trouble with most of the speeches made against the resolution is that the gentlemen who have made them apparently have not listened to the reading of the resolution. It limits the cost to $15,000. There can not be any junket to Europe or even to San Francisco or scarcely any other place on the $15,000, one half of it limited to the House and the other half to the Senate.

The United States produces 80 per cent of all of the silver of the world. Canada produces some and Mexico produces some. This continent produces 90 per cent of all of the silver in the world, and yet the price of silver is fixed every morning by four gentlemen in London in the employ of the Bank of England, where they produce no silver. To-day they are paying 67 cents an ounce, and they are selling it to China and India for $1.20 and $1.30 an ounce.

Gentlemen will remember that some time ago Will Rogers, the comedian, said that the American people never lost a war and never won a conference. That is absolutely true, and as a matter of fact when it comes to international conferences we get the worst of it. If there ever was a time in the history of this country when we ought to have a high-class commission to determine the monetary condition in respect to the production of gold and silver and the price we shall get for it, it is at the present time. We want to investigate these smelting charges; we want to investigate the freight charges; we want to investigate international speculation in silver; and we want to stabilize the production of silver and gold in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 287. This provides for a fact-finding commission who will be authorized to go carefully into the entire situation as it affects the mining industry in America. No investigation has ever been conducted in this country by Congress of the mining industry. It is one of the basic industries of the country. More and more the business of mining is being conducted on a scientific basis. Formerly the element of chance entered largely into the business. It has always been a hazardous business, but the element of chance is now largely removed. Many of the best citizens of this country are engaged in mining and have invested large sums of money. They are entitled to every effort on the part of this Government to protect them in their rights and to give them the benefit of the best information obtainable in carrying on their business. There is no source to which the mining industry may go now for accurate and definite information as to the cause of the widespread depression in the mining industry.

In 1915 the world's production of silver was between 180,000,000 and 200,000,000 ounces. Of that amount we produced in this country about 101,000,000 ounces. That production has decreased until our production this year will probably not reach 50,000,000 ounces. Just now the industry is stimulated by reason of the Pittman Act, but that act will expire in October or November of this year, and just what the result will be on the mining business no one can foretell.

Reference has been made here to the work of the Bureau of Mines, and gentlemen have contended that that bureau can supply whatever information is needed. No one who is informed will question the good work being done by the Bureau of Mines, but it has no facilities, nor no money, to conduct the investigation contemplated by this resolution. We want to know facts concerning the freight rates being charged producers of ores. These rates are determined by the value of the commodity shipped. Who is in a position to state the value of ores as they come from the mines of the country? Men everywhere engaged in this important work are contending that their freight rates are excessive. Who is able to give us accurate information concerning the necessary costs of smelting the ores? No one. The producers in this country are entitled to that information. Who can tell us about the business of marketing the silver and gold produced in this country? So far as I know no one can give accurate and needed information.

This anomalous condition obtains: More than 80 per cent of the silver of the world is produced on the American continent, yet the price of it is determined every day in London by four brokers who are not engaged in any way whatsoever in the production of silver. England is not a silver-producing country, and yet these four men in the great city of London determine how much our producers receive. Can anyone now suggest a remedy to prevent this peculiar condition? Surely the gentlemen who have opposed this resolution have not suggested any remedy and I feel sure are not in a position to suggest one. All the conditions surrounding the mining industry, particularly those conditions affecting the cost of production, can be determined by a commission of this kind, and, in my judgment, is the only way in which the necessary facts can be obtained.

We have made every effort to extend necessary credit to the farmers and stock growers of this country. A great number of bills have passed this Congress, all of which I have supported. It does seem to me that consideration should also be given to this other great basic industry. There seems to be a peculiar relationship existing between the price of silver and gold and the price of agricultural products. Just what this relationship is seems hard to determine, but it is a fact that whenever a low price is paid for silver the farmers receive a low price for their commodities, and the reverse of this is also true that whenever the mines of the country prosper and the producers of metal are receiving adequate compensation, then the price of agricultural products throughout the United States is high. We know that our commerce, especially with the Orient, is affected to a very great extent by the production and use of silver particularly. There is no question but what the production of silver upon a paying basis greatly increases our commerce with China.

Another fact is also noticeable, that since the cost of producing silver has been so high nearly all of the nations who use silver as a subsidiary currency have debased their currency. A restriction of the use of the precious metals or the debasement of a metallic currency means fiat money. Certainly this country, in view of the conditions that now exist in Europe, ought to take every reasonable step to prevent the further debasement of currency abroad. It ought to do everything possible to stabilize the medium of exchange between this and other countries. While there is in India particularly a parity existing between silver and gold, it can not be denied that both in that country and in China silver is the chief medium of exchange.

It therefore follows from a consideration of these facts that the production of silver and gold in this country has a remarkable influence upon the commerce and business prosperity of the entire world. It is contended by those who are informed that many of the silver producers in this country can not continue operations after the expiration of the Pittman Act; that unless the cost of the production of the precious metal is reduced there will be widespread depression in the mining business if that industry is not permanently crippled.

In view of these conditions I have urged constantly the necessity of making this investigation at an early date. Our Committee on Mines and Mining reported in favor of this resolution unanimously. Some gentlemen on the floor of this House have urged that the expense of this commission ought to be limited. I have no patience with this attitude. It will be limited; this commission will not be unduly extravagant. Mining is one of the big industries of this country. It is the source of much of the wealth of the United States. Millions of dollars have been paid as taxes by those engaged in the mining business, and now Members of Congress seem unwilling to have an investigation made unless the expense of the commission is limited to $15,000. I regard this as a narrow policy, and not only a reflection upon those who will be appointed on the commission but a reflection upon the mining industry itself. This great industry should be helped, and whatever is required to make a full and complete investigation should be appropriated. If this House will take the broad view of this question, I am thoroughly convinced that not only the industry will be stimulated here but other nations will be encouraged in the use of silver, thereby stabilizing their currency. This result is greatly to be desired, and I am sure will go a long way toward restoring normal conditions throughout the world. There is no question in my mind but what the commerce with the Orient will be greatly increased and prosperity and peace insured both at home and abroad.

For these reasons and many others which I could give, if time permitted, I earnestly hope that this Congress will pass this resolution and that that commission will do everything possible to stimulate the great mining industry of America.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have appeared in opposition to this measure have made a great deal of noise but have not furnished us any facts or any information. The joint commission which is proposed is to consist of Senators and Representatives. Senators and Representatives are those at the time holding a commission as such. Under this resolution no one could be appointed by the President, and I am quite sure none will be appointed by the President, except those holding commissions as Senators or Representatives at the time. So much for the lame-duck talk.

Mr. Speaker, we are tremendously interested as a Nation and as a people in the production of these metals. We are among the greatest producers of them in the world, and yet we seem to have no control whatever over the price of silver. It is highly important that the many questions involved be carefully considered, and if it is not worth the expenditure of $15,000 to have this matter investigated, well, I do not understand its importance. Mr. Speaker, no wonder the country does not have a higher opinion than it has of the Congress when gentlemen rise here in their places and talk about junkets. I have known of several commissions making investigations of subjects to be considered by the Congress, and I have known of none that did not repay the country well in the information that it furnished. [Applause.] Instead of having fewer investigations on the ground, investigations that bring Members and Senators face to face with problems they must solve, we should have more. We should have better laws and better government if we had more investigations of the matters we legislate on by the Members of the House and Senate, and I know of nothing of the sort more important than this commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that in his opinion two-thirds having voted in favor thereof——

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, division.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas demands a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 224, noes 17.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution as amended was passed.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw in favor of the gentleman from New Jersey.

ules shall not become effective until the first day of the fiscal year estimated for in such Budget."

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report.

In section 3, creating the personnel classification board and imposing upon it the duty of making the classification, the House amendment to the amendment of the Senate directs the board in performing its duties to follow as nearly as practicable the classification made pursuant to the Executive order of October 24, 1921.

In section 6 the House amendment strikes out the provision permitting the board to authorize appointments at rates above the minimum for the grade.

In section 7 the House amendment limits increases in compensation to the next higher rate within the salary range of the grade.

In section 9 the House amendment clarifies the provision giving to the board power of review and revision over efficiency ratings.

In section 12 the House amendment strikes out the provision making it the duty of the board to consider what rates of compensation consistent with efficiency and economy in the Government service and the maintenance of a reasonable standard of living should be paid to the civilian employees of the Government.

In the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service, in the compensation schedules, the House amendments eliminate all the typical tasks.

In the clerical-mechanical service, grade 5, the House amendment increases the rates of compensation from $2,940, $3,180, $3,420, and $3,660 to $3,000, $3,100, $3,200, $3,300, $3,400, $3,500, and $3,600. The House amendment further eliminates the provisos following thereafter.

The House amendment strikes out section 14 and substitutes therefor the following:

"SEC. 14. That the estimates of the expenditures and appropriations set forth in the Budget to be transmitted by the President to Congress on the first day of the next ensuing regular session shall conform to the classification herein provided, and that the rates of salary in the compensation schedules shall not become effective until the first day of the fiscal year estimated for in such Budget."

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker——

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Jersey ask for a vote?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we want an explanation of this matter. This is a matter involving millions of dollars.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief as possible, and in order to explain what resulted in the conference I deem it best to give a very brief summary of what the bill as it now stands contains and in what respect its provisions differ from the bill as it passed the House in December, 1921. The bill that is before us as a result of the conference and as the result of the series of amendments which you have just heard reported provides that there shall be created a personnel classification board, to consist of a representative of the Budget Bureau, a representative of the Civil Service Commission, and a representative of the Bureau of Efficiency, the representative of the Budget Bureau to be the chairman of this board. It provides that this board shall take the necessary steps to make the classification provided in the compensation schedules to which I will refer later, make the necessary rules and regulations, create classes, and do whatever is necessary in order that the heads of departments under the supervision of this board may allocate their employees to the proper grades and classes and fix the proper salary within the range applicable to the grade or class. It provides that a system of efficiency ratings, uniform throughout the service, under the supervision of the board, must be kept, and promotions, demotions, and dismissals must be made in accordance with the standards set forth in the system. It provides further that promotions may be made only to the next higher salary rate within the range of the grade; that any employee who now is receiving a salary in excess of the highest sum set for the grade to which he is allocated must be reduced to a salary within the range of the grade to which he belongs. These, in brief, are what are known as the administrative provisions of the bill, and I want to say that after the conference the salient provisions as to administration of the bill under consideration are the same as they were in the bill as it was passed 14 months ago, with the exception that in place of the Budget Bureau, that was carried in the bill formerly as the classifying agency, there is now provided this personnel board, of which the Chief of the Budget Bureau or his representative is a part. This is the only substantial change of the bill as it passed the House, with the exception of the compensation schedules which I propose now to state.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what extent, if any, has the conference report extended the provisions for men in the field service? As I understand, originally the report on the House bill related to those in the departmental service.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The provision in regard to the classification of the field service is identical with the provision of the bill which passed the House originally, which only provided that a survey of the field service be made and a classification devised and the employees in the field allocated to their proper positions, that work to be reported to the Congress for its consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there is no provision——

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is not to put in effect the field classification without first having a report made to Congress.

Now, as to the compensation schedules, there were two sets of compensation schedules drafted in considering this question of reclassification. One was based on the report of the Joint Reclassification Commission and the other was made pursuant to an executive order issued October 24, 1921, by the Bureau of Efficiency. These two compensation schedules in practical effect differ but little one from another, and it is well known, because it has been published in the newspapers widely, that the President of the United States, who is the head of the executive departments of the Government, deemed it wise, in view of the fact that under his order the Bureau of Efficiency had made a reclassification of these compensation schedules and that the work of allocation had been practically completed by that bureau under those compensation schedules, that they be adopted rather than the compensation schedules carried in the bill as it passed the House.

The difference in cost is but little, and the increase in proportion to the pay roll of the employees in the District of Columbia is but a small amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. What increase in the total aggregate of salaries will be entailed by the operation of this new plan?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is estimated that the total increase in the pay rolls involved in this reclassification is a little over $2,000,000, which is a trifling percentage when you consider the pay rolls of all the departments in the District of Columbia and the municipal employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is in addition to the present bonus?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. It is not true that in some of the schedules the difference is as much as 20 per cent between the House schedules and the Senate schedules?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. I do not believe that there is a basis for that statement. People make their own guess as to where employees are to be allocated in the different grades and draw their own conclusions from that guess, but that is not the classification. I do not believe there are such discrepancies as the gentleman suggests between the compensation schedules of the Bureau of Efficiency and the compensation schedules based on the Reclassification Commission's report.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. In grade 1 in a schedule and grade 2 in the same schedule, is there not a difference between what was in the bill when it passed the House and what is in the bill as it passed the Senate of from 15 to 20 per cent?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The employees embraced in the grades of one compensation schedule are not necessarily the same employees as those embraced in the grades of second compensation schedule.

Mr. EVANS. Is not the language descriptive of the employees practically the same in both cases?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; it differs somewhat.

Now, there is just one other change that I desire to call to the attention of the House. As passed by the Senate, the compensation schedules carried long lists of typical tasks that illustrated the grade and the character of service. In the House bill no such typical tasks were included, and it was not considered to be a scientific way of drafting the compensation schedule. Upon the suggestion of the House the Senate receded from that, and the House has taken every one of those typical-task examples out of the bill.

I want to state, Mr. Speaker, in closing that this bill, with the changes in the compensation schedules made at the suggestion of the President himself, who is vitally interested in this matter, and the change of the Personnel Board in place of the Bureau of the Budget, is substantially as it passed the House in December, 1921.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will not the gentleman give us five minutes on that bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker, on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 218, noes 0.

So the conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4280) to provide additional credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to amend the Federal reserve act; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. ASHURST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FRANK BELCHER.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 3609 for the relief of Frank Belcher.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from California to make that motion at this time.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] will not be able to attend the funeral of the late W. BOURKE COCKRAN. The Chair therefore appoints in his stead on that committee the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

RESIGNATION FROM A JOINT COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submits the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender you my resignation as a member of the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government, effective forthwith.

With great respect, I am sincerely yours,

J. STANLEY WEBSTER.

APPOINTMENTS TO TEMPORARY COMMITTEES.

The Chair also appoints the following committees necessary to be appointed at this time. The Clerk will report them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to law, the Speaker appoints Mr. MACGREGOR, Mr. UNDERHILL, and Mr. PARK of Georgia as the temporary Committee on Accounts; Mr. KIESS, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, and Mr. STEVENSON as the Committee on Printing; Mr. MAPES as a member of the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government; and pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 53, Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. HERSEY, and Mr. MONTAGUE on the Special Joint Committee on Employment of Prisoners in United States Penitentiaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had returned, in accordance of the request of the House, the bill (S. 3874) granting the consent of Congress for a bridge across the Rio Grande River.

MARGARET F. KERR—HUGH S. RYDER.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 569 (Rept. 1759).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Margaret F. Kerr the sum of $186.66, and to Hugh S. Ryder the sum of $120, being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late W. BOURKE COCKRAN.

Mr. IRELAND. This, Mr. Speaker, is the usual resolution, and I move its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4245) to provide the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enforcement of the tariff act of 1922 and all other customs revenue laws.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 14429. An act granting the consent of Congress to the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of an existing bridge across the Red River between Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn.;

H. R. 14428. An act granting the consent of Congress to the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of an existing bridge across the Red River between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak.;

H. R. 14351. An act to authorize bridging the Ohio River at Moundsville, W. Va.; and

H. R. 12378. An act granting the consent of Congress to maintain a bridge across the Rio Grande River.

LEGISLATIVE CLERK.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 565 (Rept. 1760).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, from March 1, 1923, to December 1, 1923, for the services of a legislative clerk, compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum, the said clerk to be appointed by and to be under the direction and control of the acting minority floor leader.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, among the unique things is the spectacle of a Republican offering a resolution for the Democratic minority. This is in a way an unsatisfied, unmade promise to the minority for the very splendid consideration they have given to the majority during this Congress. Several times during this Congress we have requested majority employees which seemed necessary under the conditions and which were granted, and there was no objection made by the minority leader and I can not recall that any objection was made on the special cases in mind by any of the minority. They have been unusually generous, and this resolution I hope will be passed without comment, I am sure without objection from the minority, and I hope my Republican friends will offer no opposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

GEORGE A. RUSSELL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 453 (Rept. No. 1761).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $600 to George A. Russell for extra services rendered in the folding room during the Sixty-seventh Congress, this sum being the difference between the salary of a regular folder at $900 per annum and that of bookkeeper at $1,200 per annum.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is for the period of the entire Congress. The recipient of this additional compensation really served in a dual capacity through the illness and incapacity of others. He served in two places. The Doorkeeper has not been granted a bookkeeper in the folding room, and he carried on the service that is rendered in that room. This resolution is offered on the recommendation of the Doorkeeper, and I think it is really meritorious.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. We have on both sides of the aisle very efficient boys who have served here at $2.50 a day and other special employees of the House not on the rolls. They work loyally night and day. Has the gentleman got a resolution for these employees?

Mr. IRELAND. In what respect? That has nothing to do with this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to offer such a resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. I have no such thing in mind.

Mr. BLANTON. This will be the first Congress that I have seen adjourned without such a resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think there have been several.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

J. W. M. AUSTIN.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution:

House Resolution 544 (Rept. No. 1762).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, $480 to J. W. M. Austin for special janitor and messenger services rendered for the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry from July 1, 1921, to July 1, 1922.

The following committee amendment was read:

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is for the janitor who served the Joint Committee on Agricultural Investigation, who worked for over 12 months on their investigations. The committee thought the claim was exorbitant and cut it better than half and recommend the passage of the resolution as amended.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The other day we raised the chief janitor of the House to $2,040 with the bonus. If the gentleman will go downstairs and look at the ceiling opposite the room of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] he will find cobwebs on the ceiling so thick that he can not see the ceiling. I thought after that janitor had his salary raised to $2,040 a year we might get rid of those cobwebs.

Mr. IRELAND. He is only the chief janitor.

Mr. BLANTON. That is in the main corridor downstairs.

Mr. IRELAND. I know that.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should be hypercritical of these allowances made to faithful helpers in connection with our work here. This evening we had occasion to note that the distinguished gentleman from Texas somewhat criticized the Official Reporters of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, not the reporters of this House.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I am very glad to be corrected on that.

Mr. BLANTON. They are the most efficient men we have in this Government.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Not long ago the Washington Post carried a picture in the rotogravure edition of their paper of these gentlemen and they were designated "The sad-faced men" for the reason that they had been compelled through all these years to listen to so many congressional speeches.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTRA COMPENSATION TO CLAYTON F. MOORE AND OTHERS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, for extra services rendered and overtime work performed for the Committee on Ways and Means during the Sixty-seventh Congress, the following sums, namely: To Clayton F. Moore, $1,500; Alice V. Meeker, $500; Frank A. Kidd, $500; Albert Reid, $500; Grace Greenwood, $500; Marguerite A. Curtiss, $300; Carrie O. Rode, $300; Harry Parker, $300; and Samuel Hardy, $300.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of the language in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "To Clayton F. Moore, $500; Alice V. Meeker, $300; Carrie L. Kidd, widow of the late Frank A. Kidd, $300; Albert Reid, $300; Grace Greenwood, $300; Marguerite A. Curtiss, $200; Carrie O. Rode, $200; Harry Parker, $200; and Samuel Hardy, $200."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman yield to me for five minutes on this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not yield at present, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk for a few minutes myself.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this resolution comes to us for additional compensation to the employees of the Committee on Ways and Means for additional work and additional time put in with that committee during the preparation of revenue and tariff bills. No one conversant with the tremendous work that was attempted during the time of the preparation of these bills will deny that the employees were taxed to their utmost, and if they had not possessed an unusual capacity, an unusual knowledge of the facts, figures, and statistics, it would likely not have been possible for the Committee on Ways and Means to have brought forth their bills in the time they did. I grant that almost every committee in this House has favored employees to whom it would like to pay additional compensation, and I am not willing to say that to do so would not be just and right. Their knowledge of their employees is better than mine, and I do not mean to insinuate that it would do an injustice to the others in compensating these. Yet their duties were unusually heavy. For years we have compensated the people who have been assigned from the Pension Department to the Pension Committees here in the House, with no greater reasons for doing it than the attempt now to compensate these employees of the Committee on Ways and Means. The other body—the Senate—gave their Chief Clerk, corresponding to the gentleman mentioned in this resolution, $2,000 for his additional work. The committee thought that the demands were perhaps a trifle too large, though perhaps not inadequate for the service rendered, and perhaps quite worthy of every cent that was asked, but in the knowledge of the other operating committees that are busy in the House to-day and their employees, it was thought that the sums named in the resolution should be cut down proportionately, as they have been.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Will these employees during the long vacation that we are about to have be retained as employees of the committee?

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, certainly everybody knows that. That is a bald argument that is brought out time and again.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I know that the same kind of evasive arguments are usually offered for raids on the Treasury of this sort, and I am going to make the point of no quorum if we are to have legislation of this sort.

Mr. IRELAND. Quite so. Let me answer the gentleman just on that point. Of course, they will have a vacation during the entire summer, and so will the employees of every other committee, and so will the Members of Congress, but these employees worked night and day for several months on these bills.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and we have our clerks doing the same kind of work in all of our offices.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that we disagree to the Senate amendments on the bill H. R. 14222, to amend the trading with the enemy act, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the House disagree to the Senate amendments on the bill H. R. 14222, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees:

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Mr. LEA of California.

EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR CLAYTON B. MOORE AND OTHERS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, to see the Committee on Accounts bring the resolution which is now pending before the House for consideration. The Committee on Ways and Means has a corps of clerks. Those clerks are employed to do the work of the committee. The mere fact that the committee has some work to do occasionally is no justification for giving additional compensation during the period of that work. There are many times the Committee on Ways and Means have nothing of any consequence to do, and yet during all of that period the clerks of the committee are paid the compensation allowed by law. The Committee on Appropriations has a corps of clerks working night and day, 327 days in the year. They ask no extra compensation for overtime work.

Mr. IRELAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Now, an attempt is made to increase the compensation of the clerks of the Ways and Means Committee simply because they have work to do. The Committee on Appropriations reduced the cost of the clerical force for 1924 by a thousand dollars. The Committee on Appropriations has more work to do in any single day than the Committee on Ways and Means does in a year. We take over 20,000 pages of testimony a year, and they do all the indexing and compiling and everything connected with that work, and there is no man anywhere connected with the clerical force who demands or even requests additional compensation. These men are there to work, they do work, they must work, and they are being paid for the work they do, but they get no extra compensation. They are glad to work for what the law provides. [Applause.] And that is what ought to be done with the clerical force of every committee of the House. There is no man here who has more respect for the membership of the Ways and Means Committee than I. Every man on that committee is my friend, and I hope I am his, but I do not propose to stand here as a Member of the House and without a protest see this increase of $4,700 in the expenses of the clerical force of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. IRELAND. There is no $4,700.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what it is.

Mr. IRELAND. There is $2,500.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what is set up here.

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman did not listen to the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. You have cut it down; but, whatever it is, it ought not to be paid. What is the clerical force for? Is it to sit there during the period of idleness, during the period when the committee has no work to do, and draw pay, and then, perchance, when the committee is called upon to work for a month or two or three or four or six, as the case may be, that then we must pay them for that work regardless of the fact that during more than half the year they have had nothing of any consequence to do? Now, they are going to be idle for nine months. They will get their pay. Is there anybody here who will propose to give them additional compensation for the period in which Congress is not going to be in session because, perchance, they may be compelled to live in Washington during that period? I hope the bill will not pass.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to say to my beloved friend from Illinois, and I mean what I say—he is my friend—but, Mr. MADDEN, the Ways and Means Committee took more hearings on the tariff bill than you say your whole committee took in a whole damn year. [Laughter and applause.] I recommended to the Committee on Accounts the sums to be paid to each of those clerks as was provided for in the bill when introduced. The committee saw fit greatly to reduce that amount. I thank the committee for reporting any amount, because it is a recognition of the efficiency and of the service rendered by the clerks of that committee in the preparation of these great bills. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois I do not discredit at all the clerks of the Appropriations Committee. I know nothing about what they are doing. I would follow the recommendation of my beloved friend from Illinois if he wished to compensate them for some extra services over what they were expected to perform for their regular salary.

Mr. MADDEN. We have no extra services, night or day.

Mr. BLANTON. Good.

Mr. FORDNEY. My friend from Texas is always noisy. [Laughter.] There is more noise wrapped up in that little piece of hide than I ever saw in all my life. [Laughter and applause.] Several clerks who are recognized in this resolution, two especially, were detailed from the Printing Office, and one man, who now rests in his silent grave, who died suddenly only a week ago, many times I have seen him at work at his desk in the Ways and Means room as late as 2 o'clock in the morning, having worked all day and up to that time of night saving the people of this country, the taxpayers, thousands of dollars in the printing that was obliged to be sent to the Printing Office from the Ways and Means Committee because of his knowledge of printing. He is dead and gone, and only the day before he died he came to me and said that he had been retired from Government service because of his age and he had but a small pittance left to live upon. He is recognized in this bill when it was introduced. Now his widow, I hope, may get the amount allowed for here, because he was entitled to the amount that has been set forth in this bill allowed for him. I hope every man here will recognize the services rendered by the clerks whose names are mentioned in the bill and will vote for the amount provided. I think they are justly entitled to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IRELAND) there were—ayes 203, noes 0.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. MADDEN called for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 144, noes 73.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll. As many as favor the resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 113, answered "present" 1, not voting 161, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE CLERK.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution that I send to the Clerk's desk. I am informed that it is necessary as a confirming resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 465, Rept. No. 1764) carrying out the purposes of a House resolution, providing for a legislative clerk to the acting minority leader of the House, adopted March 3, 1923.

Be it resolved, etc., That in order to carry out the purpose of the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on March 3, 1923 (H. Res. No. 565), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient for such purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Accounts has no appropriating authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EMBASSY BUILDING, PARIS, FRANCE.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4594. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 4594.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 4594) to authorize the Secretary of State to acquire in Paris a site, with an erected building thereon, at a cost not to exceed $300,000 for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, empowered, at a cost not to exceed $300,000 for both site and building or buildings, to acquire in Paris a site, together with the building or buildings thereon, for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, and the appropriation of the sum of $150,000 is hereby authorized in addition to a like sum heretofore appropriated for this purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. BLANTON demanded a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to demand a second.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object; we might as well be wasting time on this as something else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from New York will take their places as tellers.

The committee divided, and the tellers reported 123 in the affirmative and none in the negative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A second is ordered. The gentleman from New York has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois has 20 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman from New York begins, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just counted a quorum, not five minutes go.

Mr. BLANTON. It is evident there is no quorum in the Chamber.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. More than half of the Members did not go between the tellers. The Chair has counted a quorum within the last five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a constitutional question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair disagrees with the gentleman in respect to the quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair never could agree with me on a proposition.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to empower the Secretary of State to purchase a building and about an acre and a third of property in Paris for embassy purposes. For about 12 years, since the first act of Congress to authorize the purchase of embassy properties in foreign capitals, the State Department has attempted to purchase embassy properties within the limits of the authorization of previous acts. The authorization was a general authorization, applicable to all capitals without regard to the size of the city, and it has been limited to $150,000. It is obvious that while $150,000 is sufficient to purchase property for embassy purposes in places of comparatively small population, it is impossible, and it has proven impossible, to purchase property in any large center for any such sum. Indeed, it would be impossible, except for the extraordinary situation existing at the present date, to purchase any property adequate for the purpose at a sum as small as $300,000. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars for Paris has not only been authorized by previous legislation but there has also been a previous appropriation of $150,000, and this increases the amount authorized by an additional $150,000. This same property in 1913, when Assistant Secretary Bliss was in Paris looking for embassy properties, was examined by him, and at that time he was unable to get a price that was not more than $1,000,000. The fact that at this time, if we act at once—and immediate action is required—he can get the property for as low an amount as $300,000 is due in part to the rate of exchange and is also due to some extent to the present financial circumstances of the owner.

I have a letter here from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. PORTER, to which I desire to call your attention, and which is as follows:

FEBRUARY 10, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. PORTER: In conformity with the desire you have expressed to know my views regarding the desirability of purchasing in Paris a property which has been offered to the United States ambassador to be used as the American Embassy, it gives me pleasure to inform you that from reports received from Ambassador Herrick an unusual opportunity is offered to acquire a very desirable property at a comparatively small price. It is my understanding that the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs have been shown photographs and ground plans of this property, which is very conveniently located in the seventh arrondissement, or ward, of the city of Paris. In this same ward are situated 10 out of 15 ministries of the French Government, among which is the ministry for foreign affairs, only a few minutes' walk from the property. There are in the same ward four embassies and three legations of other countries, as well as the chamber of deputies, the war college, and the offices of the military governor of Paris and of Marshal Foch. Within a short distance and in a neighboring ward are the senate and school of fine arts. It will therefore be seen that for the purpose of the embassy the property is particularly well located.

As to its accessibility for Americans and others who have occasion to call at the embassy, it can be easily reached by means of the various rapid-transit systems of Paris, as a subway station is shortly to be opened within 100 yards of the property, while a street-car and bus line run down the Boulevard des Invalides, on which the property faces, and another bus line on a cross street three doors away. The property is about an acre and a third in area and extends through from one street to the large Boulevard des Invalides.

It is important to emphasize that the property is particularly well suited for the ambassador's residence and for offices of the foreign service, as the type of the house is of the style of a large private dwelling, with a suitable building for offices on the street and an intervening courtyard between the two. Beyond the residence is situated a garden which gives onto the boulevard. In this connection it can be added that the ordinary modern house does not afford the facilities for installation of offices which the property now offered to the Government admits of in an admirable manner.

The property would seem to be well situated also as regards its protection from future encroachment of undesirable buildings, as the ministry of colonies is one block south on the Boulevard des Invalides, while the block to the north toward the River Seine is entirely occupied by the buildings of a large school and Government-owned garden and the building of the Rodin Museum. Opposite the entire garden frontage of the property on the Boulevard des Invalides is a square on which is situated a large church. The southern half of the block adjacent to this property is occupied by the buildings and garden of a convent, and there are three private houses with gardens on the northern half. The Chinese Legation is diagonally across the street from the property.

Experience has shown that in order to obtain property suitable for embassy purposes in the large capitals of Europe the sum of $150,000, heretofore authorized by Congress, is insufficient. I earnestly hope that with the present possibility of acquiring exceptionally valuable land on which are erected buildings well adapted to embassy purposes and conveniently located Congress will authorize the sum stated in the bill which Mr. FAIRCHILD has introduced for this purpose.

I am, my dear Mr. PORTER, very sincerely yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. If we have saved $700,000 since Assistant Secretary Bliss was over there a few months ago, perhaps if we wait for six months longer we will get it for nothing.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Of course, the gentleman well knows, as stated by me a moment ago, that it is because of the extraordinary situation at the present time that this opportunity exists.

Mr. McSWAIN. The two circumstances the gentleman mentioned, to wit, the rate of exchange and the lady's financial circumstances. She may get in worse circumstances, and the rate of exchange may become more unfavorable.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I may say further that more than $300,000 has been offered for this same property by business interests in Paris, who wish to purchase the land, tear down the building which was constructed prior to the French Revolution, and was completed in 1786. There are sentimental attachments to the building that induces the lady who is the owner to prefer to have it purchased by the United States Government for embassy purposes rather than to have it destroyed to make way for business buildings.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is the lot located in the business section of the city?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. It is located in the same ward in which are located 10 of 15 of the French ministries, including the foreign office, and it is in the same ward as the chamber of deputies.

In December, 1922, I was in Paris and visited the property upon the suggestion of Mr. Herrick, the American ambassador. It impressed me, as it certainly would impress any Member of this House having equal opportunity to inspect the premises, as a most desirable purchase in every respect. Our ambassador is alive to the opportunity and is keenly interested to have the dignity of America maintained in the French capital with a suitable embassy building comparable to the embassies of other nations. Since the days of Gallatin, American ambassadors have fully appreciated the disadvantage America suffers in its failure to own suitable embassy properties, and yet Congress failed to act until 1911. Even then the authorization by Congress was too niggardly to permit purchase of suitable properties in any of the leading capitals where property values are high. Only recently we witnessed what to many appeared to be a humiliating spectacle when an American embassy building in London was acquired only through the acceptance by this great country of ours of a gratuity from an American millionaire. The story is told of Joseph H. Choate that one evening when he was taking a midnight stroll along a London street he was stopped by a policeman who inquired, "Where is your home?" Choate replied, "I have none; I am the American ambassador."

In negotiations to secure an appropriate embassy property in Paris, America has a real asset in the person of our present ambassador, whose knowledge of Paris and of embassy needs and whose business ability and training, together with a just pride in America, render him in a special degree of great value to us in the present emergency. If anyone can secure this property, he can. When secured he will be as zealous as a young bride with a new home to make it all that patriotic Americans would desire. I earnestly hope that an American embassy building will be secured in Paris while Myron T. Herrick is the American ambassador to France.

I shall incorporate as a part of my remarks a statement descriptive of the Condé property and of the embassy buildings in Paris of other nations, furnished me in Paris by Ambassador Herrick, as follows:

DESCRIPTIVE STATEMENT OF PROPERTY.

The Hotel de Condé, in the rue Monsieur, near the tomb of Napoleon, was built shortly before the French Revolution for Mademoiselle de Condé, aunt of the Duke d' Enghien, and was designed by Brogniart, one of the famous architects of the time. Major l'Enfant, who planned the city of Washington, was one of Brogniart's pupils.

The Hotel de Condé runs between two streets and contains a fine garden. The residence is situated at the back of a large court, on both sides of which as well as on the side of the street entrance are spacious annexes, serving in former days as a chapel, coach houses, and quarters for the retinue of the princess, all of which would be most suitable for offices of the embassy staff, as well as for those of the military and naval attachés.

The house itself contains art treasures of the epoch of great value, among which are bas-reliefs by Clodion and panels by Boucher. An added sentimental interest for Americans is the fact that this house was for many years during the last century the residence of the distinguished French statesman, the Comte de Chambrun, a descendant of Lafayette and uncle of the recent chargé d'affaires at Washington.

Nearly all large countries, as well as small ones, own their chancery and embassy here, the cost in each case exceeding the appropriation made by our Government. Real estate here is of a value corresponding to that in New York, and the value of the embassies of other countries installed here is about as follows:

The British Embassy and its chancery furnished is worth two and a half to three million dollars at least; probably more. This mansion was the residence of Pauline Bonaparte, Princess Borghese, sister of Napoleon. The property passed by purchase from her possession in 1814, with its costly furniture and ornaments, to the British Government for the use of the embassy, the Duke of Wellington negotiating the sale. The price agreed upon was £32,000, but two months after the battle of Waterloo he sent in a bill to his Government for £2,500 "for repairs to the house, made by my directions when I was ambassador at Paris."

The German Embassy, which is worth about a million dollars, was, during the first Empire, the Paris residence of Prince Eugene de Beauharnais, Viceroy of Italy and stepson of Napoleon I.

The Austrian Embassy, now in the hands of the French Government, is worth approximately two to three million dollars.

The Spanish Embassy, which is worth about $1,000,000, was the home of the Prince de Wagram, who was killed in the late war, the last male descendent of Napoleon's marshal, Berthier.

The Italian Embassy was purchased as a bargain in 1912 or 1913 when I was ambassador here, and I believe it cost about $750,000. It is worth considerably more now.

Poland has recently purchased a fine building.

Belgium has very valuable legation quarters, the figures of which I have not before me.

Holland this last year purchased a building for something like half a million dollars.

The need of an embassy in Paris has been recognized ever since we became a nation. Albert Gallatin said 106 years ago, "The prospect seems good that the United States will purchase a building for its embassy within a year." For 106 years every succeeding envoy has been hoping that this prospect might come true. This embassy, as you know, is the most important in Europe, and it is vitally necessary to have adequate quarters for our growing staff. It is from this embassy that cables for all Europe are distributed.

I have said that Mr. Bliss, Third Assistant Secretary of State, visited the Condé property in 1913. He testified before the committee, and I quote extracts from his testimony, as follows:

EXTRACTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF MR. BLISS.

I have been all over the property. Some years ago, in 1913, at the time I was in the embassy I visited it when it was offered for sale. Whenever there was a good property that came into the market, I always examined it to see if it was a possible embassy and made a report to the Department of State. At that time I do not recall what the price of it was, but I think, roughly speaking, it was six or seven million francs, and at that time the franc was at par, which would mean over a million dollars.

Question. What is your opinion as to this price of $300,000?

Mr. BLISS. It is a great bargain; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. Herrick has been in definite negotiations with the owner of the house, who is an elderly woman and who wants to have it preserved, as the chairman just stated, because of its architectural and historical interest.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLISS. After the meeting of the committee to consider the bill of Mr. FAIRCHILD, in which a subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the chairman of the committee and Mr. FAIRCHILD, a telegram was sent to Mr. Herrick, embodying the views of the committee regarding the matter, directing him to obtain an option on the property. That was covered very fully in the text of the message which was drawn up by the subcommittee. Mr. Herrick replied to that in a day or two.

Question. Is it your understanding from the communications between the State Department and Ambassador Herrick that he is confident that if this bill passes he will be able to secure this property?

Mr. BLISS. I understand from the statement in his telegram that it is very definite that he will have no difficulty in obtaining an option on the purchase of the property by the end of this month.

Question. He feels sure that he will, now that he has acquainted the owner or the owner's attorney with the fact that the United States is the purchaser?

Mr. BLISS. From what Mr. Herrick says in his telegram, I think he has some unwritten understanding with the lawyer of the owner.

* * * * * * *

Question. Can you tell the committee what is the amount of money that is being paid by the United States at the present time in the form of rental for the embassy?

Mr. BLISS. For the embassy the Department of State now pays an annual rental of 86,500 francs. That amounted when I was before the committee the other day—I have not computed that at the rate of exchange at the present time—the other day the rate was 6.920; the franc has gone off a little since then. That does not include the rent paid by the military attaché, I think, for his office. He has offices in the same building, but they are separate, and I should say the rent was about 1,500 francs, roughly estimated.

Question. Does that include the amount paid for the accommodation of the passport office?

Mr. BLISS. The passport offices are 56,000 francs, or $4,480, and the consulate general, since you are asking that question, I will add, pays a rental of 18,000 francs. That is the rental made some time before the war for a period of years, so that it is a very advantageous rate.

Question. It would be very much greater at the present time?

Mr. BLISS. It would be greater now, and he would have to pay a much higher rate than ever to renew the lease of the present consul general's office.

Question. The building area of the Condé property would be sufficient to house all of these offices?

Mr. BLISS. It might be necessary to have separate offices for accessibility more to commercial interests that appeal to the consul general, but part of the consulate general could undoubtedly be housed there.

Question. The question was directed to the area of the building?

Mr. BLISS. There is ample space to increase the building to accommodate all the offices we ever could need.

Question. In the present buildings there is ample space to accommodate all of these offices?

Mr. BLISS. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLISS. Property owned by foreign governments for embassy purposes is free from taxation in France, exempted from tax.

Question. The rental figures you gave—do they include rental for the ambassadors' homes?

Mr. BLISS No. The ambassador's home is paid by him personally.

* * * * * * *

Question. This bill will provide a home for the ambassador?

Mr. BLISS. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Question. My understanding of the telegrams that have passed officially between the State Department and Ambassador Herrick is that Ambassador Herrick feels assured and the State Department feels assured that if this bill passes Mr. Herrick will be able to secure this property within the $300,000 to be assigned?

Mr. BLISS. That is our understanding.

A recent letter received by me from the ambassador confirms the information contained in the committee report from which I have freely quoted, and gives additional information of value. It also bears witness to his enthusiastic desire to secure for America a property in keeping with the dignity of our great Nation. I quote from this letter as follows:

It is not difficult to estimate real estate values in Paris, as they are well established. The real estate of this property, consisting of 5,565 square meters of land, regardless of the buildings, is worth, compared with other real estate in this section of the city, the proposed purchase price. The extent of the real estate of the Condé property is another strong argument in favor of its purchase by our Government since such properties, which cover so large an area of ground, are no longer feasible for private ownership in view of the present taxation, from which the United States would be exempt. As far as embassy uses are concerned the buildings of the Condé property are of equal value to that of the land.

I wish it were possible for me to impart to every Member of Congress my enthusiasm for the purchase of the Hotel de Condé. If they could only see and understand the situation here, as you and I do, there would not be an instant's hesitation in taking advantage of this bargain. I am confident of the soundness of my judgment in this matter, for I have been familiar with real-estate transactions throughout my entire business career.

I think I know rather well the needs of my Government, and it is needless for me to tell you that nothing would appeal more to my patriotic interest and devotion than to be permitted to install a dignified embassy and chancery for the United States in Paris, I would even go to the extent of making some personal contribution, as I have indicated, rather than let this remarkable opportunity slip.

The rental of my modest residence in Paris, which you have seen, averages, with the varying exchanges, something more than my salary, and this house is not comparable in importance to any of the embassies or legations which I have heretofore mentioned. I shall be obliged, as I told you, to give up this residence in October, as the owner does not wish to rent it for a longer term, and, thus far, I have not been able to find anything suitable for an embassy for less than $20,000 per annum, approximately.

Should the Hotel de Condé be purchased, I could, by using my furniture, renting and buying additional furniture, occupy the premises, after a fashion, in October. The chancery could be made ready to install the staff, with the military and naval attachés, by the time the lease expires on the quarters now occupied in the rue de Chaillot, the quarters I leased for the chancery before the war. The rent for the chancery in the present location is 85,450 francs, which amounts to the interest at 5 per cent on a very considerable part of the proposed purchase price of the Condé property.

In case the owner of the Hotel de Condé fails to grant the option, as it now appears may be the case, I hope you may so amend your bill as to leave in the hands of the Government an appropriation, not less than the sum mentioned for this property, which may be available later on if some other property comes on the market. In no case can we hope to obtain an embassy worthy of our country for a sum less than the amount I named for the Condé property. The appropriation really should be much larger, for it is not at all probable that so fine a bargain as the Hotel de Condé will occur again.

We were deeply interested in the statement of ex-Ambassador Davis before the Foreign Affairs Committee in connection with the Rogers bill, in which he said that while he lived in London "quietly and modestly" his job cost him three times his salary, his annual expenditures being about $50,000. I have copied and inclose herewith two or three references which ex-Ambassador Page made in his letters to the need of the United States for proper embassies and legations in foreign countries.

One hundred and seven years ago Albert Gallatin wrote, "By another year we shall undoubtedly be installed in a legation owned by the United States Government." There has been awakened in my breast by the recent discussion the same hope that Albert Gallatin had, to the extent that I am willing to stake a forfeit.

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast!
"Man (and nations) never is but always to be blest."

Let us hope that this case will be an exception. At any rate, Congress, should it approve your bill in regard to the Condé property, or if this purchase is not effected amend your bill so as to make the appropriation available for whatever property may come on the market later on, could hardly be accused of acting precipitately after a deliberation of almost a century and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members present; a quorum.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the speech made by the gentleman from New York on the question of the necessity for a great embassy building in Paris. I was rather amused when he said, or somebody said for him, that we ought to buy this building now, because it is worth a million dollars and that we could buy it for $300,000. Then I inquired of myself, What does anyone need of an embassy in Paris or any other place worth $1,000,000? Should we buy it because we do not want to appoint an ambassador anywhere except a man who can afford to live in a $1,000,000 building, or is it because we want to curtail the right of men who have brains and have no money to represent us as ambassadors? Of course, it is impossible for one to live simply in one of these palatial embassies.

No one can afford to live in a $1,000,000 embassy unless he is a rich man, to say nothing of the cost of maintaining such a building.

It seems a most ludicrous thing that at this hour of the morning on the 4th day of March——

A MEMBER. The 3d.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the 4th day of March. We are going out of existence as a Congress in a few hours more, and yet we come here at this late hour of the night or early hour of the morning to provide palatial quarters for American representatives in a European city, and yet we refuse as the Congress of the United States to appropriate money to put up the buildings we need for public business in the country in which we reside. We passed an act not very long ago providing not to exceed $150,000 for any embassy building anywhere in the world. This bill here proposes to double the limit of cost as to Paris. Well, now, if as to Paris, why not as to Berlin? If as to Berlin, why not as to Budapest or as to any other place in the world?

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TEMPLE. How long ago, is the gentleman able to say, was that bill passed?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, several years.

Mr. TEMPLE. Was it about 12 years ago?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but the needs of the embassy situation are not any greater to-day than they were then, and a $150,000 house is big enough for any American to live in anywhere in the world. [Applause.] I am opposed to these bills, and I am opposed to these princes of finance being sent abroad as American ambassadors because of the contributions they make to campaign funds, Democrats and Republicans alike. [Applause.] I want to see the time come when America will take its place as the foremost nation in favor of ambassadors who have brains [applause], and I do not want the dollar to be the only qualification for appointment to ambassadorial positions. I want the man to be educated; I want him to be a gentleman; I want him to be a thorough American representative of America, fit in all the phases of American life.

I do not want him to live in such palatial quarters that I, as an humble, common, everyday American, if by any chance I should find myself in Paris, would not dare call upon him because of the luxury with which he is surrounded. I want to find myself when I approach an embassy of America in Paris or elsewhere to be at least on equal terms with the man who occupies the place. When I go abroad, if I should choose to call upon the American representative, I want to call upon a man who has the time to take off from cutting coupons from his bonds to give me consideration. [Applause.] I do not want an American ambassador to be so skilled in finance that he has no time for diplomacy.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would like to call upon me if I lived in a back street or in a back alleyway, where I had to live on account of the scrimping of this country?

Mr. MADDEN. That is where I have always been obliged to live——

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. And I am proud of my humble surroundings. If by any chance I should be so fortunate that I can live in a better, a more commodious place, I do so out of the revenues that I make and not out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman makes many more speeches like the one he just made and the one he made a while ago, he has got to come over on this side of the aisle to be in good company.

Mr. MADDEN. I just picked up a copper cent on the floor, and I hand it to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield for an entirely serious statement?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, indeed; I am serious.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman remind the House—and I am serious—that the greatest ambassador that this country ever sent to the court at Paris was Benjamin Franklin, who went there in his homespun clothes, and his memory lives to-day?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; he was a credit to the Nation, and a splendid record he made. I am proud of his memory, proud of the loan that he secured from France while there; and I say to you, gentlemen of the House, it may seem to be a laughing matter, but it is a very serious matter. I would like to be able to see some of these common, everyday men who served with us in this establishment. Oh, FRANK MONDELL and HENRY COOPER and WALLACE DEMPSEY and Mr. FESS and——

Mr. UPSHAW. Mention some of the Democrats.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. UPSHAW.

Mr. MADDEN. UPSHAW-Paris. [Laughter.] Oh, and BLANTON. Well, gentlemen, to proceed, to start where I stopped, I say that so many of these gentlemen are qualified to be American ambassadors, and I named about an equal number from the Democrat and Republican sides, but unfortunately no matter whether the administration be Democrat or Republican we have always chosen millionaires for Paris. I do not say that they have not rendered good service; but I hope that the time will come when it will not be necessary to pick a millionaire. I had something to do with the fixing of the limit of cost.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MADDEN. In just a moment.

I had something to do, I say, with the fixing of the limit of cost on ambassadorial residences abroad. My colleague, Frank Lowden, when he was a Member of the House, wanted to fix the limit of cost at $500,000. That is the way he felt. He was a multimillionaire; he could afford to move into a house that would cost that. I felt that $50,000 was enough, but I compromised on $150,000. I think that is too much.

Yet our friend from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] comes in complacently here to-night, walks up to the captain's desk, and gets permission from the Republican leader to move to suspend the rules and pass this bill, that authorizes the expenditure of $300,000 for an embassy building in Paris, and they say we ought to buy it because the building is worth a million dollars. Now, if the building is worth a million dollars, I submit to you that there is not any ordinary American that could live in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the banker of Pennsylvania could live in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFADDEN. How much did the gentleman provide for greenhouses down in the Botanic Garden?

Mr. MADDEN. Not a dollar.

Mr. McFADDEN. You tried to.

Mr. MADDEN. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLANTON. No; he cut that out.

Mr. MADDEN. There is not a dollar for it, and even if there were, that is an American institution at home, where every man from the farms in the gentleman's district can come and regale himself by smelling the delicious perfume of the beautiful flowers down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield just yet; whereas if he went to Paris, he would not be able to get under the shed of the embassy entrance, because the man who lives in such a luxurious building would be so much of an aristocrat that he would not recognize the plain, ordinary, common, everyday citizen of Pennsylvania far enough to admit him to the embassy building. [Laughter.]

The item that the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to was to establish or rebuild a greenhouse in which to propagate and preserve the rare plants that we were told could not be moved without their dying.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understand that property in Paris is worth $1,000,000, and is owned by a poor French widow, and if this purchase is made she will thereby be robbed out of $700,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. That would be in keeping with the usual generosity of Congress, except where people have claims against the Government that have no justification. I hope we shall not commit this great mistake.

Gentlemen, think of the ordinary man for once. You have not got many people among your constituents at home that live in million-dollar houses; not many. If you had, you would not be here. They would pick somebody else. [Laughter.] Have a little common sense; keep in the ordinary walks of life; do not get above your constituents. Keep on the level with them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will undertake now, as it is after midnight, to say only a word or two, but not in any way to respond in detail to what has been said by my distinguished friend from Illinois, who speaks from the plutocratic viewpoint. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. No; I speak from a Democratic point of view. I beg the gentleman's pardon. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The committee investigated this matter with a great deal of care. I think we obtained all the information that is available. We reached the conclusion that the purchase of this property as a business proposition is an excellent thing. We believe that the price for which it can be gotten, if the transaction can be quickly consummated, is considerably less than it is really worth. This conclusion was reached without any dissent at all. The majority and the minority members of the committee unite in the opinion that the purchase ought to be made, and that is the report.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I do not object to the conclusions reached by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I was simply expressing my own views.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have great respect for the views of the gentleman, and I have followed him quite commonly in what he has advised here with reference to expenditures. The gentleman can guard the Treasury against any injudicious expenditure even in this case. The bill simply carries an authorization; an authorization that can not be executed unless the approval is had of the committee over which the distinguished gentleman presides with such great ability. Unless the Committee on Appropriations should be of opinion, upon such investigation as it may make, that the project is injudicious, doubtless that committee will hereafter report the necessary appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] very feelingly and eloquently said he wanted this Government to be represented abroad by brains, and that he was opposed to the appointment of millionaires as ambassadors. One of the reasons why only millionaires can serve abroad is that the Government of the United States does not provide any official residences and offices for our ambassadors abroad. [Applause.]

Now, do not take up all my two minutes with that applause. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Illinois can explain how a man can live on brains and sleep in a house made out of brains in Paris, then there will be no reason for enacting this bill. I have generally followed the gentleman from Illinois on ordinary appropriations, but it is getting to be rather unpopular to do so, measured by the manner in which the House has expressed itself here to-night.

Of course I am not anxious to spend this $300,000. I always regret the necessity for appropriations, but the poor oppressed taxpayer out in Illinois, for whom the gentleman pleads, will be taxed to pay rent in Paris as long as this Government survives, unless we purchase an embassy building. As to the proposed purchase, our committee looked into it. We believed it to be a good bargain.

Personally I do not care whether you pass this bill or not, because I do not expect to hobnob around the embassy in Paris. But I do believe that if this Government wants to provide for the American Embassy in Paris, and to provide offices for the consul general in Paris, a place that will comport somewhat with the dignity and majesty and might of this great Government, you ought to pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; I can not yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If gentlemen want the American ambassador to live in some back alley and subsist on cheese and crackers, vote this thing down; but if you want him to occupy quarters somewhat commensurate with the dignity of the United States Government, you ought to pass this bill, and pass it to-night. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas his expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 170 ayes and 67 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Forty-one Members have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just counted a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, the Chair can arbitrarily rule that way, but to-morrow he will not be able to do so.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the words of the gentleman from Texas be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair pays no attention to what the gentleman from Texas says.

MONUMENT TO AMERICAN WOMEN FOR SERVICES IN WORLD WAR.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Joint Resolution 168, now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speakers' table Senate Joint Resolution 168 and consider the same. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 168) in relation to a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the United States of America, its insular possessions, and the District of Columbia in the World War.

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000 as a part contribution to the erection of a memorial building, with equipment, in the District of Columbia to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the patriotic women of the United States of America, of its insular possessions, and of the District of Columbia during the World War. Said memorial to be erected on the land now occupied in part by the Memorial to the Women of the Civil War, the permanent headquarters of the American Red Cross.

SEC. 2. That said memorial shall be a building monumental in design and character and shall be used as a permanent model chapter house for the American Red Cross under the charge of the District of Columbia Red Cross Chapter and shall cost not less than $300,000: Provided, That this expenditure shall include complete equipment.

SEC. 3. That the sum hereby appropriated shall not be payable until there shall be raised by private subscription an additional sum of $150,000.

SEC. 4. That the money hereby appropriated shall not be paid until the plan of the proposed building shall have been approved by a commission consisting of the president of the American Red Cross, the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and a representative of the central committee of the American Red Cross. The plans of the said memorial shall likewise be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

The expenditures for said memorial building shall be made under the direction of a commission consisting of the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library and the chairman of the House Committee on the Library. That said memorial building shall remain the property of the United States Government but under the supervision of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the American Red Cross shall at all times be charged with the responsibility, the care, keeping, and maintenance of the said memorial building without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, this bill, as the one preceding, may not be effective for nearly a year, and there is no sense or reason whatever for this House in its present mood, when it can not give proper consideration to legislation, taking up matters of this kind, that present no emergency, and keeping the House here all night, and I object.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 168. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GILBERT. I demand a second.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. BLANTON objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were 63 ayes and 38 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, because there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members present, a quorum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Speaker wants to be correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is not that number in the Hall. If the Chair does not count the Members elect, there are not 200 in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has made a count of the Members present.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Chair is not entitled to count Members elect, not Members of this Congress.

Mr. KINCHELOE. A parliamentary inquiry. I feel that the Chair has counted the new Members in place of the lame ducks, and I would like to know if he has counted the old Members as well.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess.

Mr. SNYDER. That is clearly dilatory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the motion that the House do now stand in recess.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of taking this question by the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Fifty-four Members have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the House standing in recess will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 177, not voting 192, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6650) providing additional terminal facilities in square east of 710 and square 712 in the District of Columbia for freight traffic.

JOINT COMMISSION OF GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on Senate Joint Resolution 287, creating the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri calls from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 287, with a House amendment, disagreed to by the Senate, and moves to agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order. That has to be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I think it does, even on the last six days of the sessions. I think it requires unanimous consent for a motion to suspend the rules. This is a request for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was of opinion that it was privileged to agree to the conference asked.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, Mr. Speaker, the Senate passes a resolution. The House amends it. It goes back to the originating body, the Senate. They disagree to the House amendment and ask for a conference. It is perfectly proper for the House to agree to the conference, to insist upon its amendment, and agree to the conference asked for, so that the two bodies can get together. That is fundamental in arriving at an agreement between the two bodies. What else can be done? Of course, the House can recede and withdraw its amendment. That can be done at any time, but it is so rare that it is never considered. The only thing now before the House, in order to bring the two bodies together, is to either not have a conference and leave the bill die, or to insist on the amendment of the House and agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is quite true, of course, that in order to bring the two bodies together there must be a conference or a recession, but the method of getting the matter to conference——

Mr. STAFFORD. Is privileged.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but not even an appropriation bill or a bill of any sort has ever been sent to conference except by unanimous consent or under special rule or by suspension of the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. With all due deference to the gentleman, he confuses the conditions. He is taking the case of a Senate amendment to a House bill which involves an appropriation, which must be sent either to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it is a charge on the Treasury, before it is agreed to, or else to conference under unanimous consent, but that is not this case. I know what the gentleman is referring to. The gentleman is referring to this situation: The House passes a bill. It goes to the Senate. The Senate amends it with a proposal that carries a charge on the Treasury. It comes back, and of course the person having the bill in charge must ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference. But in the instant case the situation is reversed. The House amends a Senate bill and the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House and asks for a conference. For the very reason that conference reports are privileged, because they bring the Houses that much nearer to agreement as to their differences, the motion to insist on the amendment of the House and agree to the conference asked for is privileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. In this case the Senate passed a resolution. The House amended it and sent the resolution to the Senate with a House amendment. The Senate has disagreed to the amendment of the House and sends the resolution back to the House with its disagreement and asks for a conference.

There is therefore a disagreement and it is well settled that when the stage of disagreement has been reached between the two Houses the matter becomes a matter of privilege. Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 236, summing up the matter, states:

This was a case wherein the Senate had disagreed to a House amendment and asked for a conference.

It is an accepted principle that after the stage of disagreement has been reached a bill is privileged.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course the bill is privileged. I am not talking about the privilege nature, but what I am talking about is the method of getting it to conference. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that there has never been a bill sent to conference of any character except by unanimous consent or under special rule or by a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was of the opinion that the rule did not apply during the last six days of the session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think so, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion may be made——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is within the gentleman's power, of course, to move to suspend the rules and send it to conference, but it is not in his power to move without suspending the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. May not a Senate bill with a House amendment to which the Senate has disagreed be taken from the Speaker's table as a matter of privilege?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It depends on whether it was on the Union or the House Calendar, but that is not the question before the Chair. It is a question of how to get it to conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the question of agreeing to a conference enters into the question and the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee may hinge upon the question of sending a bill to conference.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly, if I have the floor.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Tennessee concedes a motion may be made to suspend the rules?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Now, let me inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee what rule would have to be suspended in order to send this to conference? The gentleman has been recognized by the Speaker; it is a privileged matter. He has been recognized and made a motion. The gentleman from Tennessee says he can move to suspend the rules. What rule is there to suspend in order to send it to conference?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The rules which require that a bill can only go to conference by unanimous consent——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What rule is that?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HICKS. Is not the simplest way out of this whole matter to make a motion to suspend the rules and send it to conference?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know any reason why he should make a motion to suspend the rules when nobody has yet pointed out any rule he wants to be suspended. I do not know any reason why this House can not make a motion in the ordinary way; when the gentleman has obtained recognition he is entitled to make the motion. That is the ordinary way to do things. There has been no rule pointed out to be suspended, and I am not in favor of making motions to suspend some rule, unless some gentleman points to what is the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This identical question has been determined. On March 13, 1922—

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman made the motion, it does not require unanimous consent. It has a privileged status.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). It is a Senate bill with House amendments. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make the motion; it is privileged. The gentleman from Iowa moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2897, to insist upon the amendments thereto, and to agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

That is this case on all fours. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to insist upon the amendments of the House and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 191, noes 7.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RHODES, Mr. COLTON, and Mr. WINGO.

ADDITIONAL TERMINAL FACILITIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speakers' table House bill 6650, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 6650, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, let the Senate amendments be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the bill may be read so that we can tell what bill it is, there may not be any objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were again read.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker pro tempore announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. FOCHT, Mr. ZIHLMAN, and Mr. SULLIVAN.

MONUMENT TO AMERICAN WOMEN FOR SERVICES IN WORLD WAR.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in connection with Senate Joint Resolution 168, I would like to have the sympathetic attention of the Members here for a minute while I attempt to make a statement. There is no possibility of the Red Cross organization proceeding to collect money required by this bill to build the structure that is authorized by this resolution, down here on Government land, where the present beautiful Red Cross building stands, without this authority being given. If we do not do it before the close of this Congress, the Red Cross authorities can not proceed with the collection of funds. The suggestion has been made that there was no need of our proceeding now, because nothing would be done until a year from now. That is an error as must appear when the situation is understood. The difficulty is that if Congress does not do anything now there can not be anything done by the organization of the American Red Cross in the way of getting ready to meet by private subscription what this bill authorizes in the appropriation of $150,000.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I did not catch the reading of the resolution. Does it provide for the construction of a new building, or for the enlargement of the present building?

Mr. FESS. The language of the resolution is "to erect a memorial building to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the United States, and so forth, in the World War."

It is to be erected upon the present ground. It may be an enlargement of the present structure. The Congress in 1913 made an appropriation to build this memorial building if the Red Cross organization would collect the balance of the required amount. Since that was done the Red Cross has collected over $400,000,000 in money and valuable supplies to be applied to the Red Cross work. They have operated since that in 68 cases of disaster, to say nothing about the great World War.

The statement that Miss Boardman makes as the head of this wonderful institution—which by the way, allow me to say to my Democratic friends, was started under the inspiration of Grover Cleveland when he was President of the United States [applause]—is that 382,000,000 hospital, knitted, and other garments, surgical dressings, and other articles that were needed were made by volunteer women workers in the United States, and that over 40,000,000 refreshment portions were served to traveling troops and to the sick on trains, and something over 15,000,000 in France.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Is this building to be used for the District Red Cross?

Mr. FESS. It is the American Red Cross for the whole United States.

Mr. CARTER. What is that other building?

Mr. FESS. It is to be a memorial to the women of the World War. The present building is a memorial to the women of the Civil War, both North and South.

Mr. CARTER. Is the gentleman certain that it is to be used in this country?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I am. Miss Boardman, in a letter to our committee, gives its purpose:

> This memorial building will provide a very practical and valuable return to the Government. Through our Red Cross chapters last year there was expended $9,000,000 in service to the disabled men, that the Government could not render, and also $1,341,000 for 68 disasters in the United States.
> Such work as this the Red Cross will be able to continue only if plans are developed for legitimate peace-time activities by means of which these chapters are kept alive. The proposed memorial building will be utilized as a model chapter house for the development of these plans. There will be no further expense to the Government, as it will be maintained by the Red Cross, which in addition will raise $150,000 for the building.
> We do not need any appropriation this year, only the authorization of the appropriation, so that we may begin our work to raise our share of the fund and prepare our building plans.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Is this building to take the place of the temporary building on the site?

Mr. FESS. The temporary buildings will be removed. It is to cost not less than $300,000. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is to be raised by the Government, and when it is done it is the property of the United States, both the site and the building, just as the present Red Cross building is now.

Mr. ABERNETHY. This is to be used wholly by the Red Cross?

Mr. FESS. Yes; wholly by the Red Cross. It strikes me that nothing would appeal to the Members of Congress more deeply than this movement. It is asked by the women of the country; not by any sordid interests of any sort, but by those people who are back of this wonderful movement.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. When is it supposed that this will be finished?

Mr. FESS. Next year. They want to proceed now to raise the $150,000 by collections, and next year this appropriation is to operate. They hope to begin the construction early next year. I hope that this misunderstanding to the effect that there is no need of our doing it now will not lead Congress to deny its support to that effort.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there anything in the Red Cross making their contribution contingent upon appropriation being made later by Congress? We have not had a chance to get a copy of the bill to read it.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman knows very well that the Red Cross association will not go out to make any collections until this authorization of appropriation is made, because they are not people to make any assumption of that kind. I asked Miss Boardman that specific question, fearing we might not get unanimous action on this bill. I said to her, "Why not go on and collect the money now?" She said, "We could not do that. That would be assuming that Congress is going to do what here is requested, and Congress would criticize us very severely, and justly so, if we proceeded on that basis."

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Where is this building to be constructed relative to the present Red Cross building?

Mr. FESS. I did not ask Miss Boardman whether it is to be attached to the present building or is a separate building.

Mr. RAKER. The only reason I ask the question is that there is a bridge between the main building and they have built a three-story building behind that of stone and concrete. I wondered where they were going to put this building.

Mr. FESS. If you notice the resolution provides that it must be in conjunction with the Fine Arts Commission and also the approval of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. FESS. I can not believe there will be any hesitation on the part of this body to give most enthusiastic support of this outstanding movement to alleviate suffering humanity. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor therefor, the bill was passed.

UNITED STATES MILITARY RESERVATION—FORT DE RUSSY, HONOLULU, HAWAII.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the unfinished business which is S. 3424.

The Clerk read the title of the bill as follows:

An act (S. 3424) to provide for the reclamation of the United States Military Reservation, Fort De Russy, Honolulu, Hawaii.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended. Debate has been exhausted and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LONDON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. When was debate exhausted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On September 18.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts in moving to suspend the rules and pass the bill did not move that it be passed with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays the unfinished business before the House, and it is the bill with the amendment pending. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RESTRICTION AGAINST ALIENATION ON SURPLUS LANDS OF THE KANSAS OR KAW INDIANS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4544) to authorize the extension of the period of restriction against the alienation on surplus lands allotted to minor members of the Kansas or Kaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma and consider the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider the bill S. 4544. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, it is now the hour of 2 o'clock a. m., and for that reason I object.

Mr. CARTER. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. How long are we going to sit here?

Mr. CARTER. Let the gentleman from New York explain the bill and, I think, the gentleman from Texas will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw the objection, but I would like to know if we are to be here all night?

Mr. MONDELL. I hope that Members will be patient. The conference report on the Alien Property Custodian bill will be in soon.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Senate adjourned half an hour ago, and is there any reason why we should sit up here waiting for that?

Mr. McARTHUR. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, the gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SNYDER. This bill is of small moment to the public, but it is of great importance to a small band of Indians, 80 in number, of whom 16 are under restrictions. Recently oil was discovered on the reservation. On the 13th of May, unless the bill is passed, the restriction will have expired and the 16 minors will be without protection. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNYDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H. J. Res. 415. A joint resolution to authorize the improvement of the Columbia River at St. Helens, Oreg.

TITLE TO LANDS WITHIN PUEBLO INDIAN LAND GRANTS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3855) to quiet the title to lands within Pueblo Indian land grants, and for other purposes, and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make an explanation?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the bill be read first.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a great deal of opposition to this bill, as I understand it.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will let me explain, I think there will be no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is a very well posted man on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, he will not object to the bill.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I would like to have the gentleman give an explanation.

Mr. SNYDER. This bill is to correct the titles to the Pueblo Indians. There has been a great deal of discussion for several months with regard to this matter. This bill is the outcome of intensive hearings held in the Senate and in the House and it is a compromise. It embodies features that will assist tremendously at this time in straightening out the affairs of the Pueblo Indians. It provides for the appointment of a commission, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, and another to be appointed by the President, to whom the whole matter is to be brought. If these three men can not agree unanimously to any title, then that must be brought to the Congress for adjustment.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Is this the bill that we have been propagandized about so much?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. This is a compromise after consideration by all of the parties.

Mr. LITTLE. Which pueblo is this?

Mr. SNYDER. There are 20 pueblos and the bill covers them all.

Mr. LITTLE. Does this settle the title of the lands in the Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. It settles the title in the persons to whom it should go.

Mr. LITTLE. Will white men or Indians get the land?

Mr. SNYDER. Both.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

RADIO PATENTS.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution 548, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 548.

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to investigate and to report to the House of Representatives at the convening of the Sixty-eighth Congress, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the facts relating to (a) the ownership of patents covering radio apparatus used in interstate and/or foreign commerce and to all assignments or other contracts concerning such patents; (b) contracts, leases, or agreements in whatsoever form the same may be, or practices, the purpose, tendency, or effect of which is to control or restrict the manufacture, sale, resale, or use within the United States of such radio apparatus or to control or fix the price therefor; (c) contracts, leases, or agreements in whatsoever form the same may be, or practices, the purpose, tendency, or effect of which is to give exclusive rights or special privileges in the reception and transmission in interstate and/or foreign commerce of messages by radio; and (d) such other facts as, in the opinion of the commission, may aid the House of Representatives in determining whether, in the foregoing respects or otherwise on this or related subjects, the antitrust statutes of the United States have been or now are being violated by any person, company, or corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and (e) such other facts as, in the opinion of the commission, may aid the House in determining what further legislation may be advisable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether this resolution will hamper or harass General Harboard?

Mr. EDMONDS. In no way at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Or his radio corporation?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know. It may.

Mr. BLANTON. Which are adjuncts of the great American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know. During the consideration of the radio bill in the House there was a question raised here as to the ownership of radio patents. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries prepared a House resolution asking the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the situation in regard to these patents and report back to us at the first meeting in December.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FLOOD CONTROL SURVEYS.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 14425) authorizing preliminary examinations and surveys of sundry streams with a view to the control of their floods, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations to be made of the following streams with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, California, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917:

Illinois River, Illinois.
West Fork of White River, Indiana.
Skagit River, Washington.
Trinity River, Texas.
Brazos River, Texas.
Colorado River, Texas.
Pond River, Kentucky.
Wabash River, Illinois and Indiana.
Colorado River in the States of Arizona, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and Wyoming.

The sum of $4,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby authorized to be expended out of any funds heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause surveys to be made of the following streams with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, California, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917:

North Branch of the Susquehanna River, Pennsylvania and New York, and the sum of $8,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose.

Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers and the sum of $25,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose: Provided, That no money hereby authorized to be appropriated shall be expended unless and until assurances have been given satisfactory to the Secretary of War that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania will contribute a like sum of $25,000 for the purpose of making the survey hereby authorized; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania such sum of $25,000 and to expend the same as the $25,000 hereby authorized to be appropriated may be expended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is only an authorization, and it is not worth a thing until there is legislation next winter. There is no earthly sense of taking it up at this time of night.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of no quorum, if these gentlemen insist upon bringing up something that is not good until next winter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. What was done about the point of order of no quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. I renew it; we ought to have some mercy on these reporters. They can not work all day and night, too. There are two absent and there are only four right now reporting on the House.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there is a motion pending.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess 15 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there is a motion already pending. I was recognized——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess 15 minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not care to interfere with the bill which is before the House, but there is a conference report being prepared, as I understand, upon the alien-property matter that it is desirable to have disposed of. I do not care to interfere with this, and I am perfectly willing to withdraw the request for a recess of 15 minutes, but if the House is going to get into another squabble and row we had better take a recess now. I will withdraw the request for the time being.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the Chair allow me a minute to make a statement? Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in the world in this bill. I was requested by the chairman of the committee in his absence and absence of other majority members of the committee to call up this bill for the Committee on Flood Control. The arrangement was made with the Speaker by gentlemen on the majority side to recognize me for that purpose. I am acting for the chairman of the committee when I make this request, for Mr. RODENBERG. There are two sections of the bill, nine projects. The first section requires no appropriation of money. The Chief of Engineers has the data for four of these in his office, but can not under the law give it to us, and this bill simply requires him to give it to us, so that we may know how much the survey will cost. The five others, all put together, will cost $4,000. It simply authorizes the Chief of Engineers to make a preliminary examination and report. The second section provides for surveys, one in the State of Pennsylvania, which has already appropriated $25,000 to match the $25,000 authorized here; and the other for the Susquehanna, where the preliminary report is already made. The flood condition exists in Pennsylvania, but the cause of the flood is in New York. Pennsylvania can not cure the trouble, because it is beyond her borders. In this item $8,000 is authorized to make the necessary survey.

These two last items in section 2 will have to go over to the next Congress for an appropriation, but the first nine involve 4,000,000 acres of overflowed land and only $4,000 is necessary to make the examination. The money is already appropriated but is not available, but the Secretary of War is authorized in this bill to use it. This simply asks him to make the estimate for us and tell us how much a survey is going to cost.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The second section carries authorization of over $200,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No. The second section carries authorizations of $33,000, and $25,000 of that is to match a sum already appropriated by the State of Pennsylvania, and the other $8,000 is for the Susquehanna River. It authorizes a survey to find out how they can control their floods there, even though the contributing cause may be in the State of New York Now, the authority to appropriate would be only $33,000 for both items in the second section. The first section, in any event, ought to become a law.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the first section, what good will it be if we pass this now and have that information coming to Congress in December? You can get it in December as well as now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no. The money is already appropriated in the river and harbor bill and will be spent before December.

Mr. MONDELL. That bill can not become a law under any circumstances, even if it were passed by the House. There is no possibility of it becoming a law. We have before us Senate bills that ought to be disposed of before that bill—important as it is, that can not become a law—is taken up at the very last moment of the session under suspension of the rules.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I just wanted to state, Mr. Speaker, that I am not part of the organization in the House. I am representing the minority here, but I was requested by the chairman of the committee to present this matter for him in his absence. I can not withdraw it because the gentleman interested asked me to do what the chairman asked me to do, and I have got to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. It can not be considered at this time under suspension of the rules. It is too important a matter, and it can not become a law in any event.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Was there a unanimous-consent request that a second be considered as ordered, and was that without objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was objected to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then all we have to do is to not second the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Republican minority in Congress during the war supported President Wilson more consistently in his war measures than his own party. The so-called Republican States furnished many more men and much more money to carry on the war than the so-called Democratic States, yet no prominent Republican was appointed by President Wilson to have a part in the direction of these men or the expenditure of the money, and President Wilson in October, 1918, called upon the country to send none but Democrats to the House and Senate. According to President Wilson, none but Democrats need to apply for service in the great law-making body of the Republic. The American people answered this challenge by sending a majority of Republicans to both the House and Senate. President Wilson called the Sixty-sixth Congress into extraordinary session May, 1919, and what did this Republican Congress find?

Although the war had been over for six months, all of the war-time laws were still in force, abridging the freedom of the press, the freedom of speech, and the freedom of lawful assembly. President Wilson possessed dictatorial powers over the lives, the liberties, and the property of the American people. The Wilson administration was continuing to make guns, powder, shells, and other war materials, to buy camp sites and to build

Army camps. Billions of dollars were spent in this way during the spring and summer of 1919, and hundreds of millions were being spent for war materials. The railroads, telephone, telegraph, and shipping lines were still under Government control and costing the American taxpayers about $3,000,000 per day. We were technically at war with the Central Powers. We had an immense Army scattered over the globe. We had nearly a million men and women in the civil employment of the Government. Appropriations to run the Government had not been provided for. The soldiers of all the wars were clamoring for relief. Prohibition, woman suffrage, and other important questions were pressing. All of these and many other important questions came up for solution before the new Republican Congress.

SAVED $940,000,000 ON APPROPRIATIONS.

The appropriation bills for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1919, had been passed by a Democratic House, but had not passed the Senate. The new Republican Congress took up and considered these same appropriation bills and passed them, but cut them down and saved the American taxpayers $940,000,000.

The Democratic Secretary of War called upon the Republican Congress to provide a standing army of 576,000 men and provide universal compulsory military training for all of the able-bodied boys of America. This program would have cost the American taxpayers for the Army alone more than $1,000,000,000, or about $10 in taxes for every man, woman, and child in America. The Republican Congress refused to grant compulsory military training and cut down and reduced the Army to 125,000 men. This alone has saved to the American taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

The Republican Congress found nearly 1,000,000 men and women in the civil employment of the Government, costing the American taxpayers something like $1,000,000,000 per year. The Sixty-sixth and the Sixty-seventh Congresses and the Republican administration have cut out nearly 400,000 of these useless officeholders.

The new Republican Congress restored the railroad, telephone, telegraph, and shipping lines to their private owners and thereby saved the American taxpayers nearly $3,000,000 per day.

The new Republican Congress passed the resolution proposing to amend the Constitution to give to American women equal suffrage with men.

This same Congress passed over President Wilson's veto the prohibition enforcement law known as the Volstead Act.

SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS SAVES $2,500,000,000 MORE.

We must bear in mind that the executive branch of the Government, the branch that does the spending, was in the hands of the Democrats during the whole life of the Sixty-sixth Congress. The executive branch of the Government submits estimates to Congress of the amount of money necessary to run the Government. The Wilson administration did this for the appropriations considered and passed by the Sixty-sixth Congress. The administration claimed they had to have the amount of money fixed in these estimates, but the Republican Congress cut out and reduced these estimates $2,500,000,000. That means $25 of taxes for each man, woman, and child in America. It meant much to the taxpayers of America to have a Republican Congress hold the purse strings of the people at this time.

THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS AND THE REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION.

The Sixty-seventh Congress is at an end and this likewise marks the end of the first half of the Republican administration. These have been two full years for the Republican Congress and the administration. Two most remarkable years in the nature and extent of the problems considered and solved. In order to correctly visualize the accomplishments of the Congress and the administration, it is necessary to consider the problems that confronted us on March 4, 1921. While more than two years had elapsed, yet we were technically at war with our late enemy. There was discord and chaos at home, distrust and confusion abroad. We had just emerged from a period of such wanton waste and extravagance that this Republic had never before experienced. Our national debt of $1,000,000,000 before the war had been increased to more than $26,000,000,000. Nearly 5,000,000 men were out of employment. Our own gold bonds were selling for 84 cents on the dollar. The high war taxes were still in full force. The oppressive war-time laws still ruled the country. Under the Underwood free trade tariff law our country was being made the "dumping ground" for the world. Discontent and mistrust were everywhere present. Bankruptcy was threatened on every hand. The flood tide of foreign immigration had set in. The farming industry was paralyzed. The reaction of the world's greatest destruction of men, money, property, and government had set in. The Republican Party comes on the scene after the storm and after the conflagration to clean up the wreckage. It has been said that it is quite as necessary for the Republican Party to follow a Democratic administration as it is for the ambulance to follow the battle to gather up the dead and wounded and clear away the wreckage. It was the task of the Republican administration to restore peace, bring order to our domestic and foreign affairs, reduce the burden of taxes, relieve the unemployment, restore the Government's credit, put the American farmers on their feet, revive the industries of the country, check the horde of foreign immigration, reduce the Army and Navy, provide for our disabled veterans, clear away the wreckage and rebuild the industrial, social, and political structure of our country on a safe and sound basis. In undertaking this tremendous task we had to meet the active, persistent, and hostile opposition of our Democratic friends in Congress, whose mismanagement of the affairs of the Government had brought about these conditions, as well as a hostile Democratic press. The story of the accomplishment of these great aims by the Republican administration when written will compare favorably with any in the history of the Republic.

PROSPERITY WITH PEACE.

It took a World War to bring prosperity to the Wilson administration. The war over, millions were idle, business paralyzed. The Republican administration under its wise policies has brought prosperity to the land in peace time. Unemployment has disappeared. Billions have been paid on the debts created by the Wilson administration. Uncle Sam's note is worth one hundred cents to the dollar, and the country is in the midst of one of the greatest eras of prosperity that it has ever known. We have the confidence and good will of all of the nations of the world. No commitments have been made that will send our boys to the battle fields of Europe, Asia, or Africa. Our country is free of all entangling alliances.

REPUBLICAN ECONOMY—DEMOCRATIC WASTE.

It is very amusing indeed to hear our Democratic friends in Congress and in the Democratic press say that the Republican Congress has not done anything and the Republican administration has wasted the people's money. The Wilson administration, in wanton and reckless waste of the public money, far surpasses any administration in the history of the Republic. Up until the very day that President Wilson left office his administration was spending more money than the revenues of the country, and the first important step of the Harding administration was to put on foot a policy of rigid economy. The tax burden could not be lifted in any other way. The unthinking tell us of the good times of the Wilson administration. We submit that it is more popular to scatter the people's money all over the country than it is to pay the debts when once created. There was no prosperity in the Wilson administration until the World War came on. Until that time millions were out of employment. The sidetracks everywhere were filled with idle empty cars. It took a World War to bring prosperity to the Wilson administration. Can we boast of a prosperity that was fished out of rivers of blood and a sea of tears? We spent more than $30,000,000,000 during the World War. Of course this vast sum turned loose made money plentiful everywhere, but we were simply borrowing from the future. We have been, are now, and shall continue to pay for that brief period of so-called prosperity. Our children, our grandchildren, and our great-grandchildren will be taxed for the Wilson prosperity. By way of comparison, let us notice the Democratic waste and the Republican economy. The Wilson administration expended during the fiscal year of 1919 $18,544,879,955. Only four and one-half months of this period was war, yet in one year the Wilson administration expended nearly five times as much as it cost the Union for four years of Civil War.

During the fiscal year 1920 the Wilson administration expended $6,560,467,533.13. In that one year they expended more than one and one-half times the cost of the Civil War. The last year of the Wilson administration they expended nearly $6,000,000,000. After deducting the sums that will be paid on account of claims arising out of the Wilson administration the Harding administration will expend this year around $3,000,000,000. This includes interest on the war debt, also nearly $400,000,000 as payment on the principal of the war debt, also about $750,000,000 for pensions and compensations for our soldiers and their dependents. So in the last year of the Wilson administration they spent nearly twice as much as we are spending this year under the Harding administration.

The public debt on August 21, 1919, was $26,594,267,878. On February 23, 1923, it was $22,715,338,730. In other words, since the Republican Congress and the Republican administration took charge of affairs we have met all of the expenses of the Government and have reduced the public debt $3,778,929,148. Every sensible man and woman must confess that this is a record to be proud of, although it may not be as popular to pay the debts of the Nation as it is to borrow from the future and scatter money everywhere. The fact that the Wilson administration was making debts and piling up debts instead of paying them is why our gold bonds—"Uncle Sam's notes"—fell from 100 cents on the dollar to 84 cents on the dollar. The Harding administration has reduced the Army and the Navy, cut off nearly 400,000 of useless officeholders, cut out every item of unnecessary expense, and has put the Government on a sound business basis, and one of the great means to accomplish this purpose was the passage of the Budget law, whereby the closest scrutiny is given to each item of expense of the Government. A Republican Congress passed this law while President Wilson was in office, but he vetoed it.

LIFTING THE TAX BURDEN.

When the Republican administration came into power March 4, 1921, although the war had been over nearly two and one-half years the oppressive war taxes were still in force. The Republican Congress revised the revenue laws and reduced the tax burden for this year nearly $1,000,000,000. The Republican Congress repealed the tax on railroad tickets, on freight rates, and on parcel post, and in this way has saved the American people $300,000,000 per year. Many of the other war taxes have been cut off, causing an additional saving to taxpayers of $120,000,000. The taxes on persons of small incomes were either cut out or reduced. The attempt to greatly reduce the taxes on the very large incomes was defeated.

BEST LAW EVER FOR LABOR.

When the Republican Congress met in April, 1921, it was found that there were more than 13,000,000 persons of foreign birth living in this country. The World War having come to a close, millions were proposing to migrate to this country to escape the war-ridden, tax-burdened, and famine-stricken countries of the Old World. Congress had attempted during President Wilson's administration to restrict foreign immigration, but President Wilson vetoed that measure. The Republican Congress also found that there were about 5,000,000 men out of employment in this country. The millions proposing to come to this country for the most part were coming for one or two purposes—to work or to cause trouble. Millions of our own citizens could not find employment. The Republican Congress got busy and passed the first great foreign immigration restriction law and this was promptly signed by President Harding. I am firmly convinced early in the next session of Congress that foreign immigration will be further greatly restricted. The anti-immigration act is the greatest measure any Congress has passed for labor since the founding of the Republic. What is it that makes good wages? When there is at least one job for each man wanting a job. When there are jobs seeking men instead of men seeking jobs. Through the revival of business and the shutting out of millions of foreign laborers, instead of having 5,000,000 men unemployed, as we had when Mr. Wilson went out of office, to-day there is a shortage of labor, and many of the great employers of labor have during the last few months strongly importuned Congress to open the gates again of America to a large foreign population, but I feel sure a Republican Congress will never repeal any of these restrictions. It is claimed that there are 50 per cent more miners in the mines than are necessary. This is due to the large foreign population in the mines. If this anti-immigration law had been passed 8 or 10 years ago we would not have this oversupply of men in our mines. In nearly every industry men are receiving higher wages to-day than they received during the World War.

The Republican Congress passed the vocational rehabilitation law to train and rehabilitate persons injured in industry, in the mines and on the railroad, in the factory, in the shop, and so forth.

THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

The Republican Congress passed a comprehensive protective tariff law. This was very necessary to protect the Nation's labor and industries. Every reasonable man approves the restriction of foreign immigration. So far as it is possible, the people of this country should run the railroads, mines, shops, factories, and the farms. One of the chief purposes in cutting out foreign immigration is to give employment to Americans; but this would mean little to American labor if we should adopt the policy of free trade and permit shoes, clothing, machinery, agricultural products to be produced in foreign countries and dumped into our own country in competition with American labor and American capital. It would be better for us to permit the foreigners to come to this country and to produce the products here. Restricted immigration and the protective tariff go hand in hand in protecting American labor. Every shipload of shoes produced in Europe and dumped into America takes that much employment from American shoemakers. Every shipload of cattle, sheep, and wool produced in Australia, South America, and Mexico and brought here takes that much away from the farmers and the workers on the farms of America, and what is true of these products is true of any other product that can be produced in our own country. The Republican Party stands for the protection of American labor and American capital and has never been willing to put our workingmen and our industries in unfair competition with the cheap labor of foreign countries.

While many of our Democratic friends in Congress talk of free trade and tariff for revenue only, yet I have observed that most of them vote for a protective tariff when products from their own district or in their own State are involved. This proves to me the soundness of the policy of the Republican Party in favoring protection for the products of the entire Nation. Our Democratic friends talked long and loud that the Fordney tariff bill would kill our foreign trade. For the first month, October, 1922, under the Fordney Tariff Act our exports amounted to $370,718,595. We exported in October, 1921, under the Underwood tariff law $343,330,815. In November, 1922, we exported $380,056,542. In November, 1921, we exported $294,092,219. We can see that our export trade has increased, yet, on the other hand, we will collect in revenues on imports about $600,000,000 per year. We have not hurt our foreign trade. We have greatly increased our revenues and protected American labor and American capital.

REPUBLICAN CONGRESS SOLDIERS' FRIEND.

The Republican Party has always guarded with jealous care the welfare of the soldiers of the Republic and their dependents. As evidence of this interest I call your attention to some of the splendid provisions made by the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses for the soldiers and their dependents:

The act of May 1, 1920, increasing the pensions of Civil War soldiers and their dependents. Under that law all widows of Civil War soldiers receive $30 per month, their children under 16 years of age receive $6 per month, and the soldiers themselves from $50 to $72 per month. Perhaps more than 70 per cent of the veterans of the Civil War are now receiving $72 per month under this splendid law.

The Spanish-American and Philippine War soldiers had been pleading for eight years with the Democratic Congress for relief. The Republican Congress on June 5, 1920, passed an act giving to these soldiers from $12 to $30 per month, according to the degree of disability, and these disabled soldiers may receive this pension, although their disabilities were not incurred in the service, and under this act more than 100,000 soldiers of that war have been benefited.

The Republican Congress on September 1, 1922, passed an act increasing the pensions of widows and dependent parents of soldiers and sailors of the Spanish-American and Philippine War from $12 to $20 per month and increased the pension of the children from $2 to $4 per month.

The Republican Congress passed what is known as the Bursum bill, giving to each Civil War soldier $72 per month and $50 per month to their widows. This bill was vetoed by the President.

The pensioners and their dependents of all the wars urged the Democratic Congress for eight long years to pay their pensions monthly instead of quarterly; the Republican Congress passed an act granting this relief, and all of the pensioners and their dependents now receive their pension checks each and every month.

HELPED WORLD WAR SOLDIERS.

The Democratic Congress provided what is known as compensation for the disabled soldiers and sailors of the World War. Under that act a soldier or sailor as much as 10 per cent disabled would receive $3 per month, and if he were totally disabled he would receive $30 per month. A Republican Congress amended this act and fixed the minimum at $8 per month and the maximum at $100 per month, so that these disabled soldiers and sailors now receive from $8 per month to $100 per month instead of from $3 to $30 per month.

The Democratic Congress undertook to provide rehabilitation for the disabled soldiers and sailors of the World War, but the training pay was fixed so low that very few could take advantage of it. The Republican Congress amended this law so that any soldier or sailor with a vocational handicap contracted in the service may take this training, and while taking this training he will receive free tuition, free books, free supplies; and if he is a single man, he will receive, in addition, $100 per month; and if he has a wife, he will receive $120 per month; and if he has a wife and two children, he will receive $152.50 per month. Under this splendid law more than 125,000 young men are in the colleges and universities and industrial plants, taking training and learning to be bookkeepers, lawyers, doctors, preachers, teachers, mechanics, and every other trade and profession.

The Republican Congress has greatly enlarged the benefits of the war risk insurance.

The Republican Congress has provided something like $35,000,000 to build hospitals and sanatoriums to take care of these disabled soldiers and sailors of the World War.

Under all of these splendid provisions for the World War soldier provided by a Republican Congress there is being expended now every year for the World War soldiers and sailors and their dependents nearly $500,000,000. The pensions for the soldiers and sailors of other wars, and their dependents, amount to nearly $275,000,000 annually, and it requires about three-fourths of a billion dollars to take care of the soldiers and sailors of the Republic and their dependents. These benefits have been made possible by the Sixty-sixth and the Sixty-seventh Congresses, under the kindly and wise leadership of the Republican Party. No two Congresses in the history of the Republic have done so much for the soldiers and sailors of our country.

The Republican Congress passed an adjusted compensation bill for the World War soldiers, but this was vetoed by the President. Some of our Democratic friends have tried to make much of this veto, but we must not forget that it was a Democratic Congress that fixed the American soldiers and sailors' pay at $30 per month while in the States and $33 per month for overseas service, and nearly one-half of this sum was necessary to pay insurance and other demands. The Republican minority in Congress at the time made a strong fight to give the soldiers and sailors more pay, but the Democrats voted them down. If that Democratic Congress had given these service men adequate compensation, it would be unnecessary now to have their pay adjusted or give them a bonus. If they had given part of the billions that were wasted and taken by war grafters and war contractors to the soldiers and sailors, it would not be necessary now for the Republican administration to provide a bonus.

Just before the Democratic Congress went out of office in 1919 they voted a $60 bonus for the World War soldiers. This amounted to about $300,000,000, but that same Democratic Congress voted many times this amount about the same time as bonuses to the so-called war contractors for the alleged losses of these war contractors. If that immense sum of money had been given to the soldiers instead of the war contractors there would be no need of a bonus for the soldiers now. Again, if so many billions had not been wasted during the Wilson administration we would have ample money to pay the soldiers' bonus. And we must not forget that President Wilson and his Secretaries of the Treasury, GLASS and Houston, strongly opposed the soldiers' bonus, and the Democratic leaders in the Senate and House have all along strongly opposed a soldiers' bonus, and both of them made strong fights against the bill that the Republicans passed in the House and Senate.

GOOD ROADS.

The present Congress and administration have done much for the country in promoting the cause of good roads. The Federal aid act of November 9, 1921, provides for a great system of highways, intercounty and interstate in character, comprising about 185,000 miles. This great highway system will penetrate nearly every county of the 48 States. It provides for the building of this great system on a 50–50 basis in cooperation with the States, and since the 4th of March, 1921, there has been appropriated and authorized to carry out this plan by the Republican Congress $265,000,000, and an additional $28,500,000 for roads and trails in the Territories and the national forests. It further provides for the maintenance and upkeep of these highways when once constructed. Under this plan when these roads are once constructed they will always be kept in first-class condition.

HELPED THE FARMER.

We have heard much from Democratic spellbinders about the farmers of America losing billions of dollars on account of too rapid deflation under the policy of the Federal reserve bank. The farmers were hit hard on this account, but we must not forget that this deflation took place under the Wilson administration and while the Federal reserve banks were under the control of the Democrats. After the war, on account of the financial distress in nearly all of the other countries of the world, the producers of raw products made America the "dumping ground."

Wool, sheep, and lambs were poured into this country from Australia and South America. Cattle, beef, and hides were shipped here in great quantities from South America and Mexico. Wheat from Canada, eggs from China, fruits and sugar from Mexico and the West Indies, and many other products from Europe. The American farmer was put out of business. Two days after the Republican Congress met in April, 1921, an emergency tariff bill for the benefit of the farmers was reported in the House and within two days more it passed the House and within a month it became a law. Many southern Democrats supported the agricultural tariff bill. They had seen the evil effects of the Underwood free trade law. Since the passage of this act there has been a healthy upward trend of prices for farm products and the farmers are coming into their own again. The American farmers were very much in need of loans at reasonable rates. The Republican Congress revised the powers of the War Finance Corporation and established a credit of a billion dollars for the use of the farmers and other industries of the country. The emergency tariff and this new credit put the farmers on the road to prosperity.

The workmen of the country have been given the right to organize, so that by cooperation they can improve their working conditions and secure better wages. The farmers had never been given this right. The Republican Congress initiated and passed what is known as the farmers' cooperative marketing bill, giving the farmers of the country the right to organize to promote their general welfare and to secure better prices for their products. Under this law the stockmen, the tobacco growers, the wheat growers, and others have organized and are greatly benefiting by reason of this law. The Republican Congress greatly extended the benefits of the farm-loan bank. By the agricultural credit act of 1923 Congress provided for two systems of farmers' banks. One is the National Agricultural Credits Association and the other the Federal intermediate credit banks. These laws provide for the financing of farmers on long-time credits at a reasonable rate of interest.

Gambling in grain futures has been a menace to the farmer; the Republican Congress passed a bill cutting out this pernicious practice. In passing the tariff bill the Republican Congress put potash and fertilizers on the free list. This House passed many other measures favorable to the farmers that did not get through the Senate on account of Democratic filibustering.

THE WOMEN AND CHILDREN CONSIDERED.

The Republican Congress made it possible for the women of America to have equal suffrage with men.

The maternity bill passed by the Republican Congress and signed by President Harding will mean much to the women and children of America.

The creation of a woman's bureau in the Department of Labor is a fine recognition of the great part that women are playing in the economic, industrial, and social life of the Nation.

PROHIBITION—VOLSTEAD ACT.

The Republican Congress, over the veto of President Wilson, gave to America a workable and effective prohibition enforcement law, carrying out the provisions of the eighteenth amendment which had been ratified by 45 out of the 48 States of the Union and which has been approved by the direct vote of the people of nearly 40 States of the Union. Under a ruling of Democratic Attorney General Palmer to the effect that beer and wines could be legally sold, the Congress passed the antibeer and wine act.

THE FOREIGN DEBT REFUNDING ACT.

When the Republican Administration came into power it found foreign Governments owed us about $11,000,000,000. This sum of money was loaned to the foreign countries by the former administration. The law under which these loans were made provided that our Government should take bonds from those Governments as security for these loans, but strange to say, Mr. McAdoo, the Secretary of the Treasury, took no bonds or other security but accepted merely the I O U's with no definite stipulation as to time or other conditions of payments. This money had been loaned for nearly three years, but not a cent of principal or of interest had been collected. In fact, Mr. Bryan and many other Democratic leaders were urging the cancellation of these debts. The Republican administration promptly took the position that there would be no cancellation of any of these debts but that these debtors would have to make arrangements to pay. Under an act of the Republican Congress Great Britain has already arranged to refund her debt, amounting to nearly $5,000,000,000, by paying a substantial sum of interest and giving her bonds for the remainder to be paid at a definite time and at a definite rate of interest. The commission created by Congress is now negotiating with the other nations looking to the refunding of their debts to us, but of course it now looks as if much of this money will never be collected. For instance, Mr. McAdoo turned over $187,000,000 to a certain Russian who came to this country and claimed to represent the Russian people, but as a matter of fact he did not represent the Russian people, and Mr. McAdoo was so advised by the Russian Government. There are other loans in just as bad shape as this. The foreign debt is one of the hundred or more important matters of unfinished business inherited by the Harding administration from the Wilson administration.

PEACE MADE, OPPRESSIVE WAR LAWS REPEALED.

Because of President Wilson's persistence in combining the treaty of peace with the League of Nations the American people were kept out of a well-earned peace for nearly two and one-half years, and it devolved upon the Harding administration to conclude peace with Germany. It was said by Democratic spellbinders in the campaign of 1920 that unless we accepted the Wilson league and treaty that American rights would not be protected, but who now dares to claim that the Harding administration has not fully protected American rights in the treaty negotiated by him with Germany?

The Republican Congress repealed all of the oppressive war-time laws and restored the freedom of the press, the freedom of speech, and freedom of lawful assembly.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

It was said by our Democratic friends in the campaign of 1920 that unless we entered the League of Nations we would be ostracized by all of the leading nations of the world. President Harding and Secretary of State Hughes, desiring to submit a great constructive peace plan to the world and at the same time to discontinue the competition in the building of armaments and lift the burden of war cost, called a disarmament conference to meet in Washington. All of the leading nations of the world promptly and gladly responded. They met, not in Paris but in our own National Capital, not under the flag of many colors of the League of Nations but under the Stars and Stripes, not in the atmosphere of hate, greed, and jealousy of the Old World but in the free wholesome air of the United States, and adopted the great formula promulgated by the Savior—the golden rule—in the relations of this country with other countries and their attitude toward us, and agreed to discontinue the competition in the construction of great navies, and made it possible for America to have less battleships and more good roads. better homes, and better schools. This was the greatest step toward world peace in the history of the world.

DEMOCRATIC FILIBUSTER.

The Republican House passed 144 bills which did not get through the Senate because of the Democratic filibuster in the Senate. Many of these were of very great importance—the antilynching bill, to protect the colored people of the country; bill to prevent corrupt trade practices; bill excluding from the mails fraudulent devices; joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to tax-free securities; the omnibus pension bills; bill to incorporate Disabled American Veterans of the World War; and many other measures of great importance.

PROGRESSIVE FUTURE PROGRAM.

The next Republican Congress no doubt will be called upon to consider many of the measures that failed in the Senate—the antilynching bill, a bill to amend the Constitution so that the holders of billions of dollars of tax-exempt securities will be required to pay their just part of the taxes, a bill proposing to amend the Constitution to prohibit the employment of child labor in industries, a bill to amend the transportation act. I think the Railroad Labor Board should be and will be abolished, freight and passenger rates should be further reduced, the State railroad commission should be given greater powers in dealing with intrastate rates, progressive legislation for the benefit of the farmers, further restriction of foreign immigration, further reduction of taxes, adjusted compensation for the World War veterans, and further relief for the veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and their dependents. Thus far the Republican Congress and the Republican administration have carried forward the policy of reconstruction solely in the public interest, and I think they can be trusted to solve the problems of the future in the spirit of progress and according to the teachings of Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt, McKinley, and the other great leaders of the country.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

FLOOD-CONTROL SURVEYS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair hold that while a gentleman has the floor he can be displaced in this way?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A second has not been ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Nobody can be recognized, Mr. Speaker, until some disposition is made.

Mr. DOWELL. I have a privileged report, and I have a right to its consideration now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I move to suspend the rules. While that motion is pending nothing else is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. Who made the objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 56.

So a second was refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I beg to call the attention of gentlemen to this situation: An agreement has been entered into to recess. If gentlemen make a point of no quorum and a count should develop that there is no quorum present, I do not know whether under the rules you could recess or not. I do not know whether you could do anything but adjourn. I do not know what the status of the business is now. I heard that when the conference report upon this alien-property matter had been considered there would be no other business taken up.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that is correct, I think it is desirable, so far as I am concerned, to consider the conference report on that alien property matter. But if the point of no quorum is made and the count shows that there is no quorum present, the session that is necessary as a business matter and for many other reasons will be off to-morrow and the Congress expires at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and there will not be any turning back of the clock.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if I may suggest, there are some contested-election cases that ought to be disposed of, and they can be disposed of in five minutes. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has in charge a couple of matters that there can be no objection to, I think. If there is, they ought to be withdrawn. I think at least he should have the opportunity to present them. The gentleman from Minnesota has a resolution that I think no one would object to. If objected to, that is the end of it. These, so far as I know, are the only matters that require attention. We hope that the conference report may be here in the next 10 or 15 minutes. If the House can consider by unanimous consent these other matters in the meantime, I hope it will do so. Of course, the contested-election cases are privileged. We could then take up the conference report and dispose of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are only three Members against what is known as the teachers' salary bill.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF GARTENSTEIN v. SABATH.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from Committee on Elections No. 3, in the contested-election case of Gartenstein against Sabath.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Jacob Gartenstein was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the fifth congressional district of Illinois and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Adolph J. Sabath was duly elected a Representative in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the fifth congressional district of Illinois and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report in the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF GARTENSTEIN v. SABATH.

Mr. DOWELL, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted the following report on the contested-election case of Jacob Gartenstein v. Adolph J. Sabath:

Your Committee on Elections No. 3, having had under consideration the contested-election case of Jacob Gartenstein v. Adolph J. Sabath, fifth congressional district of Illinois, respectfully submits to the House of Representatives the following report:

At the general election held in the fifth congressional district of the State of Illinois on November 2, 1920, Jacob Gartenstein, the contestant herein, was the Republican candidate and Adolph J. Sabath was the Democratic candidate for Representative in the Congress of the United States. William Newman was the Socialist candidate and received a number of votes. Adolph J. Sabath at said election was declared elected, and a certificate was issued to him accordingly.

On the 21st day of December, 1920, Jacob Gartenstein served notice of contest upon Adolph J. Sabath, setting forth certain grounds of contest and charging fraud, irregularities, errors, and mistakes in the returns from certain precincts at said election, and charging that while the official returns showed Adolph J. Sabath to be elected by a plurality of 298 votes, a true and correct tabulation of the votes cast at the election in said fifth congressional district would show that the contestant, Jacob Gartenstein, was elected by a plurality of more than 1,500 votes.

On January 15, 1921, Adolph J. Sabath, the contestee, served his answer upon contestant, denying the allegations in the contestant's notice and petition and denying that there was any miscounting or mistabulating in the counting of votes in said precincts.

PROOFS NOT PRESENTED IN TIME.

On the 27th day of January, 1921, Abraham Lidsky, a notary public and duly appointed commissioner to take evidence in this case, declared the hearings open, and two witnesses were called, who gave short testimony, generally, to the delivery of ballots to the board of election commissioners and to placing these ballots in the vaults.

On this date, January 27, 1921, at the close of this brief testimony, the hearing was adjourned to February 2, 1921, by stipulation of the parties, the number of days of the continuance to be added to the 40 days allowed by law to complete contestant's proofs.

On February 2, 1921, the hearing was called, and without taking any testimony, at the request of the election commission, the parties by stipulation continued the hearings until the morning of February 8, 1921, with the same stipulation that the continuance should not in any way interfere with the 40 days allowed contestant to complete his proofs.

On February 8, 1921, the case was called and, without taking testimony, by agreement of the parties, and with the same stipulation as to the 40 days, the hearing was adjourned and continued until February 14, 1921.

On February 14, 1921, the case was called and, without taking any testimony, it was stipulated by all the parties that the hearings be continued until March 15, 1921, with the same stipulation relative to the 40 days for taking testimony by contestant.

On March 15, 1921, by agreement of all the parties, the hearing was adjourned until March 18, 1921, without prejudice as to time for taking proof.

On March 18, 1921, without taking any testimony, by agreement of all the parties, the hearing was continued until March 21, 1921, at 10 o'clock a. m., with the same understanding relative to time allowed by statute.

On March 21, 1921, 65 days after the contestee had served his answer upon contestant and 25 days after contestant's time had expired for taking testimony and 90 days after contestant had served on contestee his notice of contest, the contestant actually began taking testimony in the case.

However, on March 23, 1921, after taking a small part of the testimony, at the request of counsel for contestant, hearings were adjourned until March 28, 1921, apparently without stipulation. However, on the 28th a stipulation was made that the continuance should not affect the time for taking testimony.

On April 2, 1921, by stipulation of the parties, the hearings were adjourned by stipulation to April 25, the adjournment not to affect the time for taking testimony by contestant.

On May 3, 1921, adjournment was taken to May 4, and on May 4, without taking any testimony, the case was adjourned to May 5, 1921.

On May 5, 1921, it was stipulated between the contestant and contestee that the time to close proofs on behalf of contestant may be extended from the 12th day of May, 1921, to and including the 16th day of May, 1921.

It will be noted that contestant began taking testimony 25 days after the time for his taking testimony had expired under the statute, and closed his taking of testimony under the various stipulations 80 days after his 40 days for taking testimony under the statute had expired.

On the 22d day of August, 1921, the contestee began taking his testimony, and closed taking his testimony on the 31st day of August, 1921, but this testimony was objected to by contestant because the time had expired for taking testimony.

The section of the statute providing for the taking of testimony in a contested-election case is in the following language:

"SEC. 107. In all contested-election cases the time allowed for taking testimony shall be 90 days, and the testimony shall be taken in the following order: The contestant shall take testimony during the first 40 days, the returned Member during the second 40 days, and the contestant may take testimony in rebuttal only during the remaining 10 days of said period. This shall be construed as requiring all testimony in cases of contested elections to be taken within 90 days from the date on which the answer of the returned Member is served upon the contestant."

While this statute has been held to be directory, and is not binding upon the House, yet under ordinary circumstances the contestant has been required to commence and complete his evidence within the 40 days allowed by statute, and if further time is required it must be granted by the House, and may be granted only after showing a good and sufficient reason therefor. (See Reynolds v. Butler, 12th Missouri, 58th Cong.)

From the report in this case we quote the following:

"It is quite true that the statute providing and limiting the time for the taking of testimony is not binding upon this House, which under the Constitution is the only and absolute judge of the qualifications and election of its Members. But as has frequently been held it furnishes a wise and wholesome rule of action and ought not to be departed from except for sufficient cause shown, or where the interests of justice clearly require. It would seem that contestant might have commenced and concluded his testimony in this case within 40 days; certainly he might have commenced. No reason whatever appears upon the record why he could not or did not; but upon the argument before your committee it was stated that counsel for the present contestant were also counsel for Wagoner in his contest and that some, or all of them, were engaged upon that case most of the time. There must, however, have been other counsel in St. Louis quite capable of taking such testimony as was taken in this case." (See also Mapeson v. Oates, 47th Cong.; Boles v. Edwards, 42d Cong.; Bradley v. Slemmons, 46th Cong.)

From the latter case, Bradley v. Slemmons, page 339, contested-election cases by Rowell, we quote the following:

"Contestant took testimony in only 3 of the 20 counties of the district and in 2 of these the testimony was taken more than 40 days after the service of the answer to the notice of contest. Contestant claimed that the 40 days allowed by law commenced to run from the first day on which he took testimony, but the committee held that the act of Congress approved March 2, 1875, conclusively showed that section 107 of the Revised Statutes must be so construed as to require the time to run from the date of the service of the answer of contestee. In this case no reason was shown why the 40 days would not be sufficient; indeed, only 18 days were actually occupied by contestant in taking testimony. The testimony taken after the time was of course examined by contestee and the objection only entered after all the testimony was taken, and contestee in his oral argument before the committee had expressed entire willingness to have the testimony considered. But the committee held that 'the people of the district have interests and rights which can not be thus taken from them' and excluded all the testimony except that taken in Jefferson County, which was taken within the time."

In the case under consideration the contestant not only does not show diligence but the record clearly shows without reason or excuse by numerous stipulations undertook to set aside the operation of the statute and practically took no testimony in the 40 days allowed him by statute. Had the contestant come before the House asking for an extension of time to take testimony after the expiration of the 40 days there can be no question this would not have been granted to him, for the record discloses that he had no good reason to ask for extension of time for taking testimony. However, at each date to which extension had been made he stipulated with the contestee for further continuances and extensions, and without asking leave of the House, undertook to set aside the statute limiting time for taking the evidence.

In the case of Bradley v. Slemmons, above, while the testimony was not taken exactly by agreement, contestee at the hearing consented to the consideration of the evidence taken after the time had expired, but the committee properly held that "the people of the district have interests and rights which can not be thus taken from them" and the committee excluded all evidence not taken within the time prescribed by the statute.

In the case of Bradley v. Slemmons the contestant presented his case on the theory that he was entitled to the 40 days after beginning the taking of his testimony, and so far as the record shows was presenting his case upon that theory. In the case under consideration there was no question of the limitation by the statute, and the record clearly shows that the parties were attempting to set aside the operation of the statute by agreements between themselves. If this action is to be approved by the House, contested-election cases in the future may, by stipulation between the parties, be presented to the House at any time the parties may see fit, and the statute may thus be nullified.

Your committee finds in this case that contestant was not diligent in prosecuting his case, and did not present his proofs within the time prescribed by statute.

INTEGRITY OF THE BALLOTS.

Notwithstanding the findings of the committee relative to the time for taking testimony, your committee has in this case examined the record and the evidence relative to other questions raised in the contest.

Contestant in his petition charges fraud, irregularities, mistakes, etc., in a number of the precincts in the fifth congressional district and charges that a large number of votes cast for contestant in said district were not counted for him but were wrongfully counted for contestee and that by reason thereof contestant was wrongfully defeated for the office of Representative in Congress, to which he had been duly elected. Contestant further charges in his petition that the contestee did not receive the plurality of votes cast, but that contestant received a larger and greater number of the lawful votes cast in said district at said election than did the contestee.

Before a recount of the ballots may be had in an election contest proof of inviolability of the ballot boxes and their contents is necessary.

We will here submit a small part of the record and evidence relative to the preservation and care of the ballots in this case:

On page 38 the record discloses the following testimony given by one of the witnesses who produced a ballot box in the third precinct of the tenth ward in the city of Chicago before the commissioner taking testimony:

"Mr. AYERS. What is this other box?

"Mr. CURRAN. That came out of the vault, too, with the other one.

"Mr. STAFFORD. I object to this other box being offered in evidence; there is nothing material about it.

"Mr. AYERS. I also call your attention to another box or packing case, and ask you to describe for the benefit of the record what it appears to be made of.

"Mr. ARNOLD. Made out of cardboard.

"Mr. AYERS. And I will ask you to measure that box and give its dimensions as near as you can.

"(Mr. Arnold measures box.)

"Mr. ARNOLD. Thirteen inches wide, 18 inches long, 13 inches deep.

"Mr. AYERS. Now, you say it is made of cardboard; about what thickness is the cardboard?

"Mr. STAFFORD. We object to any testimony about this package, there being nothing to show it is in any way connected with the election in question.

"Mr. ARNOLD. I should judge it to be about three-sixteenths of an inch thick.

"Mr. AYERS. What condition is it in with reference to being opened or closed?

"Mr. ARNOLD. It is tied with a rope.

"Mr. AYERS. Well, but is it open or is it closed?

"Mr. ARNOLD. It is open.

"Mr. AYERS. Now, I will ask you to look on the top side as the package rests now on the table and read what is on the box, if there is anything to be read.

"Mr. ARNOLD (reading): '3 precinct, 10 ward.'"

On page 39 the following stipulation is entered into relative to this box:

"Mr. AYERS. It is stipulated that the box in question is a one-piece box, and that it was opened at one end, and is now closed by folding in the four sides of the box at that open end, and that it has some sealing wax on the end of the box; also a rope around the box with some sealing wax on the knot, which is also at the folded end of the box.

"Mr. STAFFORD. Yes."

On page 47 the record discloses the following testimony given by witness who produced a ballot box in the sixth precinct of the tenth ward before the commissioner taking testimony:

"Mr. STAFFORD. Now, this rope is loose all around the box, isn't it?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; it is loose.

"Mr. STAFFORD. It is not fastened except at the ends, tightly, except at the ends; it is not fastened tightly around the box?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Well, the rope is loose, but it is tied.

"Mr. STAFFORD. The rope could be slipped off the box, couldn't it, as it now stands? Try it and see.

"Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

"Mr. STAFFORD. The rope could be slipped off without untying and, as a matter of fact, I have done it without disturbing any of the sealing wax; so that the rope could have been untied on that box and then put back in the position in which it is now without any retying or untying. Is that right?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

"Mr. STAFFORD. Now, when the rope is so disconnected by releasing the sealing wax on the bottom and on the flaps, the top of that box could be lifted right off, couldn't it?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

"Mr. STAFFORD. As a matter of fact, there is nothing on the seal or the wax to show who put it on—just a gob of wax that anybody could put on?

"Mr. AYERS. Well, I object to the last part of the question. The testimony shows the box had been locked in the vault and that everybody could get into that vault.

"Mr. STAFFORD. I mean so far as the putting of the wax on is concerned. I am talking now so far as the box appears to have been sealed. There is nothing peculiar about the sealing wax to make that wax other than what anybody could put on; there is no seal; no stamp. It is the kind of wax that anybody could put on any time.

"Mr. ARNOLD. Yes."

On page 49 the record discloses the following testimony given by witness who produced a ballot box in the eighth precinct of the tenth ward before the commissioner:

"Mr. AYERS. Now, I will ask you what that is that is before you; what it looks like.

"Mr. ARNOLD. It looks like a ballot box to me.

"Mr. AYERS. And will you describe what condition it is in?

"Mr. POLLACK. I object as a conclusion to his stating that it looks like a ballot box. He can describe the box, but not state his conclusion.

"Mr. ARNOLD. Well, there are two parts of the box. It is in two sections. It is tied with a rope; a telescope box, but it does not come together; there is a piece of paper around it, all around where it telescopes together."

Further, on page 51, is the following:

"Mr. POLLACK. I object to the removal of the rope and the taking off of the paper until I have asked certain questions regarding it. The paper that you testified as to being about the box you said was all about it; you mean that it was around—it extended around the so-called ballot box in one direction?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

"Mr. POLLACK. And does not cover it entirely?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Not all the way round; no—not the whole ballot box.

"Mr. POLLACK. This rope that is around it is not sealed in any way, no sealing wax on it?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No sealing wax on it; it is tied, that is all.

"Mr. AYERS. It is tied with a large number of knots, isn't it? How many knots does there appear to be in that rope?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Four.

"Mr. POLLACK. These names that you read on the outside of the box that were written in script, you don't know who wrote them?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

"Mr. POLLACK. You are not familiar with the signatures?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

"Mr. POLLACK. And you don't know whether those people bearing those names were, as a matter of fact, judges of election or not?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

"Mr. AYERS. You spoke of the knots in the rope; some of those knots are made where the rope in wrapping it around the box crosses at right angles the same rope in going another direction, do they not?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Two of them do—two of them.

"Mr. POLLACK. And the other knots, Mr. Witness, do not so cross?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No; they are just tied in knots.

"Mr. AYERS. Now, after having removed the paper, I will ask you if the two ends of the box that you have described as being a telescope box, if they come together?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No; they do not.

"Mr. AYERS. About how much do they lack of coming together?

"Mr. ARNOLD. Two inches.

"Mr. AYERS. And state whether or not the box appears to be filled so as to hold it apart in that condition.

"Mr. ARNOLD. It does.

"Mr. POLLACK. I will ask, Mr. Witness, if the two sections of this box which are apart appear to be sealed together in any way?

"Mr. ARNOLD. No; they are not sealed."

On page 64 the record discloses the following testimony given by Witness Arnold, describing a ballot box in the seventeenth precinct of the tenth ward before the ballot box was opened:

"Cross-examination by Mr. STAFFORD:

"Q. Is it not possible to remove the entire strip from the bottom of the box without further untying?—A. Yes.

"Q. And in that way to entirely open the box—the string from the box so that the box may be opened?—A. Yes.

"Q. So that in order to open the box as it stands now, neither the strings nor the flaps would have to be detached?—A. Well, one would have to be detached.

"Q. Is it not possible to open the box without that?—A. I do not think so.

"Q. Well, we will take the string off and see. [Opens box.] It is possible, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. So that the box as it was brought in here could have been absolutely opened without any force whatever and without cutting any rope or destroying any of the supposed fasteners?—A. Yes.

"Q. That is all."

On page 66 the record discloses the following testimony given by Witness Arnold, describing a ballot box in the eighteenth precinct of the tenth ward before the ballot box was opened:

"Q. Now describe the box.—A. It is a telescope box—two parts it is. It is tied with a rope at the top that does not go over the bottom.

"Mr. STAFFORD. About an inch between the top and bottom, isn't there?—A. Yes, sir. The rope goes through the bottom of the box with one knot; there is sealing wax on the knot; there are two pieces of paper, printed matter, stuck on the flaps of the box, which gives instructions how to seal it.

"Q. Are they the same as has been read into the record previously?—A. They are.

"Q. Does the rope go around the box one way or two ways?—A. The rope goes around two ways.

"Q. Between the top and bottom can you see through to see any of the contents inside?—A. You can.

"Q. Does the box appear to be full, or otherwise?—A. It appears to be full.

"Q. As you look through the crack between the top and bottom what do you appear to see inside?—A. Papers.

"Q. Well, do they look like ballots, or some other kind of papers?—A. Well, they appear to me as ballots.

"Q. Can you see whether they are folded or not?—A. They are folded; yes, what I see of them.

"Mr. AYERS. Take the witness.

"Cross-examination by Mr. STAFFORD:

"Q. The two flaps are not attached to the bottom part of the box?—A. They are not.

"Q. The rope can be removed, can it not, without untying it?—A. Yes.

"Q. And the two pieces taken apart and contents removed without in any way breaking or forcing the knot with the seal on it?—A. Yes.

"Q. As a matter of fact, the papers within could be slipped out through the opening?—A. I don't think so.

"Q. But there would be no trouble in slipping the rope off and putting back again?—A. No.

"Q. And if that were done the box would have the same appearance as it now has?—A. Yes.

"Q. Well, we object to any further evidence in regard to this box or its contents—one more question, Mr. Witness: You say that the flaps have a printed slip on stating how the box should be sealed. Is that box sealed in accordance with those printed directions?—A. No; it is not.

"Q. That is all."

On page 91 the record discloses the following testimony given by Mr. Arnold relative to the ballot box in the third precinct of the eleventh ward:

"Q. Now, describe the condition of the box.—A. There is a rope that goes around it twice.

"Q. One way or more?—A. Two ways; goes around it once two ways, and the rope goes through the bottom of the box; there is a knot on the bottom; no sealing wax on it; there are two flaps, one on each end, which are loose.

"Cross-examination by Mr. STAFFORD:

"Q. One minute about the box—these flaps, Mr. Witness—there is no evidence that the flaps have ever been fastened or pasted to the bottom of the box, is there?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Or no evidence of any sealing wax anywhere about it?—A. No, sir.

"Q. It is also possible to remove the rope without untying the knot, isn't it, by slipping it over the edge?—A. By using a little force.

"Q. It could be done?—A. Yes."

On page 98 the record discloses the following testimony given by Mr. Arnold relative to the ballot boxes in the eleventh precinct of the eleventh ward:

"Cross-examination by Mr. STAFFORD:

"Q. This box is not in any way sealed?—A. Not that I see.

"Q. The rope that you say goes around it could be slipped off the box without in any way untying it?—A. Yes.

"Q. And the papers could have been taken out and put back in?—A. As far as I can see.

"Q. There is nothing to have prevented somebody getting out the contents and putting them back in, as you see it now?—A. As I see it now.

"Q. You don't know anything about the handwriting on the box; don't know who put it there?—A. I don't."

On page 102 the record discloses the following testimony given by Mr. Thompson relative to the ballot box in the twelfth precinct of the eleventh ward:

"Q. Now, is there any rope around the box?—A. Yes, sir; rope wrapped around the box.

"Q. How many ways?—A. Two ways.

"Q. Well, is that endways and sideways?—A. Endways and sideways.

"Q. Are there any knots in the rope?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many knots do you see in the rope?—A. One knot.

"Q. And is there any sealing wax on that knot?—A. Yes, sir; there is.

"Q. State whether or not the flaps at the end of the box are fastened or loose.—A. They are loose.

"Cross-examination by Mr. STAFFORD:

"Q. Mr. Witness, this rope around the box is so loose that you can slip it off without untying it, isn't it?—A. Yes; it is.

"Q. And be slipped off without touching the sealed knot?—A. Yes; it could be.

"Q. It could be, and the top removed without touching the knot, and then returned to its present condition?—A. Yes."

On page 120 the record discloses the following testimony given by Mr. Arnold relative to the ballot box in the seventeenth precinct of the eleventh ward:

"Cross-examination by Mr. STAFFORD:

"Q. Mr. Arnold, this cord that you say goes around this box is not sealed in any way with wax or otherwise; just knotted?—A. Just knotted.

"Q. And the cord can be slipped off without in any way breaking it or untying it?—A. Slipped off——

"Q. Slipped off, so that the box could be opened and closed without interfering with the knot?—A. Yes.

"Q. You know nothing about the box except as it is handed to you here?—A. No, sir."

On page 175 the record discloses the following testimony given by Mr. Arnold relative to the ballot box in the twentieth precinct of the twentieth ward:

"Q. Are the flaps sealed on this box?—A. No, sir.
"Q. Is any part of this box bursted?—A. One end of it is bursted.
"Q. Can you see any folded papers on the inside?—A. Certainly.
"Q. Are there any other figures on the box?—A. 20/20.

"Cross-examination by Mr. Schiller:

"Mr. ARNOLD. All you need to do is just lift the top off and remove the ballots without the slightest break?—A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And the ballots are there?—A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you know the signatures on the top of this box?—A. No, sir.
"Q. Do you know anything about the box?—A. I know it is a ballot box.
"Q. That is only an assumption on your part?—A. No; not an assumption.

"Redirect examination by Mr. Ayers:

"Q. Do you think you have worked in this office long enough to know a ballot box when you see it?—A. Yes.
"Q. Are there any other packages besides this ballot box in this precinct?—A. There is one bundle.
"Q. What are the wrappings, if any, on this bundle?—A. There is no wrapping at all; only a rope around the package with two knots in it.
"Q. Does the bundle appear to contain any folded ballots?—A. It does.

"Cross-examination by Mr. Schiller:

"Q. Do you know what precinct this bundle refers to?—A. Only from what I read off the ballots.
"Q. There is no other identification?—A. No.
"Q. These ballots can be slipped out of this bundle very easily, could they not?—A. Yes."

On page 194 the record discloses the following testimony given by Mr. Arnold relative to the ballot box in the twenty-eighth precinct of the thirty-fourth ward:

"Q. What is the condition of the box in reference to any part of it being broken or otherwise?—A. One corner of the top is ripped open.
"Q. What appears to be the condition of the box in reference to the contents taking up the full capacity of the box; can you tell anything about that?—A. The top comes over the bottom about 2 inches; it appears to be full—you can't get it down any farther.

"Cross-examination by Mr. Schiller:

"Q. Mr. Arnold, do you know where this box came from?—A. No.
"Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. Only that it is a ballot box.
"Q. And these signatures you have just read, do you know anything about them?—A. No.
"Q. Don't know if they are genuine or not?—A. No.
"Q. This rope is very loosely tied around, isn't it—can be slipped off very easily?—A. Yes; can be slipped off.
"Q. And the box opened?—A. Yes.
"Q. There is no sealing wax of any kind on this box?—A. None that I see."

The above record is set out to show the general condition of the ballots and ballot boxes as they were presented to the commissioner taking testimony.

The proofs in this case show that the judges of election, after counting and canvassing the ballots, placed them in boxes and delivered them to the election commissioners' office. The delivery of these ballots began at 8 or 9 o'clock on the evening of the election and continued until the afternoon of the following day. The evidence discloses that the ballot boxes in some instances were not of sufficient size to hold all the ballots cast in the precinct, and when this happened the ballots were folded and tied with a rope and the bundle was delivered with the ballot box to the commissioners' office. The evidence shows these ballots remained in the office of the election commissioners for some time and that a number of employees were designated to handle the ballots and store them in the vault on the floor above. A number of these were temporary employees.

Mr. Curran, who stated that he was custodian of the ballots and in charge of the vaults of the election commissioners, at the close of his testimony, page 27 of the record, testified as follows:

"Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Curran, one question, please. These ballots that you have just been talking about, have they been in a separate vault from all the others or were they in the vault in which other ballots for other offices have been placed?
"A. There are other ballots in that same vault.
"Q. Has the vault been opened for the purpose of examining any of these other ballots?—A. No, sir.
"Q. The vault has not been opened at all since you last testified for anybody whatever?—A. No; it was not.
"Q. Well, do you know whether it was or not?—A. Well, I know it was not.
"Q. Has the vault been opened for any purpose since the ballots were originally put in there?—A. Yes.
"Q. And people have gone in and out of that vault since that time for other purposes, apparently?—A. Yes, sir.
"Q. So that there have been people in and out of the vault where these ballots were stored since these ballots were put in there?—A. Yes, sir.
"Mr. AYERS. Is that all?
"Mr. STAFFORD. That is all."

The law of the State of Illinois relative to the canvass of votes is as follows:

"Immediately after making such proclamation and before separating, the judges shall fold in two folds and string closely upon a single piece of flexible wire all ballots which have been counted by them, except those marked 'Objected to,' unite the ends of such wire in a firm knot, seal the knot in such manner that it can not be untied without breaking the seal, inclose the ballots so strung in a secure canvas covering and securely tie and seal such canvas covering with official wax impression seals to be provided by the judges, in such manner that it can not be opened without breaking the seals, and return said ballots, with the package containing the ballots marked 'Defective' or 'Objected to' in such sealed canvas covering to the proper clerk or to the board of election commissioners, as the case may be, etc."

It is well settled that before resort can be had to the ballots as means of proof, absolute proof must be made that the ballots offered are the identical ballots cast at the election; that they had been safely kept as required by law; that they are in the same condition they were when cast; that they had not been tampered with, and that no opportunity had been had to tamper with them. The burden of making this preliminary proof rests upon the party who seeks to use the ballots as evidence. (English v. Hilburn, 53d Cong., Rowell, p. 486.)

In order to command confidence in a recount "it is necessary for the contestant first to establish the identity of the ballot boxes, and, secondly, show that these boxes had been so kept as to rebut any presumption that they had been tampered with." (Butler v. Layman, 37th Cong.) In this case the minority report was adopted by the House. We quote from this case (Rowell, p. 173) as follows:

"The minority found that neither the identity of the boxes nor the integrity of their contents was satisfactorily established. It is always necessary for the party claiming under the recount to rebut a reasonable presumption that the ballots have been tampered with. And in this case where a direct charge of crime was made against the election officers, the truth of this charge was collaterally involved in the contentions of the contestant, and it was hence necessary for him to sustain those contentions by the same degree of proof as would be required in a criminal trial. But the minority held that it had not been sustained even by a preponderance of the evidence. The boxes were kept by the custodians, who were magistrates or aldermen, in their public offices or private houses, where they could easily have been tampered with by anyone. They were sealed mostly by having melted wax poured on the knots of the tape, without any impression. Such a seal might easily have been imitated. It was difficult to identify them before they were opened, and after they were opened the fact that the ballots in them corresponded somewhat nearly with the returns of the precincts they were supposed to belong to, did not show their identity, especially in the three cases where the variations were considerable."

The law regards with jealousy and suspicion recounts of ballots and is slow to sanction any change from results originally declared to results effected by such recounts. The rules of law governing recounts of ballots are plain and positive. Before courts or legislative bodies will give weight to results of recounts of ballots, it must be shown absolutely that the ballot boxes containing such ballots had been safely kept; that the ballots were undoubtedly the identical ballots cast at the election; and when these facts are established beyond all reasonable doubt, then full force and effect are given to the developments of the recount. In this case the committee found the evidence sufficient and accepted the results of recounts. (Acklen v. Darrall, 45th Cong.)

The temptation to tamper with and change the ballots after an election is so great, especially when the election is close and a slight change will elect the one and defeat the other candidate, that courts and the House have uniformly required the party offering the ballots to overcome the official count made at the time of the election to show that the ballots have been kept strictly as required by law. Upon the person offering the ballots is cast the burden of showing that the ballots offered for recount are the identical ones cast at the election and have been in no way tampered with or changed. (Wallace v. McKinley, 48th Cong.)

The returns of election officers are prima facie correct, and a recount showing a different result can not be regarded unless it affirmatively appears that the ballots recounted are the same as those originally counted and in the same condition.

The record in this case not only does not show that the ballots were folded, wired, and sealed when presented to the commissioner taking testimony, as required by law, but the proofs affirmatively show that in a number of the precincts the ballot boxes were not tied and sealed, as required by the Illinois statute. In some instances at least the evidence clearly shows that the ballot boxes were not at all sealed when taken from the vault, but were tied and bundled together in such manner that the boxes could be opened and closed without disturbing the appearance of the ballot boxes.

With the ballots and ballot boxes in this condition, and with the evidence of Mr. Curran that people were in and out of the vault where these ballots were kept, it seems to your committee that the proofs of the integrity of the ballots have not been established. Therefore your committee holds that proofs of the proper and legal preservation of the ballots have not been established in this case.

THE BEST EVIDENCE MUST BE OFFERED.

Contestant, in order to establish his claim of error and miscount, called certain witnesses who were clerks in the election commissioner's office. These witnesses were called upon by contestant to go through the ballots in a number of the precincts in the fifth congressional district and announce to another witness, who kept tally of the votes announced for Member of Congress in the precinct, which witness afterwards read the results of the tally to the commissioner taking depositions. In this manner the contestant went through a number of the precincts in said fifth congressional district. By the count in this manner the vote of the contestant increased in the various precincts over that of contestee until by this count contestant had increased his vote in the precincts thus counted to overcome the plurality designated by the contestee in the official count. Something like half of the precincts by this method were recounted.

The ballots in these various precincts were before the commissioner, but contestant did not have them identified, nor were they offered in evidence. But, over the objection of contestee, the witnesses were directed to count the ballots in the above manner and report the result of the count to the commissioner taking testimony.

The election board, under the law, is presumed to have made correct returns in this election. (See Larrazola v. Andrews, 60th Cong.) From this opinion we quote the following:

"When under all the forms of law a person has been duly returned and certified as elected to a seat in Congress the legal presumption is that the sworn officers of the law have performed their duties and that the returns are correct. In order successfully to impeach that return, the contestant must do more than raise doubts as to its correctness. Upon him there rests the burden of proving the falsity or error of that return. The proof offered in this case is not sufficient for that purpose."

Your committee is of the opinion that the primary evidence of the votes cast for the candidates for Representative in the Congress of the United States in this district was the poll books and ballots themselves, and that the official count by the election officers should not be set aside by the testimony of a witness who merely looked at the ballots and testified to the results.

Upon a proper showing and upon the production of the ballots properly protected and preserved, contestant was entitled to a recount of these ballots. But this proof should be established by the best evidence, and the ballots being present should have been offered in evidence as the best evidence in the case. The House will not set aside the official count except upon positive proof that the official count was incorrect.

A RECOUNT SHOULD INCLUDE ALL THE BALLOTS.

In this case the witness who went through the ballots examined only those in perhaps half of the voting precincts in the district. It has been held that a recount, if had, should include the ballots in all of the precincts in the district.

If it is reasonable to suppose that there was error in counting ballots in certain precincts, it would be equally reasonable to assume that there were errors in counting in the remaining precincts. If any recount is ordered, it should be of all of the ballots cast in the district. (Galvin v. O'Connell, 61st Cong., Supplement Election Cases, p. 39.) We quote from the opinion on page 40:

"The contestant asked that about 1,500 ballots cast in said election precincts be ordered recounted by the committee and the House, and the contestee insists that in case this is ordered the order include the whole number of 25,000 ballots cast. On this the committee rules as follows: 'It is the opinion of the committee that if on the evidence submitted it would be reasonable to suppose that there was error in judgment in the counting of the ballots cast in the wards and precincts mentioned by the contestant, it would be equally reasonable to assume that there were errors in judgment in the counting of the ballots in the remaining wards and precincts, and that, if any, all of the ballots cast at said election, aggregating 35,669, should be ordered for recount by the committee and the House.'"

Where some of the ballots had not been preserved, the committee denied recounting the balance of the ballots. (Murphy v. Haugen, 53d Cong., p. 58, Supplement; Canton v. Siegel, 64th Cong., p. 92, Supplement; Brown v. Hicks, 64th Cong., p. 93, Supplement.)

The committee can only report cases on the evidence furnished by the parties. We can neither make the evidence nor improve the quality nor supply the deficiency of that furnished. (See Goode v. Epps, 53d Cong., Rowell, p. 469.) In this case contestee had a majority of 868 on the returns and received the certificate. We quote from the opinion in this case the following:

"Most of the returns appear to have been thrown out because the ballots or poll books were not properly sealed or the returns were irregular, ambiguous, or not delivered by the proper official. The committee went over the evidence in detail and complained that contestant had not in most instances produced the best evidence available."

In the case under consideration the ballots were the best evidence of the votes cast for each candidate for Member of Congress. The ballots are not in evidence and are not therefore before the committee. No attempt was made by contestant to offer these ballots to be canvassed by the committee, but contestant seeks in this case to overthrow the official canvass of the votes by the legally constituted election boards by calling a witness to go through the ballots and report the tally to the commissioner selected by contestant to take testimony.

Where a witness testified that he compared the poll lists, entry lists, or lists of persons struck from the registry list of a county, and presented a list of names which he said were found on the poll list but not on either of the other lists, the committee held that "these statements made by the witness are inadmissible. The papers themselves are the best and only evidence of what they contain if they are admissible for any purpose. The committee must make the comparison and can not take the statements of the witness as to the result of his comparison." (Finley v. Bisbee, 45th Cong., Rowell, p. 326.)

Where votes were proved to have been illegal but the evidence that they were cast for contestee was the testimony of persons who had compared the numbered ballots with the poll list, the ballots themselves not being produced in evidence, the evidence was considered insufficient to justify the deduction of the votes from the vote of the contestee. (See Gooding v. Wilson, 42d Cong., Rowell, p. 276).

The recount in this case should have included all of the ballots in all of the precincts in the fifth congressional district. The ballots not having been offered in evidence by contestant, your committee thinks the evidence in this case is not sufficient to set aside the official returns.

For the reasons set forth in this report your committee recommends the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That Jacob Gartenstein was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the fifth congressional district of Illinois and is not entitled to a seat therein.

"Resolved, That Adolph J. Sabath was duly elected a Representative in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the fifth congressional district of Illinois, and is entitled to retain his seat therein."

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF PARILLO v. KUNZ.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contested-election case of Parillo against Kunz.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Dan Parillo was not elected a Member of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the eighth congressional district of the State of Illinois and is not entitled to a seat herein.

Resolved, That Stanley H. Kunz was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the eighth congressional district of the State of Illinois and is entitled to his seat herein.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE OF PARILLO v. KUNZ.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

At the election held in the eighth congressional district of the State of Illinois on November 2, 1920, according to the official returns Stanley H. Kunz, the contestee, who was the Democratic candidate, received 15,432 votes; Dan Parillo, the contestant, who was the Republican candidate, received 14,627 votes; and Harry C. Stockbridge, who was the Socialist candidate, received 1,334 votes. As a result of these returns Stanley H. Kunz, the contestee, was declared elected by a plurality of 805 votes over his Republican opponent, Dan Parillo, and a certificate of election was duly issued to him by the secretary of state of Illinois.

On December 21, 1920, the contestant, in accordance with law, served on the contestee a notice of contest in which it was alleged that errors and mistakes had been committed in the count of the ballots in certain precincts of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and nineteenth wards of the city of Chicago, comprising 44 of the 107 precincts constituting the eighth congressional district. The contestant claimed that a recount of the votes cast in the above precincts would disclose that the contestant was duly and legally elected.

On January 12, 1921, the contestee served on the contestant an answer denying all the allegations contained in the contestant's notice and alleging that a recount of certain other precincts therein mentioned would show a gain in the contestee's plurality.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEE.

The testimony in the case was duly printed and the contestant filed an abstract of record as required by the rules of the committee and also a printed brief and argument. The contestee filed no brief. Although the committee gave the contestant and his counsel an opportunity to appear before the committee and argue his case, he declined to do so, stating that he desired the case to be decided upon the printed record and brief.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

Most of the facts in this case are not in dispute. The contestee's answer was served on the contestant January 12, 1921. The act of Congress approved March 2, 1875 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 18, ch. 119, p. 338), provides that all testimony in contested-election cases shall be taken within 90 days from the date on which the answer of the returned Member is served upon the contestant and that the contestant shall take his testimony during the first 40 days thereof. In this case, therefore, the law required that the taking of all testimony should be completed on April 12, 1921. As a matter of fact, however, no testimony was taken by either party within the 90 days required by law. On February 8, 1921, a stipulation was entered into by the parties that the taking of evidence on the part of the contestant should be commenced on February 28, 1921. On February 28, 1921, it was again stipulated by the parties that the time for taking evidence for the contestant might be continued until April 18, 1921, and on that date the taking of evidence was commenced before Guy C. Crapple, a notary public, in the office of the board of election commissioners in Chicago. By agreement of counsel the wards and precincts in dispute were then taken up in numerical order and the ballots recounted. On October 10, 1921, over seven months after the law required the contestant's testimony to be concluded and almost six months after the law required that the taking of all testimony should cease, the contestant closed his case, and on December 5, 1921, it was agreed that the taking of evidence by both parties should close, this latter date being almost eight months after the time fixed by Congress had expired.

The recount showed that Stanley H. Kunz had received 14,733 votes and Dan Parillo 14,487 votes—a plurality of 246 votes for Stanley H. Kunz, the contestee. At the conclusion of the taking of all the evidence, counsel for the contestant moved to strike out of the recount the entire vote of 19 precincts in the sixteenth ward and of 7 precincts in the seventeenth ward on the strength of the testimony of Howard A. Rounds, a handwriting expert, who testified that, in his opinion, some of the pencil crosses on certain of the ballots in these precincts were made by persons other than the voter himself. Your committee does not consider that the evidence sustains the contention of the contestant and finds that there is no reason why the returns from the precincts in question should be rejected.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

Section 107 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of March 2, 1875, explicitly provides that all testimony in contested-election cases shall be taken within 90 days from the date on which the answer of the contestee is served upon the contestant. It has been the invariable practice of the House of Representatives to require the taking of the testimony within the time required by law, except where the time has been extended for good and sufficient reasons. In the Missouri case of Reynolds v. Butler (Moore's Digest, p. 28) in the Fifty-eighth Congress the unanimous report of the Committee on Elections No. 2, after reciting facts showing a lack of diligence on the part of the contestant and stating that he had not commenced taking evidence within 40 days from the time of serving notice on the contestee, thus states the law:

"It is quite true that the statute providing and limiting the time for the taking of testimony is not binding upon this House, which under the Constitution is the only and absolute judge of the qualifications and elections of its Members. But, as has frequently been held, it furnishes a wise and wholesome rule of action, and ought not to be departed from except for sufficient cause shown or where the interests of justice clearly require. It would seem that contestant might have commenced and concluded his testimony in this case within 40 days; certainly he might have commenced. No reason whatever appears upon the record why he could not or did not; but upon the argument before your committee it was stated that counsel for the present contestant were also counsel for Wagoner in his contest, and that some or all of them were engaged upon that case most of the time. There must, however, have been other counsel in St. Louis quite capable of taking such testimony as was taken in this case."

In the Arkansas case of Bradley v. Slemons in the Forty-sixth Congress (Rowell's Digest, p. 339), although the contestee offered no objection, the Committee on Elections excluded all evidence not taken within the time prescribed by the statute.

In the present case the contestant not only does not show due diligence, but the record clearly shows that without any reason or excuse whatever he undertook by a series of stipulations to set aside and ignore the clear and explicit provision of the statute. No testimony whatever was taken by the contestant until April 18, 1921, six months after the entire 90 days allowed by the act of Congress for the taking of all the testimony in the case had expired. In this case there is no excuse whatever for the contestant not commencing to take his testimony within 40 days from the service of the contestee's answer, as required by law. If he had started to take his testimony immediately after serving his answer, and for good and sufficient reasons had been unable to complete his testimony before the expiration of the 40 days allowed him by law, and had then asked the House of Representatives for an extension of time, he undoubtedly would have received an extension. In this case, however, as a matter of fact, the record discloses that he had no reason whatever for asking any extension of time, and that all of his testimony might have been taken within the 40 days, and that all the testimony on both sides of the case might have been taken within the 90 days required by law.

Your committee, therefore, finds that in this case the contestant deliberately ignored the plain mandate of the law without any reason or excuse, that he has offered no evidence which can legally be considered by your committee, and that he has no standing as a contestant before the House of Representatives.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION.

Your committee, therefore, finds that the contestant, not having complied with the provisions of the law governing contested-election cases, has no case which can be legally considered by your committee or by the House of Representatives. Moreover, even if he had fully complied with the law, your committee finds that, as a matter of fact, he has failed to prove the allegations contained in his notice of contest; that there is no evidence warranting the rejection of any of the precincts of the district; and that the recount of votes, which he alleged would show that he had been elected, according to his own figures, still shows that the contestee was actually elected by a plurality of 246 votes.

For the above reasons your committee recommends the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That Dan Parillo was not elected a Member of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the eighth congressional district of the State of Illinois, and is not entitled to a seat herein.

"Resolved, That Stanley H. Kunz was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-seventh Congress from the eighth congressional district of the State of Illinois, and is entitled to retain his seat herein."

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF GOLOMBIEWSKI v. RAINEY, FROM THE FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 2 in the contested-election case of Golombiewski v. Rainey, from the fourth congressional district of Illinois.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That John Golombiewski was not elected a Representative from the fourth congressional district of the State of Illinois, and is not entitled to a seat herein.

Resolved, That John W. Rainey was duly elected a Representative from the fourth congressional district of the State of Illinois, and is entitled to retain a seat herein.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report in the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF GOLOMBIEWSKI v. RAINEY, FROM THE FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. LUCE, from the Committee on Elections No. 2, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Elections No. 2, to which was referred the contested-election case of John Golombiewski v. John W. Rainey, from the fourth congressional district of the State of Illinois, reports as follows:

The result of the election in this district, November 2, 1920, was officially announced to be:

John W. Rainey	23,230
John Golombiewski	21,546
Charles Beranek	2,753

Golombiewski took steps to contest the election and to that end secured a recount in 90 out of 159 precincts in the district. By the recount Rainey lost 1,008 votes and Golombiewski gained 321, leaving Rainey with a plurality of 676, irrespective of 179 ballots laid aside as challenged.

Thereupon Golombiewski, through counsel, submitted to the House printed brief and argument, the record of testimony, and an abstract thereof; and Rainey, through counsel, submitted brief and argument. The contestant rested his case upon the allegation that the fraudulent marking of ballots after they had been cast in 16 specified precincts indicated a degree of corruption warranting the exclusion of all the ballots cast in those precincts. His abstract of testimony failed to comply with the rules adopted by the committees on elections in that it did not by definite citation aid the committee in learning just what testimony was relied upon, unless we are to suppose that a tabulation of figures accepted by both parties could be in and of itself sufficient to prove fraud and mistakes by showing that 179 ballots were challenged. By this tabulation it appears that the challenged ballots were confined to 16 precincts. In each of 12 of these less than 10 ballots were challenged, and in the other 4 the percentage of challenged ballots was not large enough in and of itself to indicate that degree of gross corruption which has hitherto been held by the House to be necessary for the total exclusion of a poll.

This is one of three cases from the city of Chicago which were referred respectively to your three committees on elections. The issues involved and the circumstances are much the same in all three cases. The report of the Committee on Elections No. 3 in the case of Gartenstein v. Sabath, submitted December 20 last, and the report of the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the case of Partillo v. Kunz, submitted January 15 last, contain discussion of the effect of violating statutory requirements, of incomplete recounts, and of the evidence that should be offered under conditions such as here prevailed, together with analysis of testimony and citation of precedents, all of which apply as well to the present case, and to rehearse them here would be needless repetition. It should, however, be added that in this case counsel for the contestant has failed to proceed beyond the filing of the required documents, repeated inquiries from your committee as to whether he desired a hearing having been wholly ignored.

In view of all the circumstances, your committee recommends to the House the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That John Golombiewski was not elected a Representative from the fourth congressional district of the State of Illinois, and is not entitled to a seat herein.

"Resolved, That John W. Rainey was duly elected a Representative from the fourth congressional district of the State of Illinois, and is entitled to retain a seat herein."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in 8-point type an address delivered by my colleague, Representative EWIN L. DAVIS of Tennessee, at the twenty-fourth annual Jackson Day banquet in Norwalk, Ohio, January 30, 1923.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, having been granted unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in 8-point type an address delivered by my colleague, Representative EWIN L. DAVIS of Tennessee, at the twenty-fourth annual Jackson Day banquet in Norwalk, Ohio, January 30, 1923, I insert said address as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. EWIN L. DAVIS AT THE JACKSON DAY BANQUET IN NORWALK, OHIO, JANUARY 30, 1923.

ANDREW JACKSON.

This occasion would be incomplete without a reference to that peerless Democrat and great American whose memory and achievements we are celebrating. Beyond an interest as a Democrat, an American, and even a Tennessean, I feel a personal interest in Old Hickory by reason of the fact, if you will pardon a personal reference, that the Army with which he conquered the Creek Nation and won his remarkable victory at the Battle of New Orleans was mobilized in the district which I have the honor to represent and was made up largely of ancestors of many of my present constituents; and he resided for a time in the district I now represent.

Born of poor parentage, his father dying before he was born, Andrew Jackson was compelled to make his own way in the world; but he acquired such an excellent education in the school of experience, by keen observation and intelligent reading, that one of his biographers expressed his opinion that Jackson was the finest letter writer this country has produced; and the late Congressman James D. Richardson, who compiled "The Messages and Papers of the Presidents," gave it as his mature judgment that Jackson's state papers were the greatest of all our Presidents.

By sheer force of intellect, unalloyed patriotism, indomitable will, and invincible courage he displayed qualities of extraordinary versatility and leadership. By his thirty-third birthday he had served as United States district attorney, Representative in Congress, United States Senator, Supreme Court judge, and major general.

Commonwealth builder, soldier, jurist, statesman, diplomat, President, he was preeminent in them all.

Like all great men of positive character and fearless action, he had many bitter foes and was the victim of much unjust slander. Only recently we are getting histories and biographies which do full justice to Andrew Jackson and his great achievements. He is now generally recognized as having been truly a great President. He so impressed himself upon the history of our country that we speak of the "Jackson period." One of his greatest contributions was to make our Government responsive to the will of the people. As has been aptly said, Jefferson established a Government of the people and for the people, and Jackson completed the process by making it a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people. He did much to strengthen the principles of national unity. While a strong advocate of local self-government and State rights, yet he was equally opposed to any abuse of the principle of State rights. Without previous training, he demonstrated his ability to cope with the situation in any field of endeavor. When he became President many old and vexatious questions with foreign countries were pending, all of which he soon satisfactorily adjusted, and when he retired from the Presidency he did not bequeath to his successor a single pending controversy with a foreign nation. It is unnecessary to state that his foreign policy was different from that of the present administration.

His sterling party service has furnished us the descriptive term "Jacksonian democracy," and Democrats throughout the Nation pay him homage every year as we are doing to-night. It was Jackson who established the custom of party platforms, his purpose being to take the people into the confidence of party leaders rather than to confuse and deceive the people, as too many modern platforms are designed to do.

Although he had many tilts with the Senate, which contained such giants as Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Adams, Crawford, and Benton, yet Jackson was always able to hold his own and never lost the confidence and support of the people, even retaining same to such an extent that after he retired from office he named two of his successors.

THE BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS.

Jackson's marvelous military achievements have transmitted to posterity the privilege of celebrating Jackson Day. Perhaps he is best known to the general public because of his military genius and success. We shall pretermit comment upon his remarkable campaigns against the Indians and briefly describe the Battle of New Orleans. Such a description would be incomplete without reference to the conditions leading up to that famous victory. During the first two years of the War of 1812 the British victories over our Armies had not only been complete but disastrous and humiliating—we had not won a single battle. The enemy had captured the city of Baltimore, and in turn had captured and partially burned the National Capital. Our President and the seat of government had been driven from Washington. The martial spirit of the Nation seemed to have been largely broken; our morale was at a low ebb. England was in a state of glorification. Many sections of our country were demanding peace at any price. The President had sent a commission of five notable men to Europe to seek peace. They had been haughtily received, and the British demanded most unreasonable terms, including a cession of that territory now comprising the great Middle West. These were the conditions when Andrew Jackson was commissioned a major general and authorized to appoint his subordinate officers and mobilize an army, but the Federal Government provided no means with which to do it. It is with pride that I point to the fact that the old Volunteer State of Tennessee met the emergency, and through its legislature appropriated $300,000 for the equipment and expenses of an army to be raised by Jackson. So far as I am aware this is the only instance since the establishment of our Government that a State has made an appropriation for the national defense. Whereupon General Jackson quickly mobilized an army of 5,300 men at Fayetteville, Tenn.

General Jackson in five successive battles completely subdued the Creek Nation, who were stanch allies of the British and had been overrunning the entire South, murdering, burning, and pillaging. General Jackson and his army then repaired to New Orleans, where he was joined by about 700 men who had gone down the river on boats and rafts. Consequently Jackson had about 6,000 raw troops, sturdy frontiersmen, wearing coon-skin caps, hunting shirts, and armed with squirrel rifles. He was confronted by General Pakenham, with over 12,000 trained and seasoned British troops, who had fought under Wellington and many of whom later covered themselves with glory at Waterloo in combat with Napoleon's legions. Upon his arrival at New Orleans, Jackson began attacking the British at night on December 23, 1814, and kept it up until the final battle on January 8, 1815, when he and his troops won their final and miraculous victory, killing a large number of British troops and driving the remainder in disorder from the field. The deadly aim of the Tennessee frontiersmen was evidenced by the fact that General Pakenham was killed; Gibbs, who succeeded him, was killed; and Lambert, who succeeded Gibbs, had his horse shot from under him. The most remarkable feature of this wonderful victory was that the Americans sustained a loss of only six killed and seven wounded.

In concluding my reference to Andrew Jackson I wish to suggest that his greatness and patriotism were manifested in his dying moments, when he said, "May my enemies find peace; may the liberties of my country endure forever."

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

Democrats are justly proud of the heritage left by Andrew Jackson. As did he, so all genuine Democrats believe that all political power should abide with the people and that they are entitled to a voice in their Government. As did Jefferson and Jackson, so all Democrats believe in the doctrine of equal rights for all and special privileges for none. We believe that the proper function of government is to do those things which will result in the greatest good to the greatest number. We are opposed to class favoritism. We insist that it is wrong to tax all of the people for the benefit of a few of the people. We say that it is no function of government to rob the masses in order to enrich the classes.

The Democratic Party is the oldest political party in existence. It has endured, and will in future endure, because it is founded on fundamental, eternal principles of right and justice.

It was entirely natural that the author of the Declaration of Independence should subsequently be the founder of the Democratic Party and give to the world the basic tenets of Democracy. It was likewise in the natural order of things that the father of our Federal Constitution should subsequently become a great Democratic President. The adoption of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, embodying the Bill of Rights, guaranteeing civil and religious liberty, was largely due to the persistent efforts of those true Democrats, Jefferson and Madison.

The Democratic Party has been the only consistent champion and defender of the great principles embodied in those immortal documents. Perhaps because of its steadfast adherence to those principles and its refusal to barter its convictions and its interest in all the people for the financial support of special classes, the Democratic Party has been in the minority much of the time since the Civil War. However, it has ever been an alert sentinel and a virile champion of the rights of the masses and a fearless critic of the iniquities of the Republican Party. One of the crowning glories of the Democratic Party is that it can sustain defeat and still hold steadfast to its principles.

Lack of time forbids a review of the glorious history of the Democratic Party. It is sufficient to state that during our national life the Democratic Party has, with the exception of the abolition of slavery, taken the lead in every important political and industrial reform and constructive achievement and in the acquirement of all contiguous territory.

THE WILSON ADMINISTRATION.

I shall not even take time to review the great achievements in peace and in war of the last Democratic administration under the matchless leadership of Woodrow Wilson. However, during the first two years of that administration there was placed upon the statute books more great, constructive, beneficial legislation in the interest of all the people, particularly agriculture and labor, than has been enacted by the Republican Party during all of its history. While the Republicans bitterly denounced and strenuously opposed all of those great constructive measures, including the income tax law, the Federal reserve banking system, and the farm-loan system, yet those laws have proven so wise and beneficent that the Republicans have not dared repeal a single one of them, although they have had complete control of both branches of Congress for nearly four years and also the executive branch for nearly two years.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The Republican Party, at least as now constituted and controlled, is diametrically opposed to those great Democratic principles to which I have referred. It believes in, practices, and feeds upon special privilege and class favoritism. Bankrupt in principles, its guiding policy is to win at whatever cost. "The fleshpots" are its goal.

I shall deal briefly with the present administration, because the preservation of Democratic principles depends on eternal vigilance and merciless exposure of the insidious forces that would prevent their application.

THE 1920 CAMPAIGN.

During the 1920 campaign the Republicans rallied to their banner divers conflicting elements by promising each of them all they desired. They appealed to every group and every class. No party ever promised as much and subsequently achieved as little. I am reminded of the story of former Senator and Gov. Bob Taylor, of my own State. Back in the days when the money question was the paramount issue and every candidate was required to announce whether he was for the gold standard or the free coinage of silver Governor Taylor was a candidate for office. On one occasion he was making a speech and indicated that he was about to conclude, without having made any reference to the money question. A man in the audience called out, "Bob, tell us how you stand on the money question"; to which Bob replied, "Yes; I am glad you reminded me of that; I will be glad to tell you; I am for a little more gold, a little more silver, a little more greenback, and a little sprinkle of counterfeit."

There was never such a campaign of deception and confusion as that of 1920. The result was that the American electorate went on an inglorious political drunk, and has since been enjoying the morning after.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN PROMISES BROKEN.

I shall not attempt to even enumerate all the promises made by the Republicans in that campaign which they have broken. It would take too long. However, I shall call attention to a few of those broken promises.

They promised to reduce taxes, and yet they have only shifted some of the taxes from the wealthy on to the backs of the toiling masses.

They promised to reduce governmental expenditures, and yet the appropriations for the current year in each and every department of the Government are larger than they were last year, and are larger in the aggregate by a half million dollars than they were the year before we entered the war, and this is true after eliminating from consideration every dollar that can be directly or indirectly traceable to the war. In other words, instead of economizing and retrenching the Republicans are increasing the expenses of running the Government. As a result of the reduction of the taxes of the profiteers and the wealthy classes and of Republican extravagance we are confronted with an enormous deficit, the appropriations for the year exceeding the revenue by nearly $900,000,000.

They promised us prosperity, and instead we have had industrial depression, business stagnation, and agricultural bankruptcy.

They promised to relieve the farmer, and they have done that. They have relieved him of about everything he had. Taking 100 per cent in 1913 as a basis, the average purchasing power of all farm products in terms of all other commodities during the eight years of the last Democratic administration was 105 per cent, and during the two years of the present Republican administration has been 67 per cent, and only 68 per cent on January 1, 1923.

They promised to put the business men on their feet, and have done that in large measure, because many of them who under Democratic prosperity were enabled to ride around in automobiles are now compelled to walk.

They promised employment for everybody at good wages, and yet since Harding went into office there have been over 6,000,000 men out of employment at the same time and millions more working on part time. That situation has been somewhat relieved by the building revival throughout the country, not due, however, to anything the Republicans have done but due to the fact that there was a suspension of building operations during the war and for some time afterwards.

They promised to increase commerce, and yet since they went into power our foreign commerce has fallen off $7,500,000,000 a year.

In an effort to appease the natural disappointment and discontent of the people they have adopted the Coue method and give out frequent fulminations to the effect that returning prosperity has arrived or is just around the corner. However, normalcy seems to be having serious tire trouble somewhere along the way. Recent authentic statistics show that the business failures in the United States during the past year were the largest on record, amounting to 22,400, an increase of 11.9 per cent over 1921, and 164 per cent over 1920. Prior to that time under Democratic administration there were practically no failures.

ONLY PLEDGES KEPT BY REPUBLICANS.

However, I shall desist from a further enumeration of their broken pledges, and, as I want to be more than fair to the Republicans, I shall call attention to the only pledges which they have kept—two in number—and only one of them a promise to the public.

During the 1920 campaign you will recall that they denounced President Wilson and his administration in unmeasured terms. They criticized him severely because, although the head of his party, he had taken the lead in party matters; they upbraided him bitterly because, although the chosen Chief Magistrate of the Nation, he had taken the lead in governmental affairs. They proudly boasted that they presented a candidate who would not do these things. They proposed to set up some sort of political sanhedrin of elder statesmen and "master minds," perhaps permitting the President to sit in as an observer. Candidate Harding acquiesced in this sort of a program, and he is the only man who ever ran for President who had as one of the chief planks of his platform a promise that, if elected, he would only be a figurehead President. However, he has kept that pledge, and I want to be fair enough to give him full credit for it.

He has certainly not departed from that policy in an effort to protect the interest or promote the welfare of the people. About the only instances in which he deviated were: First, to save Newberry when he was about to be unseated; second, to jam through the iniquitous ship subsidy bill in the interest of the Shipping Trust and in defiance of public will; third, in an effort to have the Congress reduce the higher surtax on net incomes of over $66,000 from 65 per cent to 33 per cent, or at least to 40 per cent, although the Democrats, with the aid of the progressive Republicans, stopped this reduction of the tax on wealth at 50 per cent; and, fourth, to prevent the passage of the soldier compensation bill by the Senate in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and to veto such a bill passed by the Sixty-seventh Congress, after President Harding had declared on October 20, 1920, as follows:

> Well, I am very happy to say to you that the House passed the bonus bill, and the Senate has it under consideration, and I have no doubt the Senate will pass it. I, myself, think it ought to pass it, if you want to know my views.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGE IN COMPLETE CONTROL.

The only policies which the present administration has had were correctly characterized in an editorial appearing last June in that great Republican paper, the New York Globe, as follows:

> The Republican Party made its first great fight in behalf of human liberty in order that Government of, by, and for the people might not perish from the earth. The high priests of privilege now in Washington are endeavoring to destroy the principles which Lincoln bequeathed.

The voice of the people is no longer heard and heeded by those in authority in the National Capital. There has never been a time in history when the great predatory interests, seeking and receiving undeserved favors from their Government, have been more completely in control.

As stated, during the 1920 campaign the Republicans made only two pledges which they have kept. I have explained their only public pledge which they kept, the promise that Harding would be a figurehead President. The other pledge they made was to take care of the special-privilege interests which had contributed so generously to the Republican campaign fund. I shall call attention to only a few of the numerous instances in which that pledge has been kept.

They passed a revenue bill in which they repealed the excess-profits tax, thereby relieving the war profiteers and post-war profiteers of $500,000,000 per annum. In the same measure they attempted to cut half in two the surtax on net incomes in excess of $66,000 per annum, and did succeed in effecting a reduction from 65 per cent to 50 per cent; this relieved the very wealthy of a large additional amount of taxes and carried no reduction whatever in the surtax on incomes under $66,000 per annum. As a result of this favoritism to the big profiteers and the multimillionaires, a large deficit naturally resulted. In his message vetoing the soldier compensation bill President Harding assigned as one of the reasons for his action the fact that we were unable to pay such compensation and were now confronted with a deficit of $670,000,000 this year and prospects of an even larger deficit next year. Members of the Appropriations Committee at the time called attention to the fact that our deficit for the present year would be $850,000,000, which fact was more than corroborated by a recent statement of the chairman of the Budget committee, who stated that the deficit against which the Budget Committee had been fighting was in reality $896,000,000. It is true that this deficit has been reduced, but how? First, by the issuance last October of $500,000,000 of 30-year Government bonds—the first bonds issued by the Government since we were in the midst of war, more than three years ago. The chairman of the Budget Committee also explains that reductions have been effected by the sale of surplus war materials, Shipping Board property, and securities held by the Government. However, there still remains a large deficit.

FORDNEY-M'CUMBER TARIFF ACT.

Most of all, the Republican Party has rewarded their campaign contributors by the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, which imposes import duties an average of 50 per cent higher than any other tariff bill ever enacted. Time forbids a detailed discussion of this subject, but I do wish to remind you of a few outstanding features. It has been conservatively and scientifically estimated that this bill permits the various manufacturing industries favored thereby to sell their commodities on the basis of factory prices for over $6,340,000,000 per annum higher than would otherwise be the case. It is shocking to contemplate what this will cost the ultimate consumer who buys at retail prices. This enormous and unjust additional burden is imposed upon the American people under the false pretense of meeting the alleged differential between the foreign and American wage cost. And yet this bounty to private interests amounts to 50 per cent more than the total wage cost that enters into the production of the articles in question. According to the last Federal census, the sum total paid in the United States during the year 1919 for wages to labor employed in the production of all the articles protected by this bill amounted to only $4,159,155,551. During that year all factories were running at full capacity and labor was paid as high wages as were ever paid in this country. This bill imposes large import duties on numerous articles which were already sold much cheaper abroad than in this country. It imposes heavy duties upon innumerable articles which were then and are now absolutely controlled by trusts and monopolies, four of which trusts are now under indictment in Federal courts for conspiring together to charge arbitrary and excessive prices.

THE FARMER AND THE TARIFF.

The Fordney-McCumber tariff bill practically builds a wall around this country, so far as manufactured products are concerned. It not only permits the American manufacturers to exploit the domestic consumers in the manner and to the extent stated, but it almost destroys a foreign market for our surplus farm products. Most of that surplus has in the past been sold in Europe. We have acquired nearly all of their gold so that they can not continue to buy our farm products unless they can sell us some of their manufactured products in exchange.

Take wheat as an example: In 1912, the last year under the previous Republican administration and under the operation of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, we exported 79,689,404 bushels of wheat. In 1913, the first year of the Wilson administration, we exported 142,879,597 bushels of wheat. Our wheat exports increased to 332,464,976 bushels in 1915, which, of course, was during the war in Europe. However, in 1919, the last year of the Democratic administration, we exported 287,401,579 bushels of wheat. Last year—1922—under this Republican administration, with the largest United States wheat production in history, with the exception of four years, we exported only 164,691,565 bushels of wheat, notwithstanding the fact that the export production of wheat in Russia and the Danube States is only about 13,000,000 bushels per annum as compared to 555,000,000 bushels before the war.

The American Farm Bureau Federation has just completed a series of studies to determine what the farmer gets out of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law and what he pays as the result of that law. They find the total tariff gain to farmers by reason of that law to be $124,800,000, and that it imposes a tariff cost to farmers of $94,900,000 on farm products alone, and a tariff cost to all consumers of $391,700,000 on farm products.

Consequently the net gain to agriculture on farm products alone amounts to a little less than $30,000,000 per year, at a cost to consumers of more than thirteen times that sum.

How does the farmer fare when it comes to the tariff on manufactured commodities, which are "protected" much more generously and effectively than agricultural products and which the farmers must all buy?

According to the Federal census of 1920 our rural population constituted 48.6 per cent of our entire population, and our farm population constituted 29.9 per cent of our whole population. It may be reasonably assumed that the farmers purchase their proportionate part of manufactured commodities. Wherefore it is seen that the tribute wrung from the farmers of the country by the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act amounts to the enormous sum of over $1,900,000,000 per annum. In other words, the way this infamous law benefits the farmer is by permitting all of the farmers to pay out $63 for the privilege of seeing some farmers get $1 back.

This bill was so indefensible that it was bitterly denounced from one end of the country to the other, not merely by Democratic and independent journals but even by nearly all of the great Republican dailies.

OPPOSITION TO THE FORDNEY-MCCUMBER TARIFF BILL.

It was so utterly bad that even the friends of a scientific protective tariff rebelled. The official organ of the American Protective Tariff League addressed a postal card to the Members of Congress in July, 1922, as follows:

A WARNING FROM A REPUBLICAN TO REPUBLICANS.

At the last general election the voters pronounced in favor of a protective tariff, but they most certainly did not vote for monopoly. Embargo is monopoly, and the voters will not stand for it. Woe to the party which is guilty of fastening the embargo monopoly upon the country, for it will go down to defeat before the just fury of an outraged electorate. (American Economist, organ of American Protective Tariff League.)

There has never been a time in history when any measure sponsored by any administration was so repudiated and condemned by the press and so many leaders of that party.

In fact, the opposition and the denunciation were so pronounced and so widespread that it was agreed among the administration leaders that it should be held in conference and its passage deferred until after the November, 1922, elections, with the understanding that each Republican Member of Congress should go before his constituency and build up a tariff bill which would meet the local situation and explain that the bad features of the bill would be eliminated before final passage. However, this cunning scheme encountered a snag. The campaign was approaching and the Republican contribution gatherers were sent out to collect funds so essential for conducting a Republican campaign. The promised beneficiaries under the tariff bill refused to "cough up" and plainly told the Republican leaders that they would have to deliver first.

Administration leaders held a political council of war and decided that it was better to take their chances with the wrath of the people rather than to undertake to conduct a campaign without their customary sinews of war, so that it was agreed to jam the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill through the Senate before the election. At that time, after 16 months' consideration under Republican efficiency (?), the bill had reached the stage where there were 2,400 differences between the House and the Senate, many of which had been considered almost insurmountable. However, in the face of the approaching election and the political necessity of action, the Republicans got together and composed those differences almost overnight and jammed through the monstrosity.

This bill was so absolutely rotten that it became an orphan even before its passage—FORDNEY, author of the House bill, having been frightened out of the race for reelection, and MCCUMBER, the author of the Senate bill, having been overwhelmingly defeated in the primary of his own party at the very time that he was daily undertaking to defend his bill on the floor of the Senate.

Having thus built a tariff wall around the country, and by this bill having practically destroyed our foreign commerce, the Republican leaders have since busied themselves in an effort to pass another special-privilege measure, the ship subsidy bill, under the guise of building up our foreign commerce. With one hand they destroy our foreign commerce and with the other pretend to promote our foreign commerce. This incongruous situation results from the fact that in each instance they are favoring special classes.

THE SHIP SUBSIDY BILL.

While the ship subsidy bill does not impose as heavy burdens upon the people, yet it is even more vicious in principle and in form than the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill—and that is about the hardest thing I can say about it. President Harding has described this ship subsidy bill as his pet measure and, under the hypnotic influence of Albert D. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, has exerted every influence to effect its passage, even going so far as to advise Members of Congress to vote for it in direct defiance of the expressed will of their constituents. This is the outstanding instance of his departure from his campaign pledge—that he would only be a figurehead President.

In his message to Congress, transmitting the veto of the soldier compensation bill, President Harding, after referring to the enormous deficit facing us, continued:

To add to our pledges to pay, except as necessity compels, must seem no less than governmental folly. Inevitably it means increased taxation, which Congress was unwilling to levy for the purposes of this bill, and will turn us from the course toward economy so essential to promote the activities which contribute to the common welfare.

Within three days after delivering that message President Harding announced that he would call an extra session of Congress after the election for the purpose of passing this ship subsidy bill providing for the payment of enormous subsidies to the Shipping Trust.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, the leading Republican paper of New England, declared editorially:

The President has waited nearly a year and a half before seriously functioning as the leader of his party in Congress, and his first venture will be a melancholy one if his heart is really set upon the enactment of the ship subsidy bill.

Under the provisions of this bill it is contemplated that our ships, which cost the people about $3,000,000,000, will probably be sold for $200,000,000; the Government will lend $125,000,000 to recondition those ships or build others, and then pay the owners approximately $750,000,000 in subsidies and aids within the next 10 years, the bill authorizing 10-year subsidy contracts. In other words, we would be giving the ships away and paying the recipients over $500,000,000 to operate them for the next 10 years. Nearly all of the subsidies would go to the fast passenger liners instead of to the cargo vessels which carry our products. For instance, according to the admission of a Shipping Board representative, made at the hearings on the bill, a 5,000 gross ton cargo vessel would receive a subsidy of $7,500 per annum, whereas the Leviathan could draw a subsidy of $1,800,000 per annum.

As vicious as the bill is in principle, it is even more vicious in form. It confers most autocratic and unprecedented power upon the Shipping Board. It affords boundless opportunities for favoritism, graft, and corruption. It authorizes them to lend the $125,000,000 revolving fund to whom they please and on 15 years' time. It authorizes them to sell the ships to whom they please and on whatever conditions they please, or to refuse to sell them even to American citizens. It authorizes them to grant or to withhold the subsidies and to increase them up to doubling the basic subsidies. Under the provisions of this remarkable bill the Shipping Board is authorized to usurp powers properly belonging to and now exercised by the President, six Cabinet officers, the Budget Committee, the Congress, and the judiciary.

This extraordinary bill confers more power on the Shipping Board than good men ought to want and more power than bad men ought to be given. The bill is so framed as to avoid annual appropriations. Instead of the Shipping Board coming to Congress each year for necessary appropriations to carry out the provisions of the bill, as all other departments of the Government are required to do, the bill is admittedly so framed as to avoid this, it directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to the merchant marine fund certain receipts and "all moneys in the fund are hereby permanently appropriated for the purpose of making such payments" of voyage subsidies "upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the Shipping Board." The proponents of the bill boldly admit that this is for the purpose of preventing a repeal of the bill by subsequent Congresses elected by the people.

Although it was vigorously pressed as an administration measure, the President exerting all possible pressure to effect its passage, yet this bill was shown to be so iniquitous that the Republican majority of 169 in the House dwindled to 24 on the passage of the bill, and it was then only saved by the 82 "lame ducks" who voted for it.

The administration is now engaged in trying to put this bill through the Senate by the aid of "lame ducks" there, as they know such a bill will stand no chance in the next Congress, which was elected with this as an issue.

In control of both branches of Congress since March 4, 1919, and with 169 majority in the House and 24 majority in the Senate, and in complete control of the executive branch of the Government since March 4, 1921, the Republicans have failed to function in the interest of the people. President Harding and his administration have utterly failed to cope with the vital domestic and foreign problems with which we are confronted. With agriculture prostrate and business stagnated, the Republicans have been unable or unwilling to extend a helping hand. What few efforts that have been made to meet the problems have been under the goading of the Democrats and a few progressive Republicans, but the results have been so niggardly as to be ineffective.

The difficulty has been that the "master minds" have been hostile to legislation in the interest of the people, or have been unable to agree among themselves upon any definite policy looking to the relief of the masses. The result has been that the President has hesitated, vacillated, and "wiggled and wobbled."

LACK OF FOREIGN POLICY.

The Republican national platform of 1920 declared in part as follows:

Never has our Nation been confronted with graver problems. The people are entitled to know in definite terms how the parties purpose solving these problems. To that end the Republican Party declares its policies and program to be as follows:

The Republican Party stands for agreement among the nations to preserve the peace of the world. We believe that such an international association must be based upon international justice and must provide methods which shall maintain the rule of public right by the development of law and the decision of impartial courts, and which shall secure instant and general international conference whenever peace shall be threatened by political action, so that the nations pledged to do and insist upon what is just and fair may exercise their influence and power for the prevention of war.

And yet the present Republican administration has had no foreign policy except one of cowardice. With all Europe in a state of turmoil and chaos, a portion of it at war and the remainder on the verge of war, we sit supinely by, although this powerful Nation should and could be the great moral leader of the world, and without incurring any risk could contribute more than all other forces combined toward bringing about political tranquillity and consequent financial, industrial, and commercial stability in Europe. The administration admits our vital interest in European affairs by sending so-called unofficial observers to sneak in the back door of every European conference, but the Republicans refuse to play any manly part, as they promised in their 1920 platform they would do.

The indifference and helplessness of the administration was clearly evidenced in a signed article by one of the staff correspondents of the Washington Star, a loyal administration paper, which in its issue of January 6, 1923, declared:

What President Harding branded "a record congregation" assembled at the White House yesterday for the semiweekly press conference. Hopes of important comment on the grave European situation were the attraction. The scribes, especially the group of foreign correspondents attached to the Washington corps, were amazed to be told that notwithstanding the Old World crisis, the Cabinet for the first time since the Harding administration took office assembled, but adjourned without meeting, because no business was submitted for discussion.

With Europe in the throes of its most nervous week end since the war, it was not sufficiently important for Cabinet consideration. However, there was important business for consideration of the Cabinet the following week, but it was not the portentious European situation. It was a grave domestic problem. In order that I may not be charged with being unfair I shall quote from the same loyal Republican paper, the Washington Star, which in a front-page article appearing in its issue of January 12, 1923, described this Cabinet meeting as follows:

HOUND DOG HOLDS CENTER OF STAGE AS CABINET MEETS.

A hound dog in the Grand Canyon National Park has his day as a topic of debate at the usual Friday session of President Harding's Cabinet.

The dog belongs to the park postmaster, and the Post Office Department has contended that he is needed for company. But the Interior Department, which manages national parks, has a standing rule against dogs on all such reservations.

To-day the long and bitter controversy came to a head. Postmaster General Work eloquently drew a picture of the lonely postmaster who loved his dog. Secretary Fall, also a lover of dogs, replied that sympathy must not be permitted to override the stern provisions of the law.

However, the President, with characteristic positiveness and decision, rose to the occasion and met the situation, as further described in said article, as follows:

The President was said by Cabinet members to have decided at first in favor of the dog, but later to have indicated that he would not make a final ruling until he had received more detailed information.

The New York World, in its issue of January 9, 1923, correctly and aptly describes the foreign policy of this administration as follows:

COWARDICE AS A FOREIGN POLICY.

In foreign relations Mr. Harding is afraid of everything. He is afraid of commitments, as he calls them. He is afraid of entanglements, He is afraid of responsibilities. He is afraid of obligations. He is afraid of the Senate. He is especially afraid of the battalion of death. He is afraid of his own record as Senator. He is afraid to be consistent, and he is afraid to be inconsistent. He is afraid to act and he is afraid not to act. And in consequence no human being in all the world knows what the foreign policy of the United States will be from day to day.

It is possible to devise a foreign policy that rests only on cowardice, for Mr. Harding has proved that it can be done. But the net result of it all is that the political and economy condition of the civilized world is far worse than it was the day that Mr. Harding took office. In fact, all Europe is on the verge of collapse. If that is really what the American people voted for in 1920, that is what they have to show for it.

Yes; in 1920 a large majority of the people voted for a change, and there is no question that they got it. They exchanged eight years of Democratic prosperity for four years of Republican adversity.

ADMINISTRATION HONEYMOON.

No administration ever went into power with as large a majority or as splendid an opportunity for service as the present Republican administration, and no administration was ever so quickly and so completely discredited. The honeymoon was delirious and hilarious, but the aftermath has been something awful.

BREAKDOWN OF REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION.

Their failure has been so palpable and so pronounced that not only have the leading Republican journals been bitterly denouncing the administration, but even many administration leaders have publicly admitted its shortcomings. WILLIAM R. WOOD, a Republican Congressman from Indiana and the chairman of the Republican national congressional committee, in a speech on the floor of the House declared:

I know the very serious condition that is prevailing throughout the land. I am only speaking the truth when I say that the people of this country employed in every vocation and in every character of business are giving this Congress hell. They are doing it because we have done nothing to stimulate business. They are doing it because we have done nothing to give employment to the unemployed. They are doing it because we have done nothing to benefit the farmer and stimulate the prices of the farmers' products.

In a public address Secretary of War Weeks declared that "the Congress has never been at as low an ebb as it is to-day." Leading Republicans and Republican papers, as well as everybody else, echoed this sentiment with approval. It is perfectly natural that this Congress has reached the lowest ebb of any Congress in history because it contains more Republicans than any other Congress ever contained. Why, it got so bad that even Daddy Harding indorsed a Democratic candidate for the Senate in Iowa.

The method employed by the present administration is apparently that of an old quack doctor who once practiced in the mountains of east Tennessee. His specialty was curing fits, and, consequently, his services were in much demand, that being the Republican section of Tennessee. He was sometimes called to attend other cases, and if he did not know the trouble or what to do, his plan was to throw the patient into fits and then cure him of the fits. Doctor Harding and his quack associates have thrown this country into fits, but they are now unable to cure the fits.

Reactionary Republicanism is not a cure for any ill that may afflict the body politic; in fact, it is a malady itself. How long will it take the people to learn that no situation can be so bad that relief will be afforded by Republican success?

SOLE HOPE LIES IN DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

There are numerous able, progressive, and patriotic members of the Republican Party who are utterly out of sympathy with the reactionary policies of the present administration, but, unfortunately, they are not exercising any effective influence on party action. It is becoming more evident daily that the sole hope lies in the Democratic Party, the only party which has steadfastly manifested its friendship for all the people.

Coming from Washington, the national clearing house of political information, I bring to you good tidings. The Democratic camp fires are burning brightly throughout the Nation. The people are in open revolt against this special-privilege-favoring Republican administration, against its do-nothing policy. The Democrats are ready and eager for the fray.

After 18 months of the Harding administration, with a minimum of achievement and a maximum of failure, with pledges unfulfilled, with the Grand Old Party breaking into factions, with rapidly multiplying administration scandals, and with the influential papers and many leading members of their own party severely condemning the administration, we can well understand why President Harding uttered the despairing wail, "There are times that I wish for a little while that I were not President of the United States," and why, at the recent homecoming in Marion, he said to his home people that he would welcome the day "when I can come back to you and stay permanently."

Our friendship for the President is such that we intend to see that his wishes shall be fully gratified at the first opportunity—in 1924.

DEMOCRATIC VICTORY IN 1924.

Will Rogers has said that the Democrats in most of the States failed to notify the Republicans that they were going to hold an election last November. However, that result was only a gentle reminder of what will happen in 1924, when the American people will rise in their majesty and throw off the Republican yoke with which they are burdened, and restore to power the Democratic Party, which gave them the most unprecedented prosperity in all the history of this Republic.

PRESENCE OF CLERKS AND STENOGRAPHERS IN GRAND JURIES.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4438) to amend section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, a similar House bill having been reported on the calendar.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that bill being considered now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill for the present.

RETURN OF ALIEN ENEMY PROPERTY.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know what the parliamentary inquiry is. I am against this bill, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is up to the majority, who are responsible for legislation, to produce a quorum. We had a bill up here awhile ago that involved an appropriation of only $4,000 for a preliminary survey of 4,000,000 acres of land, to reclaim it, and the majority leader objected to it, and I am against this Alien Property Custodian bill and I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 215 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the joint resolution I desire to offer for the RECORD two tables showing the extraordinary decline in the production of gold and silver in the world and in the United States since the year 1915.

The gold production in the United States declined from $101,035,700 in 1915 to $49,096,000 in 1922, or 51.41 per cent. The silver production in the United States declined from 74,961,075 ounces in 1915 to 53,052,441 ounces in 1921, or 29.2 per cent.

I offer these tables and ask unanimous consent that they be published in the RECORD:

Based upon this estimated British decline, the world's gold production for 1922 was estimated at $315,000,000 by H. N. Lawrie, managing director American Gold and Silver Institute, as published in the Annual Review Edition, Engineering and Mining Journal Press, January 20, 1923.

Several Members asked permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentlemen who desire to extend their remarks in the RECORD please make their requests to-morrow morning?

Mr. LITTLE. But I may not have an opportunity to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Kansas extending his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

CONFERENCE REPORT, TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I believe the report has not been made to the House, and I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement in lieu of the report.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 6, and 11, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided, That no insurance partnership, association, or corporation, against which any claim or claims may be filed by any citizen of the United States with the Alien Property Custodian within 60 days after the time this paragraph takes effect, whether such claim appears to be barred by the statute of limitations or not, shall be entitled to avail itself of the provisions of this paragraph until such claim or claims are satisfied"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided, however, That this subsection shall not affect any rights which any citizen or subject may have under paragraph 1 of this subsection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 7, 8, 9, and 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendments insert "3"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment and insert:

"SEC. 23. The Alien Property Custodian is directed to pay to the person entitled thereto, from and after the time this section takes effect, the net income, dividend, interest, annuity, or other earnings, accruing and collected thereafter, on any property or money held in trust for such person by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States for the account of the Alien Property Custodian, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe; but no person shall be paid, under this section, any amount in excess of $10,000 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment permits the return of all the money or other property to a woman who was a daughter of a resident citizen of the United States and herself a resident or a former resident thereof, or a minor daughter or daughters of such woman, she being deceased; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment permitted the return of all the money or other property earned by an enemy or ally of an enemy while he was a bona fide resident of the United States, if at the time of the return of his money or other property he is a bona fide resident of the United States; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment provides that an enemy insurance partnership, association, or corporation shall not be entitled to the return under this paragraph unless it has satisfied claims against it filed by a citizen of the United States within 60 days after the passage of this act; and the House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment requires that a partnership, association, other unincorporated body of individuals, or a corporation must be controlled or that 50 per cent of the interest or voting power must be owned at the time its money or other property was taken over by the Alien Property Custodian, as well as at the time it is returned, by citizens or subjects of nations, States, or free cities other than Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment is intended to safeguard the rights of any person under paragraph (1) prior to the passage of this act. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 6: This amendment requires the presentation of evidence with respect to attorney's fees to the President rather than to the Alien Property Custodian; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10: These amendments provided that the fees of any agent, attorney, or representative of a person entitled to the return of money or property under this act must not exceed 1 per cent of the value of such property. The House bill placed a limitation of 10 per cent on such fees. The House recedes with an amendment to each of these amendments placing 3 per cent as a maximum.

On amendment No. 11: This amendment requires the giving of satisfactory evidence to rebut any presumption of expatriation to the President rather than to the Alien Property Custodian; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment struck out the section in the House bill authorizing the return of future net income, dividends, interest, annuities, and other earnings. The House recedes with an amendment which restores the section, but with a limitation on the amount of such net income, dividends, interest, annuity, and other earnings which may be paid to any one person of $10,000 per annum.

On amendment No. 13: This is a clerical amendment; and the Senate recedes.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
THOMAS STERLING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WALTER H. NEWTON,
WILLIAM J. GRAHAM,
CLARENCE F. LEA,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move a recess under the prior order of the House.

Mr. KINCHELOE. On that I ask a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House stand in recess under its prior order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Where the conferees have receded with an amendment, that amendment has to be adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House now recess under its prior order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order—I was on my feet—that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But I was within my rights, notwithstanding the Chair's decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 26 minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from the Adjutant General's Office, dated February 28, 1923.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 28, 1923.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith for publication in a March issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between January 5 and February 4, 1923, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
The Adjutant General.

The following names have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF HARRISON, STATE OF IOWA.

189 Merle Clyde Card (Merle C. Card), Route No. 3, Missouri Valley, Iowa.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 2, CITY OF WICHITA, STATE OF KANSAS.

1803 Mike E. Loder, 503 West Avenue, Jenkinstown, Pa. (Wichita, Kans.).
Mikel E. Loder, 340 North Market Street, Wichita, Kans.

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF TIPTON, STATE OF TENNESSEE.

1129 Edgar Nolen, Brighton, Tenn.

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards names, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually served in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should, for any of these reasons, likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, March 4, 1923.

(Legislative day of Saturday, March 3, 1923.)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

SPEECHES DISTRIBUTED BY FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the acting governor of the Federal Reserve Board relative to Senate Resolution 351 (submitted by Mr. HEFLIN and agreed to December 12, 1922), requesting the Federal Reserve Board to furnish the Senate a list of the names and addresses to which a certain speech was mailed, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD, OFFICE OF VICE GOVERNOR,
Washington, March 3, 1923.

SIR: Senate Resolution 351 requests the Federal Reserve Board to obtain and send to the Senate certain lists of names and addresses, being the names and addresses of persons who received copies of a speech delivered by the junior Senator from Virginia more than a year ago. It is certainly a somewhat unusual request to make of any Government body, as it must be obvious that there was no object in preserving the lists used so long ago, and consequently in some cases they do not exist, and in all cases are greatly changed and are not the same lists to which Senator GLASS's speech was sent. If the Senate had desired the Federal Reserve Board to have these lists preserved, it would seem that the request would have been made not later than the spring of 1922, as the speech of Senator GLASS was delivered on the 16th and 17th of January.

It appears from the preamble, which was made a part of Senate Resolution 351 by being passed with it, that its purpose was to enable one Senator, whose position is stated to have been "assailed and criticized" by another Senator, to have the opportunity "of sending copies of his speech to the citizens who have received the speech which assailed and criticized him," and the inference appears to be that at least one of the objects in the circulation of Senator GLASS's speech was the criticism of another Senator. Reference to the other Senator whose position is stated to have been assailed and criticized in Senator GLASS's speech was purely incidental, and it is doubtful if the officers of the Federal reserve banks even so much as remembered that he had been mentioned in the speech of the Senator from Virginia, whose speech was delivered in January, 1922. The speech of the Senator from Virginia was recognized by all authorities as the most complete and masterly explanation and exposition of the Federal reserve system and of its operation ever delivered. Senator GLASS was the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives when the Federal reserve act was first in preparation, when it was passed in Congress, and when it came into operation by the organization of the 12 Federal reserve banks. He was also the author of most of the amendments which were passed during the first years of its operation and later as Secretary of the Treasury became ex officio the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. He was, therefore, familiar with every detail of the law and with its operation and was the one man not only in the Senate of the United States but in the United States itself in a position to make such an address with authority.

The address was circulated to convey to the member banks of the Federal reserve system and to their clients invaluable information not otherwise obtainable and with no purpose or thought of criticizing any other Senator.

If, nevertheless, the Senator who feels that his position was "assailed and criticized" desires after the lapse of more than a year to send out answers to Senator GLASS's great speech some information can be given from the answers of the Federal reserve banks to the resolution which will enable him to cover most of the persons who received Senator GLASS's address. There was great difference in the methods of distribution of Senator GLASS's address. Thus the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis states that it was sent in that district only to member banks on written request, and the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas replies that the address was sent to banks, chambers of commerce, and to some extent to such institutions as rotary clubs. In all districts many copies were distributed in this way, no exact list of the persons who received the address having been kept, as the final distribution to "citizens" (the term used in the resolution) was made by the many commercial banks, institutions, and organizations. By using the Bankers' Directory, therefore, and by sending copies to chambers of commerce, the other Senator may cover most of the territory.

Senator GLASS's speech was in much demand by educational institutions, and several hundred copies were sent to some of them on request. Reprints of it were in fact made by some educational and other institutions that were unable to obtain a sufficient number of copies of the full address to satisfy their requirements. Some of these reprints contain no reference whatever to the Senator "who spoke on the other side of the question."

Most Federal reserve banks maintain mailing lists built up in connection with the distribution of their monthly reports and with their business reporting service, and these lists in some banks were used in the distribution of Senator GLASS's speech, but the banks generally regard these lists as their personal property, and several of them have protested strongly against making them public. The board's counsel doubts authority to compel their submission without specific act of Congress. In any event, they have greatly changed in a year and are not the same lists that were used in the early part of 1922. Furthermore, they did not, as used in 1922, include the names and addresses of anywhere near all the citizens who received the speech of Senator GLASS.

Respectfully submitted.

EDMUND PLATT, Acting Governor.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of an act entitled "Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, by committee on railroads as substitute for Senate Joint Memorial No. 2, enacted by the eighteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by Jos. M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 28th day of February, 1923.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 28th day of February A. D. 1923.

_____,
Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, by committee on railroads, as substitute for Senate Joint Memorial No. 2.

Whereas the farmers of Montana and the Northwest suffered serious loss of crops by reason of the widespread drought that prevailed during the years of high prices and business inflation, and as a result were not prepared to withstand the deflation which followed by calling on a reserve of accumulated profits such as was available to other lines of industry; and

Whereas by reason of long distances to market making freight charges high, and the low prices for what the farmer sells, and the high prices for what he buys, the farmers of Montana and the Northwest, having for the first time in five years obtained a substantial yield, are unable to secure the cost of production for their crops; and

Whereas the railroads serving Montana, by reason of a shortage of cars, have been unable to receive and transport to market the products of the farm and ranches, thus causing great inconveniences and loss, not only to the farmers and stock growers, but to the business and banking interests of the State, as well; and

Whereas the responsibility for this deplorable condition is in dispute, having been repudiated by the western roads laying the blame on their eastern connections, who in turn deny the responsibility: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate and house concurring), That we do hereby petition and earnestly pray the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States to take such action regarding regulating the interchange of cars, or such other action as may be necessary to prevent a recurrence of these conditions.

And we further petition and pray that for the reasons heretofore set out, to wit, the inability of the farmers in the Northwest to secure the cost of production for their wheat and other products, the honorable, the Congress of the United States enact such legislation as may be necessary to stabilize the price of farm products by fixing a minimum price for wheat, thus placing the business of farming on an equal footing with other and lesser industries of the country; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring relief to the farmers of the Northwest by carrying into effect the suggestions hereinbefore set out, and that they deliver to the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission a copy of this resolution.

NELSON STORY, Jr.,
President of the Senate.
CALVIN CRUMBAKER,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 27, 1923.

JOS. M. DIXON, Governor.

C. T. STEWART, Secretary of State.

Mr. STERLING presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

A concurrent resolution.

Whereas the average farmer buys over a ton of steel annually in the form of farm implements, wire, and hundreds of other steel products; and

Whereas there is a trade practice used by the steel mills by means of which they collect millions of dollars annually for freight service which is not earned, known as "Pittsburgh plus"; Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we strongly condemn this practice and urge that the Federal Trade Commission take such steps as will be necessary to abolish the Pittsburgh plus practice; be it further

Resolved, That our United States Senators and Members of the National House of Representatives be urged to promote such legislation as will curb this evil; and

That engrossed copies of this preamble and resolution be prepared by the secretary of the senate, signed by the presiding officers of the senate and house of representatives, and forwarded to the Federal Trade Commission, at Washington, D. C., to Congressmen WILLIAM WILLIAMSON, C. A. CHRISTOPHERSON, and ROYAL C. JOHNSON, and United States Senators STERLING and NORBECK.

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
SENATE CHAMBER,
Lincoln, March 1, 1923.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to submit to you the following resolution which was passed by the State Senate of Nebraska:

Resolution.

"Whereas the administration of the selective service act during the World War disclosed an appalling state of affairs with respect to the physical condition of the young manhood of our country; and

"Whereas the highest military and surgical officials of the United States of America, whose duty it was to administer the draft, concluded that more than 50 per cent of the young men of draft age were not physically fit, and in conference assembled have urged that remedial legislation be enacted to better these conditions; and

"Whereas the State institutions of the State of Nebraska are filled and overflowing with unfortunates who are becoming an ever-increasing burden on the taxpayers of this State; and

"Whereas statistics and diagnoses prove conclusively that the condition of Nebraska's unfortunates is in many cases the direct result of hereditary and social diseases; and

"Whereas the stability of the American home, the bulwark of the American Nation, is greatly endangered by the laxness and the great disparity of the marriage and divorce laws of the various States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska:

"SECTION 1. That we hereby petition and memorialize the National Congress to enact into law a uniform marriage and divorce law for the purpose of combating the evils hereinbefore set forth.

"SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of the senate to each of the Nebraska Senators and Representatives in the National Congress, together with an urgent request that they support such legislation as will result in the passage of a national uniform marriage and divorce law, and that they use their best efforts to secure favorable action thereon at the earliest possible moment."

Respectfully yours,

CLYDE H. BARNARD,
Secretary of the Senate.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered (2) and (13);

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered (1), (4), (6), and (11), and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered (3): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered (3), and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided, That no insurance partnership, association, or corporation, against which any claim or claims may be filed by any citizen of the United States with the Alien Property Custodian within 60 days after the time this paragraph takes effect, whether such claim appears to be barred by the statute of limitations or not, shall be entitled to avail itself of the provisions of this paragraph until such claim or claims are satisfied"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered (5): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered (5), and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided, however, That this subsection shall not affect any rights which any citizen or subject may have under paragraph (1) of this subsection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered (7), (8), (9), and (10): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered (7), (8), (9), and (10), and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendments insert "3"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment and insert:

"SEC. 23. The Alien Property Custodian is directed to pay to the person entitled thereto, from and after the time this section takes effect, the net income, dividend, interest, annuity, or other earnings, accruing and collected thereafter, on any property or money held in trust for such person by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States for the account of the Alien Property Custodian, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, but no person shall be paid, under this section, any amount in excess of $10,000 per annum.

And the Senate agree to the same.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
THOS. STERLING,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WALTER H. NEWTON,
W. J. GRAHAM,
CLARENCE F. LEA,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what was done with reference to the attorney fees provision?

Mr. CUMMINS. It was reduced from 10 per cent to 3 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] here. He was very much interested in that provision. I really do not believe Congress ought to be legislating about attorney fees. I think it is very unwise to do so. It may involve us in all kinds of scandal before this matter is concluded.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But this is only a limit. It does not provide for attorney fees.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a limit of 3 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has just entered the Chamber, and I turn the matter over to him. However, I am opposed to it.

Mr. WILLIS. May I inquire what was done with the amendment striking out section 23?

Mr. CUMMINS. Section 23 is in the bill, but it is limited to the payment of $10,000 on account of incomes received after the bill becomes a law. It has no retroactive aspect.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator state what the conferees did with reference to the report as to attorney fees?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is limited to a 3 per cent maximum. It was 10 per cent, as provided by the House, but the conferees reduced it to 3 per cent.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Iowa what was done with the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]?

Mr. CUMMINS. It was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I am not disposed to detain the Senate. Of course I think the amendment relating to attorney fees which the Senate adopted was better than the one the conferees agreed upon, but the conferees have done tolerably well. Three per cent is very much better than 10 per cent. I shall not oppose it further.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the work of the Senate for any extended period, but I felt that I could not leave the Senate without saying a few words at parting with my friends in this body. I shall take but a very brief time in doing so.

Mr. President, in a short time the Sixty-seventh Congress will adjourn and many of us will retire from the Senate. I am one of those whose service will end. I can not complete my term without giving some expression to the feelings of friendship I have for those with whom I have served during the eventful six years which have passed.

It was the ambition of my life to represent my State in the United States Senate. I felt that it was the highest honor that could be granted to anyone. My ambition to represent New Jersey has been fulfilled and I have been privileged to sit in the Senate during the most eventful period in the country's history. It was also my ambition to represent my State as acceptably and capably as the three Senators of my name and family who have preceded me in this body, and I hope I have measured up in some slight degree to the high standards they set.

I make no boast of any particular political virtue, but I have always felt it a duty to stand for clean politics, for constructive measures, for helpful service, and right rather than political expediency.

Although the verdict of the majority of the voters of my State has ended my commission to serve New Jersey, I feel that I can retire with the consciousness that I have done my best and have tried to serve with sincerity of purpose and have lived up to the standards in which I believe. As I go forth again as a private citizen I know that I have the respect of my constituency, even if they did not all vote for me.

I regret leaving the splendid fellowship of my friends here. These friendships which I have formed will endure as long as I live.

New Jersey was one of the original thirteen States which formed the Union. Upon her soil were fought the great battles which gave us independence and made possible the formation of the Republic. Jerseymen are justly proud of this tradition, and it has been my earnest endeavor to uphold that historical position.

Our independence as a Nation was due to this Revolution. The independence of some Jerseymen in the recent election was due to another revolution more recent than the first. Nobody has had more experience with that revolution than I have had.

I come from a section of the country which is one of industrial greatness and financial strength. This territorial advantage was not due to any choice of mine but to my Holland ancestors, who settled in New Jersey 200 years ago and helped make the State what it was and is. Each succeeding generation has remained there, due probably to the nonnomadic habits of the Dutch. I have tried, however, to serve without sectional prejudice or partisan rancor. With the Senators from the South I have endeavored to meet the many problems of that section of the country and help them in the discouragements and financial setbacks they have had to face and the legislative measures they proposed for relief. While not a member of the farm bloc, I have supported its efforts to relieve the burdens of the farmers of the West; and while I have not been able to meet some views I have thought too extreme I have seen in that movement not government by a class, as many charge, but an honest fight for justice to those who till the soil.

I was brought up to believe in the Constitution of the United States, strict obedience to law, the Dutch Reformed Church, and the Republican Party. I must confess that these institutions of conservatism may have had some effect upon me and my service here. Modern statesmanship seems to have parted somewhat from these conservative principles, and we now face the extremist in and out of our legislative halls who proposes patent medicines to cure all the ills of this stormy period. Some seem to believe that legislation can be made the panacea for all the ills of the body politic, but I adhere to the Constitution, to its principles, and shall continue to cling to that old faith. For 140 years we have been guided as a Nation by the faith of the fathers and their plan of government. I refuse to be parted from the old moorings, and while it may be called a narrow-minded vision by some to preserve this attitude of faith in constitutional government, I prefer it.

My business training and instinct leads me to express the hope that in the next Congress will come the much-needed reform in the rules, so that the country's business can be transacted more promptly and by the majority.

I have again and again during my experience here seen this Senate, by reason of its rules, become pitiful through its impotence to control its own body.

If the Senate is to retain the esteem of the country which it has hitherto at times enjoyed, those that remain here to serve must recognize the great weight of public opinion demanding this change of policy.

I say this without any feeling of unfriendliness to those who disagree with me, as I believe that, although we have our different views and although the currents of politics sway us to and fro, underneath the skin of everyone who serves here is a better nature, a sterling patriotism, and love of country.

May I express, in closing, my deep appreciation to the Vice President who presides over this body for his many courtesies extended to me; may I thank also my friends, the secretaries and clerks of the Senate, for their helpful assistance, as well as my boy friends, the pages, for their courteous attention.

To my colleagues I have this to say in conclusion: As you face the future and the important questions you will be called upon to settle in this legislative body, may you have the broadest vision and wisdom and may you continue those policies of government which have made for the greatness of our people and the welfare of our beloved country.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR SUTHERLAND.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I shall not undertake in the limited time at my disposal to express at length the thoughts that come to my mind at the conclusion of 10 years of congressional service, of which 4 years were spent in the House of Representatives and 6 years in the Senate. I have regarded my successive elections by the people of West Virginia to these positions as affording me a wonderful opportunity for service, and I have endeavored during all these years to give the very best service of which I was capable. I am grateful to the good people of my State for having thus favored me. I have accepted the result of the election in West Virginia, terminating to-day my term of service here, I trust, in a true philosophical spirit, and I may say, without reservation, that I have done so without regrets or without recriminations of any kind. I shall return to my State in the immediate future to take up my labors for my family, feeling confident that I can put in the remaining years of my life in hard consecutive work to good advantage. My only regret is the sundering of the pleasant associations which have been formed as a Member of the two greatest legislative bodies in the world. My relations with those in both Houses have without exception been agreeable and pleasant and I have the profoundest respect and admiration for the membership of these bodies.

I am not one of those who believe that this great country is going to destruction through any lack of consecrated effort on the part of its legislators. While the functioning of the Senate may not always be letter perfect, yet my experience here convinces me that there is nowhere in the world a more industrious or patriotic body of men than are to be found here. It would be strange indeed if there were not radical differences of opinion among the men of strong minds and personalities who compose the membership of this body, representing, as they do, sovereign States whose interests are not always identical, and yet whose well-being and prosperity mean the well-being and prosperity of the whole. Most of the results of legislation are brought about by the intelligent compromise of these differences, and usually these compromises are effectuated in a spirit of earnest cooperation, and certainly with a conscientious regard on the part of each toward his obligations to State and Nation. I am profoundly impressed with the desire on the part of each to contribute in his own way toward the solution of the mighty problems which come before this body for final determination. When legislators devote themselves in this way to their task the country is certainly safe.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to express to each and every Member of this body my appreciation of the uniform courtesy which has been accorded to me, and to extend to you, the Presiding Officer, and to the membership and all attachés my cordial good wishes for the future.

Mr. President, some weeks ago I offered a number of prizes to the high-school boys and girls of West Virginia for the best essays upon the subject "West Virginia, a Good Place in Which to Live." A highly competent committee of able and distinguished men was appointed to consider the merits of these essays, and after careful deliberation they selected the one they regarded as having the most merit. It was written by a young lady in a small town in Kanawha County, W. Va., and because of the fact that so many untrue statements have been made regarding the great State which I have had the honor to represent in part in this body, I am led to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this splendid essay, which sets forth briefly and in terse language many important truths about West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the essay referred to may be printed as a part of my remarks in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the essay was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[The essay awarded first prize in the Sutherland essay contest, open to high-school students of West Virginia, written by Miss Maxine M. Williams, Plus, Kanawha County, W. Va.]

WEST VIRGINIA, A GOOD PLACE IN WHICH TO LIVE.

West Virginia is a good place in which to live. It has natural beauty, progressive schools, splendid citizens, efficient government, and growing cities. It has rich soil, a genial climate, fine building materials, good transportation facilities, thriving industries, and great mineral wealth. Great commercial success awaits the State and the people who develop its resources.

Nature has given to West Virginia wonderful scenery. From the Alleghanies on the east, 4,860 feet above sea level, to the undulating Ohio plains on the west, 500 to 600 feet above sea level, there is an ever-changing panorama of beauty—hills in the green of summer or the crimson, orange, russet, and gold of autumn, veiled by blue haze and silver mist—colorful clumps of wild honeysuckle, dainty arbutus, stately laurel, and rhododendron—rugged canyons, curving rivers, and sparkling springs, many of which are mineral. White Sulphur, having probably the finest hotel in the South, is the most famous of the mineral or healing springs.

West Virginia has good schools, from primary to university. The State, parents, teachers, and children are cooperating to make the educational system better each year. Last year $11,402,000, almost four times the expenditure of 1910, was spent upon the common schools. In the past 10 years the State has trebled its number of high schools. Six excellent normal schools are training teachers for the important task of instructing pupils in the subjects that prepare for "complete living." Approximately 200 men and women teach the 2,700 students of the university. Through extension work the university constantly strives to help more citizens.

At Institute, Bluefield, and Harpers Ferry are schools for the higher education of the Negro race. At Romney, blind and deaf youth are educated in studies and trades that enable them to become self-supporting. Instead of permitting wayward boys and girls to go unhindered to destruction, separate industrial schools guide many of them into useful citizenship.

The people of West Virginia are brave, industrious, law-abiding, and intelligent. The battle fields of every war from the Revolution to the World conflict have proved their courage. In 1920 over $281,000,000 was on deposit in the banks of the State. Since the population at that time was 1,462,701, the per capita bank account was a little more than $191. No more acts of lawlessness occur in West Virginia than in other similar areas of United States territory. Melville Davisson Post, short-story writer; Henry Sydnor Harrison, novelist; Herbert Quick, novelist; Waitman Barbe, poet; Joseph Rath, mathmetician; and I. C. White, geologist, demonstrate the thinking ability of some West Virginians. Most of the people of the State are native born. There are many negroes, but the majority of the population is white. There are no conflicts. The two races live in perfect harmony and understanding.

The citizens of West Virginia believe in good government, and they have it. The legislators are intelligent, capable, liberal, and progressive. The statute books are full of laws for the good of man, and they are being enforced. State provision is made for the care of the public health, as well as the general welfare of the people. West Virginia is among the States having the lowest percentage of tuberculosis. Longevity goes to the peak in the Mountain State.

West Virginia people are not crushed by excessive taxes. In 1918 the rate of taxation was $0.07 on each $100 of assessed valuation; the total valuation was $1,366,139,828. The State owes little—$15,000,000 of recently issued road bonds and $11,000,000 for the Virginia debt, making the total debt about $26,000,000.

West Virginia's cities are growing rapidly. Broad, well-paved streets, splendid business houses, handsome churches, beautiful homes, fine schools, and thriving industries make the cities of the State pleasant and profitable for home, business, and pleasure.

No State has more beautiful churches than West Virginia. A magnificent ministry instructs the people from the Divine Book. Eighty-six per cent of the church membership is Protestant. The leading denominations are Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist, Catholic, and United Brethren.

Rich soil and a genial climate give to West Virginia great agricultural possibilities. In 1919 the value of farm crops was $96,537,000. Last year the State produced 4,250,000 bushels of wheat, 5,400,000 bushels of oats, and 22,100,000 bushels of corn. Delicious apples and luscious peaches are making West Virginia famous. One county, Berkeley, in good seasons, produces 500,000 barrels of apples, more than either Oregon or Washington. There are 20,000,000 fruit trees in the State. Small fruits—strawberries, raspberries, and blackberries—many kinds of vegetables, and various nuts flourish in West Virginia. Truck farmers have brilliant opportunities in the State. No long rainy seasons, withering droughts, or extremes of heat or cold plague West Virginia. Forty-five inches of rainfall, well distributed over the year, furnish abundant moisture for growing crops and rivers to float them to market.

Four of West Virginia's rivers are locked and dammed for navigation. The rivers of the State can produce enough electricity to furnish power and lights to all the homes and factories in West Virginia if it ever becomes necessary. The rivers are estimated to have a maximum potential energy of 1,162,000 horsepower, more than any other State.

West Virginia has not only good water transportation, but also hard roads, steam railways, and electric lines. At present there are 1,178 miles of class A highways in the State and $50,000,000 in the hands of the State road commission to bring the class A mileage to 3,500. Hundreds of miles more of hard roads will be maintained by individual counties. The Midland Trail, a national highway, traverses West Virginia from east to west. Twelve railroads and branch lines, collectively measuring 3,199 miles, serve most parts of the State. Several hundred miles of electric lines connect the leading cities with each other and the surrounding rural sections.

One great benefit of hard-surfaced roads is the consolidation of schools. The isolated, uncomfortable insanitary, and too often unsightly one-room schoolhouses are eliminated and the children transported, perhaps in motor busses, to attractive, modern buildings, where they generally receive better instruction than the one-room school affords, because of better grading and more time for individual help.

West Virginia is well supplied with building materials. An abundance of building stone and limestone for manufacturing cement are found in the State. Quantities of fine timber exist also. Six hundred and ninety-seven million six hundred thousand feet of lumber was cut in 1920. West Virginia stands second among the States in production of hardwood, yielding more yellow poplar and chestnut than any other State. There are 800,000 acres of virgin forest—enormous oak, chestnut, poplar, beech, hickory, ash, and maple trees—3,500,000 acres of valuable second-growth timber, and 5,000,000 acres of farm woodland.

Much food for the taking is found in the streams and forests. The rivers abound with fish and the hills with wild game—deer, bears, coons, and wild turkeys in the dense timber; rabbits, opossums, and pheasants in most sections. Truly West Virginia is a sportsman's paradise. A few eagles, many hawks and owls, and large numbers of song birds nest in the State.

Many domestic animals and fowls are raised in West Virginia. Thousands of magnificent cattle are found in the hills and blue-grass valleys of the State. Numerous farmers and companies are engaged in the breeding of thoroughbred, high-type cattle and sheep and swine. The superior, fat, grass-fed cattle of West Virginia are famous. No other State in the Union has such a reputation for fat lambs and sheep. For three consecutive years New York Stock Market reports stated that West Virginia sent the best carloads of lambs that entered Jersey City market. All of the State is splendidly adapted to the production of the mutton breed of sheep; large areas, especially in the northwest, are unsurpassed for the production of the finest merino wool. At the Paris Exposition wool grown in Brooke County was awarded first prize; 587,000 cattle, 510,000 sheep, and 305,000 swine are fed in the State. Multitudes of chickens, ducks, turkeys, and geese are annually raised.

West Virginia's greatest source of wealth is minerals. The State has great stores of coal, oil, and gas. Only Pennsylvania produces more coal. Last year 90,400,000 tons of coal, worth $400,000,000 at the mines, came from West Virginia. The State contains the greatest acreage of high-carbon coal of any district in the world. Eighty-nine seams of coal are found in West Virginia; 49 counties produce it. In 1921, 116,726 men mined coal in 1,570 openings owned by 993 companies. West Virginia coal is used on warships, on merchant vessels, and in countless homes and factories. Only 1,000,000,000 tons have been mined up to this time. There is a reserve of 160,000,000,000 tons. At the present rate of mining that reserve will not be exhausted in 1,800 years.

The by-products of coal are many and of great value—perfumes, dyes, bases for powerful explosives, and so forth. Numbers of people will become rich through their manufacture.

West Virginia has for years stood first in natural-gas production. The State produces two-fifths of all the gas that is yielded in the Nation and contains 30 per cent of the gas area. Each day 500,000,000 cubic feet of gas are piped to Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and other points. Another 500,000,000 cubic feet are daily used in the State's own homes, factories, and cities.

Thirty-one of West Virginia's counties produce oil of high quality. Last year the wells yielded 8,173,000 barrels, and there is a 200,000,000 barrel reserve. All mineral products of the State for 1920 were valued at $632,800,000. Surely West Virginia is a good factory location.

Cheap fuel and abundant raw materials have brought many factories to the State. In 1919 West Virginia factories produced $471,000,000 worth of goods. There were 20 iron and steel factories, with 11,630 employees and products worth $85,036,000; 77 glass plants, with 11,668 employees and $42,730,000 worth of products; 643 lumber and timber product plants, with 12,427 employees and products worth $34,420,000; and others with smaller productions. At that time the State had 869 factories, with an annual production valued at $5,000 to $20,000; 649 with a $20,000 to $100,000 annual output; 340 with a $100,000 to $500,000 output; 78 with a $500,000 to $1,000,000 output; and 94 with a yearly output of more than $1,000,000. Three potteries each produced more than $1,000,000 worth of ware. Six plants each manufactured more than $1,000,000 worth of lumber and timber products. Twelve glass factories each passed the $1,000,000 mark. The Mountain State stands first in glass manufacture and sixth in steel and rolling mill manufactures. Clays, shales, and silica beds exist in immense quantities and make possible the production on a large scale of brick and glass of every quality.

Many, if not most, of the factories are attractive, sanitary buildings, equipped with the best machinery. Injured workers or their families are compensated. Often the employers build inviting homes and rent or sell them reasonably to employees.

There are more of the elements, resources, and conditions which make for profitable occupation of brains, men and women, and money, and more of the conditions and environments which enter into healthful, happy life for men and women in West Virginia than in any like area in the world. In West Virginia manhood is respected and promoted, womanhood is esteemed and protected, and children are subjects of the greatest interest and development. West Virginia is truly a good place in which to live.

HIGH COST OF GASOLINE AND OTHER PETROLEUM PRODUCTS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am about to move an executive session, but I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin for the purpose of filing a report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Pursuant to the unanimous consent accorded to me on the 1st day of March, I present the report (No. 1263) of the investigation provided for in Senate Resolution 295, with illustrations, which I ask to have printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator if he will not move an open executive session, unless the matter is such that that can not be done?

Mr. LODGE. There is a treaty to be disposed of.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 403, further continuing the employment of an additional clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded by unanimous consent to consider the resolution, and it was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 340, agreed to September 18, 1922, authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to continue the employment of an additional clerk, payable out of the contingent fund, until the end of the present Congress, be, and the same hereby is, further continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 437, continuing the employment of an additional clerk for the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 437) submitted by Mr. BALL on February 12, 1923, as follows:

Resolved, That S. Res. 339, agreed to September 13, 1922, authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to continue the employment of an additional clerk, payable out of the contingent fund, until the end of the present Congress, be, and the same hereby is, further continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire why this committee needs an additional clerk at this time. Each Senator has four clerks, and the committee may have more. I do not know as to that. I do know, however, that we are going to adjourn, the committees will all adjourn, and what is another clerk to do? Where are the four clerks the Senator has?

I have not any especial objection to the Senator's resolution. I did not object to the one of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], because I know that the Military Affairs Committee is at work all the time; but why should the Committee on the District of Columbia have another clerk?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the Committee on the District of Columbia has a number of investigations to make during the summer months.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be order in the galleries, and no conversation.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator for the consideration of the resolution providing it does not lead to any discussion whatever.

Mr. LODGE. Permission was granted before we went into executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well, then.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the resolution?

Mr. BALL. The resolution is to grant permission for the employment of my extra clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia during the summer months.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection, provided the resolution for investigating the street-car fares is permitted to be considered. Otherwise I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

REQUEST RELATIVE TO PRINTING.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me to ask unanimous consent respecting a matter I had placed in the RECORD on yesterday?

Mr. SMOOT. If it does not lead to any discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. I got permission on yesterday to have printed certain material in the RECORD. I ask permission to have it printed in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT OF 1921.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the unfinished business is H. R. 13770, an act to amend the revenue act of 1921, in respect to capital and gains and losses, and for other purposes. It was discussed somewhat last night; and it was made the unfinished business, with the understanding that the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] would consider the bill overnight and would decide this morning as to whether he would allow the bill to pass at this session or not. I spoke to the Senator in relation to its passage, and I gather from what he says that he does not feel that it is proper to allow the bill to pass at the present session of Congress. I ask the Senator if that is the case?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I hardly like to have it put that way. I believe that this section of the revenue law should be revised, but in the closing hours of the Congress I do not believe we have an opportunity to give to it the careful consideration which its importance demands. I believe that it will work an injustice.

During the last year the people of the country holding what might be termed "liquid assets, stocks, and bonds" on which they had suffered losses have taken those losses, and in their returns for the year 1922 they will be entitled to deduct the full amount of those losses. The taxpayers of the country having less liquid assets, who have not been able to take their losses through sales, will only be permitted to deduct 12½ per cent of their net losses.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. McCORMICK. An unbroken murmur of voices, both on the floor and in the galleries, absolutely precludes hearing the Senator from New Mexico on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be quiet in the galleries and Senators will please refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I realize the situation here, and the confusion which makes it necessary to raise one's voice above what anybody would like to do and retain the composure which the importance of the subject demands. I sincerely hope that there may be less confusion in the Chamber.

I may answer the Senator from Utah by saying that I am unwilling for this bill to pass in its present form. I would be willing to take the matter up and revise the provisions of the bill and adjust the situation so that it would be better than is provided for in existing law, but I do not believe that we could do that in an orderly way this morning and within the limited time, and I therefore suggest that the unfinished business be laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator correctly, then, that he did not propose that the bill should be passed at this session of Congress. It would be perfectly useless to accept an amendment to it, because it would have to go back to the House and there would have to be a conference, and there is no need of spending any time in the present consideration of the bill under those circumstances. I want to say, however, that at the very next session of Congress this bill will be introduced not only in the House but in the Senate, and at that time the Senator will have ample time to bring forward any amendment he desires to offer to it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not hear or could not hear the Senator from Utah, but the suggestion has just been made that the bill does not affect any gains or losses except for the calendar year 1923 and future years; and next December, when we meet, we may then take up this measure, if we care to do so, and revise it so as to make it a proper measure and to make it applicable to the incomes of 1923, and the Treasury will not lose a dollar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator knows that retroactive legislation affecting taxation has never been agreed to in the House of Representatives, and I do not think it will be at any time in the future. In fact, I want to say to the Senator that I am opposed to retroactive legislation of that kind.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is not this bill retroactive?

Mr. SMOOT. It begins the year——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We are asked to pass a bill now that is supposed to be operative dating back to January 1, 1923.

Mr. SMOOT. Beginning with January 1 of this year.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What is the difference between passing it in December and passing it now?

Mr. SMOOT. It gives the man who is escaping taxation from this date until we pass the bill next December, if it is passed, to make all the money he can in selling all of his worthless stock, in which there is a loss made. That is the difference. I say to the Senator now, and I say to the Senate, and I say to the country, that there will be a loss of millions and tens of millions of dollars to the Treasury of the United States if this bill does not pass.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the abuse which the Senator refers to can take place until next December, it can take place between now and December if we pass the law.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong in that. There is no necessity discussing that any further.

Mr. President, as the bill can not pass, I am going to take a few moments' time on another matter.

CONFIRMATIONS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SMOOT. If it does not lead to any discussion, I will yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yesterday I was not able to be here, and it appears there were certain nominations for postmasters from the State of Idaho, which were sent to the Secretary's desk, but somehow or other were mislaid. There are three of them. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be taken up as in open executive session and passed upon now, as both Senators from Idaho, I understand, have agreed to them. I ask for the immediate consideration of the nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be reported.

Mr. MOSES. With the report of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I ask unanimous consent to submit the nomination of D. L. Hyder to be postmaster at Elizabethton, Tenn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that they be considered en bloc. I would like to have the names read, so that if there is any objection as to any one of them it can be made.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Burton D. Fox to be postmaster at Challis, Idaho, in place of E. W. Keyes. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Mildred W. Des Voignes to be postmaster at Deary, Idaho, in place of B. M. Gorrie, resigned.

Alexander R. Wright to be postmaster at Oakes, N. Dak., in place of J. M. Hamill. Incumbent's commission expired November 21, 1922.

Daniel L. Hyder to be postmaster at Elizabethton, Tenn., in place of D. M. Brumit, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of these nominations in open executive session? The Chair hears none. Will the Senate advise and consent to the nominations? [Putting the question.] The nominations are confirmed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The President will be notified, and the Senate resumes legislative business.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT OF 1921.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Utah if it is his purpose to pursue this unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to pursue it unless there is some special reason for not doing so.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator permit me to make a very brief statement about this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think I had better proceed now.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to make a statement about this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will have time. I am not going to take very much time of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. All I wanted to say was that I was neither opposed to nor for the bill. I have not had a chance to study it, but protests have come to me from financiers in my State, asking that the bill be amended. I have not had time to consider it, and that is the reason I am taking the attitude that it should go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator has received the same protests I have, and I do not wonder at the protests, coming from the source they do. I can show the Senate of the United States advertisements in the press appealing to people who have stocks which have decreased in value, showing them how they can escape taxation, but if this bill is passed they can not.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The communications which have come to me have not been in opposition to this bill, but have asked for amendments to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course we can not do that at this session of Congress, because that would defeat the bill, on the face of things.

ADVANCE IN SUGAR PRICES.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, last Friday the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] had printed in the RECORD a circular letter signed by one M. Doran, an assistant secretary of the United States Sugar Association. Who he is, where he is from, no one seems to know.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. And I am going to take just a short time——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator yield? The RECORD shows that he is secretary of the United States Sugar Association.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I have said.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does the Senator know of such an association?

Mr. SMOOT. I know of such an association.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What authority has the Senator to say that who he is and where he comes from, nobody knows?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will please let me proceed without interruption, I will tell the Senator before I get through.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator should not make incorrect statements.

THE SUGAR TARIFF.

Mr. SMOOT. Several weeks ago there was laid before me a closely typewritten seven-page letter bearing date of January 26, written by the "United States Sugar Association," and addressed to one of my colleagues, with the request that I have it analyzed.

I found the letter full of inaccuracies, truths half told, and colored statements, evidently designed to mislead my colleagues. Failing to find in it a fair or honest paragraph, I placed the letter in the hands of Truman G. Palmer, who is known the world over—ex cathedra—as the best posted sugar man and statistician in America, whose statistical loose-leaf sugar publication is used throughout the sugar-producing countries of the world, and is subscribed to by both beet and cane sugar producers. Even the seaboard refiners, who use the truth with such penurious frugality, admit and pay tribute to the reliability of Mr. Palmer's sugar statistics.

Mr. Palmer has gone over this letter very carefully, analyzing it from beginning to end, and furnished me with the statistical figures with explanations. I ask to insert these in 8-point type as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MISSTATEMENT REGARDING NEW YORK PRICE OF SUGAR SEPTEMBER 22 TO NOVEMBER 22, 1922.

In the opening paragraph the pretense is made that this seven-page closely typewritten letter is written "for the purpose of informing you about some of the effects of the tariff on sugar imposed by the Fordney-McCumber bill." We will endeavor to see whether it is information or misinformation these people are trying to spread among your colleagues.

The first statement of alleged statistical fact made by the refiners in their letter is as follows:

"Between the date of its approval, September 22, 1922, and November 22, 1922, the price of raw sugar advanced from 3 cents to 4 cents per pound, the duty-paid price of raw sugar from 4.78 cents to 5.78 cents per pound, and the New York price for refined sugar from 6.25 cents to 7.25 cents per pound, or all of above exactly 1 cent per pound."

Here is a definite statement covering three sets of quotations to the effect that in each case, from September 22, 1922, to November 22, 1922, the price of sugar in New York advanced "exactly 1 cent per pound." New York quotations of sugar are known to everyone in the trade and are open to the public through the pages of Willet & Gray's Statistical Sugar Trade Journal and various other trade publications.

How utterly unreliable are the figures the refiners give is shown by comparing them with the actual New York quotations on the dates mentioned. It will be seen that in but one instance have the refiners stated the figures correctly, and that instead of there having been an advance of "exactly 1 cent per pound" it was from three-fourths to a little over seven-eighths cent per pound:

	Price of raw sugar per pound.		Difference.
	Sept. 22.	Dec. 22.
New York in bond:	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
Refiners' statement	3	4	1
Actual price	3	3.825	.825
New York duty paid:
Refiners	4.78	5.78	1
Actual price	4.77	5.65	.88
New York price of granulated:
Refiners	6.25	7.25	1
Actual price	6.125	6.86	.735

A quarter of a cent a pound seems small, but when applied to the 3,237,449 tons of Cuban sugar which we consumed last year, we find that the refiners' figures are in error to the extent of no less than $16,000,000 on our 1922 consumption of Cuban sugar, and a quarter of a cent added to or taken from our total 1922 consumption would make a difference to consumers of no less than $28,000,000.

SENATOR BROUSSARD'S PREDICTION AS TO SIZE OF LOUISIANA CROP.

In the next paragraph they say:

"This advance took place despite the fact that the Louisiana cane crop was being marketed continuously and the domestic beet crop was being produced and was offered the opportunity of coming on the market freely to prevent this advance. As the Louisiana crop amounted to only 241,000 short tons, instead of 365,000 short tons predicted by Senator BROUSSARD during the course of the Senate debates, it was too insignificant to have any influence on prices, as our total annual consumption for 1922 turned out to be 5,703,888 short tons."

The difference between the actual Louisiana crop and Senator BROUSSARD's prediction was wholy due to an act of the American producers of sugar in Cuba. It was caused in the following manner:

In the summer of 1920, after the domestic beet and cane sugar crop had been exhausted and due to a shortage in sugar, the New York price of refined had risen to 12 cents per pound. To profit inordinately by reason of our apparent helplessness, the American and Cuban producers of sugar in Cuba, with nearly 700,000 tons of sugar in their warehouses, met in Habana, formed a pool, and agreed not to sell any of their product at less than 24 cents per pound. This forced the United States to scour the world for sugar and resulted in her securing approximately a million tons from 50 other countries at an average cost of about 15 cents per pound. This displaced the market for that amount of Cuban sugar and left Cuba with a carry over of 1,200,000 tons in January, 1921, and the price of sugar went to smash, throwing the island into virtual bankruptcy, all because of the rapacity of her American refining producers who thought they could bleed us white.

The price of sugar went so low that Louisiana found it impossible to finance for any but the smallest acreage, hence the decreased crop, all because of the attempt of the American producers of sugar in Cuba to bleed us for 24 cents per pound for their raw sugar at a time when we were practically out of sugar and their Cuban warehouses were bursting with several hundred thousand tons for which there was no market outside of the United States. In our time of need it was indeed a sordid return for the continuing favor we extended to Cuban sugar under the reciprocity treaty 20 years ago.

DOMESTIC FREIGHT (BEET) PROTECTION, 1½ CENTS PER POUND.

The next paragraph of the letter in question is as follows:

"As the domestic beet production for 1922 was 691,000 short tons, as compared with 1,020,000 short tons in 1921 and 1,060,000 short tons in 1920, and was therefore barely sufficient to supply local consumption needs during a period of six months, sales were confined to local territory, so that the beet factories could add to their price the freight protection that they were favored with over cane refineries, averaging 1½ cents per pound."

It will be news, indeed, and good news to the beet-sugar manufacturers to know that they enjoy an average freight protection of 1½ cents per pound against Cuban sugar at New York. This statement should bear the headline, "Important, if true." But it is not true.

Some years ago the figures were gathered and published showing the weekly cane and beet sugar quotations in Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, and San Francisco for a period of six years. These tables included some 4,000 quotations. They cover the years 1913 to 1918. Below I reproduce the yearly averages of these figures, together with the New York averages. Quotations on the same day in the same markets were so wide in 1919 and 1920 as to preclude preparing similar tables for those years. I understand that quotations for subsequent years are now in course of preparation, but owing to continued unstable market conditions they will not form a reliable basis of comparison with normal conditions.

Average	6.460	6.325	6.614	6.553	6.288	6.126

By working out a general average for the entire six-year period we get the following results:

	Cane per 100 pounds.	Beet per 100 pounds.	Beet higher than New York cane per 100 pounds.	Beet lower than cane in same market per 100 pounds.
New York	$6.146	.....	[1] $0.055	$0.229

Kansas City	6.460	6.303	.377	.091
Denver	6.614	6.523	[1].027	.169
San Francisco	6.288	6.119	.072	.188

[1] Lower than New York cane price.

It will be seen from the figures above that instead of having an average freight advantage of 1½ cents per pound, as compared with the New York cane price, for the entire six-year period beet sugar sold in Pittsburgh, Detroit, and San Francisco at 5½ cents, 13.1 cents, and 2.7 cents, respectively, per 100 less than the New York price of sugar made from imported Cuban raws during the same period. It also will be seen that the average freight advantage enjoyed for six years by beet sugar in the six cities mentioned amounted to only 7.2 cents per 100 pounds, and not $1.50 per 100, as the refiners would have your colleagues believe. It also will be observed that in the same markets jobbers secured beet sugar at an average of 18.6 cents less per 100 than the price at which they were able to secure cane sugar made from imported Cuban raws. Had our entire consumption last year been made from domestic beets and been purchased at a like reduction from the price of imported Cuban sugar, the saving to our people would have amounted to over $21,218,000.

STATEMENTS OF SENATORS SMOOT, NICHOLSON, TOWNSEND, AND GOODING CRITICIZED.

The next paragraph of the letter reads as follows:

"They (domestic beet-sugar producers) did not rush into territory in which they would come into competition with sugar refined from Cuban cane and prevent this advance, in accordance with the claims that they have always done so made by Senators SMOOT, NICHOLSON, TOWNSEND, and GOODING during the course of the Senate debate."

In the above and in subsequent paragraphs where they say beet sugar was not offered freely and hence there was an unusual carry over into 1923, the refiners would lead the reader to believe the domestic beet-sugar manufacturers were trying to gouge the American people by exacting high prices for their product, when as a matter of fact their sugars were offered freely and every bag of it was sold at a lower price than imported cane sugar was selling for on the same day in the same market.

Reference to the pages of Willett & Gray's Statistical Sugar Trade Journal will disclose the truth or falsity of the thought the refiners would convey to my colleagues. Please bear in mind that Chicago is the great market for beet sugar, more beet sugar being marketed there than at any other point. From these quotations you will observe, first, that as soon as beet sugars were being produced they came into the market freely, not only in the markets from Chicago west, but east to Buffalo and Pittsburgh, right in the heart of the cane territory usually supplied by seaboard refiners. You also will note that each advance in price was made by seaboard refiners, the beet following but always selling at a lower figure than imported cane, and that the advances in price were not made because of the beet but in spite of beet competition. Copies of Willett & Gray's weekly notices concerning the movement of beet sugars from September 14 to December 31, 1922, the period alluded to by the refiners, are as follows:

MOVEMENT OF BEET SUGAR, SEPTEMBER 14 TO DECEMBER 28, 1922, AS NOTED BY WILLETT & GRAY.

W. & G., September 14, 1922: "Advices from Detroit state that the eastern beet sugar factories' new production will be available sometime between the 1st and 15th of October."

W. & G., September 21, 1922: "New crop beet sugars are offered more freely, but it is too early for actual sugars to appear in quantity, although Great Western advises that they are now offering beets at the 6.15 (6.027 net cash) seaboard basis in Chicago territory and westward. Eastern beets are expected to be available between the 1st and 15th of October. Many of the beet factories, including the Great Western, offer their sugars on a 30-day guaranteed contract, the guarantee applying against decline in the price." New York granulated, 6.125 net cash (cane).

W. & G., October 5, 1922: "Western beet in Chicago territory is quoted at 6.50 cents (6.370 net cash) seaboard basis." New York cane granulated, 6.37 cents net cash.

W. & G., October 11, 1922: "According to our advices from Detroit, Michigan new crop beet sugars are offered, subject to confirmation, at 6.50 cents (6.370 net cash) seaboard basis, shipment on or before October 31." New York cane granulated, 6.468 cents.

W. & G., October 19, 1922: "An interesting feature during the week has been the starting up of the Ohio and Michigan beet sugar factories, and which factories are quoting 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash) seaboard basis, no guarantee, shipment in turn, but which shipments are expected to start early next week." New York cane granulated, 6.90 cents (6.762 net cash).

W. & G., October 26, 1922: "At this writing, the demand at 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash) has improved materially, necessitating an advance of 7 cents (6.860 net cash) by American, National, Warner, and Atkins, and to 6.90 (6.762 cents net cash) by Arbuckle. Other markets made corresponding advances." New York cane granulated, 6.762 cents net cash.

W. & G., November 2, 1922: "The same conditions apply to the domestic beet industry as, although many of the factories advanced their list prices to 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash), there have been free offerings at the 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash) seaboard basis, and apparently a good business has been done." New York cane granulated, 6.762 cents net cash.

W. & G., November 9, 1922: "The eastern beet sellers have made an effort to advance their price above the 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash) seaboard basis, and the free selling and easier conditions of the Louisiana clarifieds and plantation markets are also having their effect on the demand for refined sugar." New York cane granulated, 6.762 cents net cash.

W. & G., November 16, 1922: "Beet sugars continue unchanged at the 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash) seaboard basis both east and west of Chicago, but reports from the beet-growing sections are becoming more favorable, and it now looks as if the improved outturn recently looked for will not be obtained." New York cane granulated, 6.762 cents net cash.

W. & G., November 23, 1922: "We have had no new advices from the beet manufacturers, their quotation continuing to be maintained at 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash), seaboard basis, for territory east of Chicago to Buffalo, Pittsburgh, and west of Chicago to Rocky Mountains." New York cane granulated 6.86 cents net cash.

W. & G., November 29, 1922: "The beet-sugar situation has been somewhat irregular, the eastern beet manufacturers apparently being reluctant to advance, although on Monday they increased their price from 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash) to 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash) and later advanced their list basis to 7.15 cents (7 cents net cash), although their last advices to us are that the 7.15 cents (7 cents net cash) price is nominal and that they continue selling at 6.90 cents (6.762 cents) seaboard basis. The western manufacturers have also advanced their price to 7.15 cents (7 cents net cash), but it is somewhat doubtful whether they are firm at this price. Undoubtedly some sugars could be obtained from them at 7 cents (6.86 cents net cash) and probably at the price named by the western beet-sugar refiners." New York cane granulated 6.958 cents net cash.

W. & G., December 7, 1922: "Advices from eastern beet centers report a recession to the old price of 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash), seaboard basis, for favorable territory, although the list price was 25 points higher, and while the western beet manufacturers do not name anything below 7.10 cents (6.958 cents net cash), they undoubtedly are meeting the competition of the eastern manufacturers." New York granulated 6.958 cents net cash.

W. & G., December 14, 1922: "We have no important advices from the beet-growing sections, both eastern and western beets being quoted at 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash), seaboard basis." New York cane granulated 6.958 cents net cash.

W. & G., December 21, 1922: "Eastern beet manufacturers have reduced their quotation from 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash) to 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash) seaboard basis, but we have heard no advices from the western beet producers, whose quotation remains nominally 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash)." New York cane granulated 6.958 cents net cash.

W. & G., December 28, 1922: "Eastern beet sugars continue to be quoted at 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash), the same as previously reported from Michigan, but the western manufacturers, for territory west of Chicago to the Rocky Mountains, have advanced their price from 6.90 cents (6.762 cents net cash) to 6.80 cents (6.664 cents net cash), all beet quotations seaboard basis." New York cane granulated 6.86 cents net cash.

TARDY SALES OF 1922 BEET-SUGAR CROP.

The next paragraph of the letter is as follows:

"Ordinarily the domestic beet-sugar factories aim to dispose of two-thirds of their production between October 1 and January 1, as the prices then are generally higher than later when the Cuban and Porto Rican crops come on the market in large volume. But this year they have not disposed of one-quarter of their crop up to the 1st of January, and hence there is a carry over of domestic beet sugar into 1923 of 450,000 tons."

As with other statements of the refiners, the above is untrue. As shown by the monthly sugar reports of the Census Bureau, to January 1, 1923, there had been produced 683,603 tons of domestic beet sugar, and of the new crop there had been sold 258,111 tons, or 37.7 per cent and not less than 25 per cent, as stated by the refiners.

Their statement that "ordinarily" the beet sugar people aim to do this or do that is in error. The marketing of sugar, like that of all other staple crops, is a mere matter of merchandising coupled with financial ability. Some of the weaker companies are compelled to rush their sugars to market as soon as made, regardless of the prevailing price, while others are able to hold their product if they so elect. Or one guesses that the market is going up and markets leisurely, while another guesses that the market is going down and markets rapidly. All try to sell to best advantage, but for the following reasons domestic sugar always sells for a lower price than sugar made from foreign raw:

The normal beet sugar crop of the United States is sufficient to supply our requirements for less than three months Aside from California, the crop is made in three to four months—October to January—and finds our markets already supplied with imported cane sugar, the refiners of which are amply able to supply our total requirements the entire year So in order to induce the jobbers to break away temporarily from the refiners and handle the domestic product it is necessary for the domestic producers to offer their sugar at a lower price than cane, varying from 10 cents to as high as 40 cents per hundred, the size of the reduction depending upon the amount of competition among the beet people themselves As the domestic sugar comes on the market and is offered at a lower price than cane, the seaboard refiners gradually reduce their prices, first in the West, until finally when their margin of profit disappears they withdraw from the far West, then from Missouri River points, then Chicago, gradually retreating eastward until the flood of domestic sugar is absorbed, when they mark up the price and reenter the market.

In times gone by in an endeavor to crush the domestic beet sugar industry by forcing it to sell at a tremendous loss they have made their Missouri River price even lower than the price of raw sugar in New York, exhibiting a willingness to lose millions themselves if they but could ruin their competitor. But as such efforts proved futile, they now aim to withdraw when their profits reach the vanishing point, frequently closing down their refineries until the onrush of beet sugar is over.

BEET-SUGAR PRODUCERS WOULD NOT SELL PRODUCT EVEN AT HIGH PRICES.

The next statement of the refiners is as follows:

"They (the domestic beet-sugar producers) did not offer their product for sale freely at 7.25 cents per pound, seaboard basis, although the price during this period (September 22 to December 31) in the previous year, 1921, was 5.20 cents per pound, or 2.05 cents per pound less. Hence they displayed no philanthropy toward American consumers of sugar, as their Senate advocates and defenders have attempted to lead the public believe."

The sentence above is as misleading as are those which precede and follow it. It conveys the idea that from September 22, 1922, to December 31, 1922, the beet-sugar producers could have secured 7¼ cents per pound, seaboard basis, for their sugar but declined to sell at that figure. No one knows better than do the refiners that the highest net cash New York price at which granulated sugar sold in 1922 was 6.958 cents and that under no possible circumstances could a pound of either domestic or imported sugar have been marketed above that basis. As beet always sells below cane, of course "they did not offer their product for sale freely at 7.25 cents per pound." As well say they did not offer it at 10 or 20 cents per pound. They stated a truth, but with the deliberate purpose of deceiving the reader. Below are Willett & Gray's quotations for cane and beet granulated for the period in question:

As to philanthropy, no one claims to be actuated by philanthropic motives in disposing of his product, be it sugar or potatoes. They all get what they can in the open market. It is a "bogy man" the refiners set up to knock down. I have heard or read every sugar speech which has beeen delivered in both Houses of Congress for the past 20 years and do not recollect that any advocate of the domestic industry has been so foolish as to attribute philanthropic sentiments to the domestic manufacturers in the sale of their product. It is a clumsy attempt to ridicule the intelligence of Members of the Senate who are patriotic enough to defend the domestic industry and try and save it and the people from the machinations of refining and Cuban enemies.

The saving to the American people by reason of having established a domestic sugar industry comes not from philanthropy but because of the competitive conditions which Congress has established through levying such import duty as enables the domestic sugar industry to live and by competition prevent the refiners and other American producers of sugar in Cuba from practicing extortion.

Philanthropy does not enter into the equation. It is purely a matter of national policy. And speaking of national policy; as I already have stated, either Cuba or the United States can produce our entire sugar supply. The question is, is it best for and safer for the American people to import our sugar from Cuba or produce it at home. We recently have passed through an illuminating experience which furnishes good ground on which to base logical conclusions. If we admit that domestic producers if given a chance would be as grasping as the producers of sugar in Cuba have proven themselves to be, we must not overlook the fact that our antitrust laws forbid domestic producers forming pools, combinations and selling agreements by which extortion might be practiced and that these laws can not reach the producer of sugar in Cuba.

All through the war, the United States Government by agreement with domestic sugar producers, fixed the maximum price at which their product could be sold, the price ranging from 7½ cents for the 1917 to 9 cents for the 1918 crops. To prevent excessive extortion on the part of producers of sugar in Cuba, the United States Government purchased the entire Cuban 1917–18 crop at more than double the price per pound they received for their 1914 crop. The following year we purchased their crop at an advance of 170 per cent above the price they received in 1914. The next year they offered us their crop at a price representing an increase of 220 per cent above what they received in the open market for their 1914 crop and we declined to purchase.

What would have happened to us had we not purchased their 1917 and 1918 crops at a fixed price, and what would happen to us at any time in the future should a sugar shortage confront us, can be judged by what these worthy philanthropists tried to put over on us in 1920, following our decline to purchase their 1919 crop. Because of the sugar shortage in June, 1920, refined granulated sugar sold in New York at 9.9 to 13.72 cents per pound. Cuban warehouses were bulging with between 600,000 and 700,000 tons of raw sugar and our sugar bins were empty. These philanthropic American producers of sugar in Cuba, who had fattened on the high prices we had paid them for their last two crops, thought they saw a chance to get any figure they might fix for their warehoused 600,000 tons of sugar. So, taking advantage of our apparent helplessness and dependency upon them, they met in Habana on June 30, 1920, and formed a pool, under the terms of which they agreed not to sell us a pound of raw sugar at less than 24 cents, or about twice the price that granulated then was selling for in New York.

By scouring the world for sugar and bringing in a little from each of 50 different countries, we managed to secure some 974,000 tons at an average price of about 15 cents per pound and so broke the pool, but at what a cost to the American people! Cuba bled us for $669,000,000 for our 1920 purchases of sugar, and altogether our sugar imports in that year cost us the enormous sum of $970,767,339, a sum sufficient to erect and completely equip five hundred and forty 1,000-ton beet-sugar plants with an annual producing capacity of five and one-half million tons of sugar, requiring 48,000,000 tons of beets, which at $6 per ton would yield American farmers $288,000,000 a year. Yet the refiners who own the bulk of the sugar industry of Cuba would have us abandon the home industry and leave the American people to their tender mercies.

ECONOMICALLY ABSURD—STATEMENT OF SENATOR SMOOT.

They say:

"The above developments are the practical answers to the claims that the tariff does not increase the prices, and that the influences of the tariff-favored domestic beet and Louisiana cane-sugar production always brings about a decline in prices. You will recall the graphic set of statistics that Senator SMOOT exhibited in the Senate Chamber during his speech on August 7, 1922, attempting to show that whenever the tariff on sugar was increased the price of sugar declined, and whenever the tariff on sugar was reduced the price of sugar advanced. These statements were furnished him by Truman G. Palmer, secretary and treasurer of the United States Sugar Manufacturers' Association—the beet-sugar lobby at Washington—and were economically absurd. If, as a matter of fact, the price of sugar increased when the tariff was reduced, Senator SMOOT and other high-tariff advocates should have fought for free instead of an increase in the tariff. This is the inevitable logic of such a position."

The refiners again do not state the truth. It is simply another misstatement made in an endeavor to make me appear ridiculous and illogical. The statement made, based on the statistics in question, was that whenever the United States duty was increased on sugar, the New York in-bond price of raw sugar declined, and whenever the duty was lowered, the New York in-bond price of raw sugar advanced. As regards the price of refined sugar, the figures, as printed in my speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 7, 1922 (p. 11012), plainly showed that there was an increose in the New York wholesale price of refined when the duty was inceased, and that when the duty was reduced there was a reduction in the price of refined, but that only a portion of the difference in the rate of duty was reflected in the price of refined.

The whole point of my argument was that the foreign producer absorbed the larger portion of the increase in duty and appropriated the larger portion of the reductions in duty. The figures showed that when the duty was reduced by the Wilson bill, the importers and refiners appropriated 76.3 per cent of the reduction; that when the duty was increased by the Dingley bill the importers and refiners absorbed 58.3 per cent of the increased duty; that when it was reduced by the Cuban reciprocity treaty the importers and refiners appropriated 61.4 per cent of the reduction, and that when it again was reduced by the Underwood bill the refiners and importers appropriated 54 per cent of the reduction.

In other words, on three occasions, when we have lowered the duty, the refiners have stolen 76.3 per cent, 61.4 per cent, and 54 per cent of the benefits which were intended should go to the people, and on the one occasion, when you increased the duty, the refiners and importers paid 58.3 per cent of the increase through lowering the in-bond price of raw sugar and lowering the refiners' margin between raw and refined.

PRICE OF SUGAR DECLINES BECAUSE OF EARLY PRODUCTION IN CUBA.

The next paragraph of the refiner's letter is as follows:

"There was no relief from this advance until December 14, 1922, when duty-paid raw sugar declined to 5.67 cents per pound and New York refined to 7.10 cents per pound, which was entirely due to the influence of the new Cuban cane crop. The campaign in Cuba opened on November 27, in 1922, as compared with December 7, 1921, and twice as many sugar mills were in operation in 1922 as there were in 1921, as a result of which 300,000 tons of raw sugar were produced in Cuba up to the 1st of January, as compared with none in 1921, and 150,000 tons of this new crop reached the local markets and brought about a decline."

According to Willett & Gray, the New York price of 96° raw sugar on October 30, 1922, was 5.53 cents per pound. November 15 it reached 5.78 cents, and on December 14 it dropped back to 5.53 cents, this being the decline which the refiners would have your colleague believe was attributable to the early campaign in Cuba resulting in the production of 300,000 tons, of which 150,000 tons had been shipped and had "reached the local markets and brought about the decline" of December 14. This is still further from the truth than even the refiners usually get, especially where the falsity of their figures is so easily proven. Instead of Cuba having commenced grinding early and having produced 300,000 tons, of which 150,000 tons had "reached the local markets and brought about the decline" of December 14, Cuba on December 16 had made but 59,344 tons, of which only 18,202 tons had reached her shipping ports and only 4,571 tons had been loaded and shipped. Even this infinitesimal amount still was afloat and had not "reached the local markets and brought about the decline" of December 14. Please refer to Willett & Gray of December 21, page 622, where you will find the following table:

Cuban production—1922–23 crop.

		Tons.
All centrals to Dec. 16, 1922, partially estimated (less Cuban consumption to date)		59,344
Stock, 1922–23 crop sugars at shipping ports	13,631
Total exports, 1922–23 crop sugars	4,571
Total receipts at shipping ports, 1922–23 crop sugars		18,202
Stock 1922–23 crop sugars on plantations and in transit		41,142

That 4,571 tons of Cuban sugar "afloat" somewhere between New York and a Cuban port would drive the New York market down a quarter of a cent a pound is absurd, indeed, when one considers that our average consumption last year amounted to 15,616 tons a day for every day in the year, and this little dab of sugar would last us for a little less than 5 hours and 30 minutes. Even the entire amount of sugar on Cuba's docks at that time was less than a 24-hour supply for the United States. And if the production of such a small quantity of sugar in Cuba would so greatly affect the New York sugar market, why fail to mention Louisiana production? The New Orleans receipts of new crop Louisiana sugars on December 15 amounted to 65,885 tons, which is nearly five times as much sugar received at one United States port as had arrived at all the ports of Cuba. Of this Louisiana sugar, 58,419 tons had been sold, or more than twelve times the amount of sugar that had been shipped from Cuba on the same date.

As the refiners adroitly weave in another date, that of December 30, although the decline was on December 14, let us see if Cuba even then had produced 300,000 tons, of which 150,000 tons had "reached the local markets and brought about the decline" of December 14. By referring to Willet & Gray, December 30, Cuba had only produced 190,127 tons, of which only 77,778 tons had reached a shipping port, and that of this only 40,907 tons, or less than a three days' United States supply, had been shipped.

Cuban production, 1922–23 crop.

	Tons.	Tons.
All centrals to Dec. 30, 1922, partly estimated		190,127
Less Cuban consumption to date
		190,127
Stock 1922–23 sugars at shipping ports	36,871
Total exports 1922–23 crop sugars	40,907
Total receipts at shipping ports 1922–23 crop sugars		77,778
Stock 1922–23 crop sugars on plantations in transit to ports		112,349

Comment on the falsity of the refiners' statement and the absurdity of their contention would seem to be unnecessary.

If it were true that such a small amount of Cuban production caused the decline of December 14, how is it that on February 10, 1923, when Cuba had produced 1,035,259 tons of new-crop sugar, the New York in-bond price of sugar, as stated in press dispatches, had reached "the highest level in almost two years"? The refiners knew that the decline of December 14 was in no wise attributable to Cuban production.

PORTO RICO ALSO A CONTRIBUTORY CAUSE TO DECLINE IN THE PRICE OF SUGAR.

The refiners next set forth at considerable length the various downward fluctuations of raws on the New York market, and conclude the paragraph with:

"These further declines were due to the combined influences of the Cuban and Porto Rican receipts of new-crop sugars and the large carry over of domestic beet into 1923."

I already have alluded to the slim production of Cuban sugar prior to January 1. Now they attempt to give Porto Rico a part of the credit for the decline. Inasmuch as the monthly census reports on sugar received by the refineries show that our refiners received only 11,631 tons of Porto Rican sugar during the month of November and only 77 tons in December, Porto Rican sugar was not much of a factor in bringing about a decline. Why give Porto Rico's little 11,700 tons credit for bringing about the decline and withhold credit from Louisiana, which, according to the Census Bureau, during the same months—November and December—supplied the refiners with 92,549 tons of raw sugar? And how, in the same breath that they credit the decline to exaggerated production and sales of Cuban and Porto Rican sugars, can they credit it to "the large carry over of domestic beet into 1923"? I fail to get the logic of their reasoning.

SAN FRANCISCO PRICES ALWAYS 40 TO 50 POINTS ABOVE NEW YORK.

The next paragraph of the refiners' letter is as follows:

"The advances and declines referred to above were relatively the same throughout the country, as all sugars are sold upon the New York price plus the freight charge. The exception is the Pacific coast. The San Francisco prices of sugar are always as much as 40 points, and frequently as much as 50 points, above New York quotations, although all sugar entering the port of San Francisco is duty free and nearly all entering the port of New York is subject to duty. The Pacific coast sugar interests are in a position to exact this premium from consumers of their own refinery at Crockett, Calif., and refine all of their raw product there, and the balance of the Hawaiian raw-sugar production is controlled by John and Adolph Spreckels, who own the Western Sugar Co., located in San Francisco, and besides control one-half of the beet-sugar production of California. Owing to this kind of monopoly and prohibitive freight rates against Cuban cane refineries, they charge their consumers as much more as they feel they will submit to without protest, which averages about one-half cent per pound over the New York prices."

There are several misstatements of fact in the paragraph quoted above. The statement that "San Francisco prices of sugar are always as much as 40 points, and frequently as much as 50 points, above New York quotations, although all sugar entering the port of San Francisco is duty free and nearly all entering the port of New York is subject to duty" is untrue.

As stated above, for six years I gathered and published the weekly sugar quotations for a number of American cities, including New York and San Francisco. The yearly averages for these two cities, as published in Concerning Sugar, are as follows:

Year.	New York cane, granulated, per 100 pounds.	San Francisco cane per 100 pounds.	San Francisco beet per 100 pounds.	San Francisco cane compared with New York cane per 100 pounds.	San Francisco beet compared with New York cane per 100 pounds.
1913	$4.278	$4.645	$4.449	$0.367	$0.171
1914	4.683	4.933	4.737	.250	.054
1915	5.559	5.850	5.635	.291	.076
1916	6.862	7.061	6.865	.199	.003
1917	7.663	7.461	7.314	[1].202	[1].349
1918	7.834	7.777	7.754	[1].057	[1].080
Average	6.146	6.288	6.126	.141	.021

[1] Less than New York price of imported cane refined.

From the figures above it will be seen that only once in six years did the price of cane sugar in San Francisco average as much as 36.7 cents per hundred higher than the New York cane granulated price—and for the six-year period it averaged but 14.1 cents per hundred higher than the New York price. As to the San Francisco price of domestic beet sugar, it will be seen that in no year did it average more than 17.1 cents higher than the New York price of cane, that one year it averaged 34.9 cents under New York, that for three of the six years it was below New York, and that for the six-year period it averaged but 2.1 cents higher than the New York price of granulated, made from Cuban raws. So the statement that "The San Francisco prices of sugar are always as much as 40 points and frequently as much as 50 points above New York quotations" is without foundation in fact and the charge of extortion on the part of John and Adolph Spreckels falls to the ground.

Incidentally the refiners, while accusing the Spreckels with extortion as owners of the Western Sugar Refining Co., failed to mention the fact that an even 50 per cent of the stock of that company is and has been owned for years by the American Sugar Refining Co., the Sugar Trust, which thereby is and has been a full participant in any extortion practiced.

Furthermore, the refiners say the Spreckels "control one-half of the beet-sugar production of California and because of their monopoly they charge their customers as much as they feel they will submit to without protest, which averages about half a cent per pound over the New York prices." I have already shown that for six years they averaged to charge their customers 2.1 cents per hundred less than the New York refiners charged theirs and as for their controlling one half of the domestic beet output of California, they own and operate 2 of the 11 operating beet-sugar factories in that State with one-third the slicing capacity of the State.

BEET-SUGAR PRODUCERS SHARE NO PORTION OF TARIFF BENEFITS WITH BEET GROWERS.

They say:

"During the last two years the tariff protection to the domestic beet-sugar factories has been increased 76 per cent. Have they shared any of this increase with the beet-sugar farmers? A comparison of prices paid by them to farmers for sugar beets in 1919 and 1920, under a tariff rate of 1 cent per pound, with 1921, under a tariff rate of 1.60 cents per pound, and 1922, under a tariff rate of 1.76 cents per pound, will disclose."

And again:

"The beet factories have monopolized all of the tariff subsidy and shared none with the beet farmers. As a matter of fact, according to the statistics of the Department of Agriculuture, the United States average price paid beet farmers by beet factories during the whole period of the Underwood-Simmons bill, under a tariff rate of 1 cent per pound, 1914–1920, inclusive, was $8.2857 per ton, and the average price paid in 1921, under a tariff rate of 1.60 cents per pound, was $6.32 per ton, and in 1922, under a tariff rate of 1.76 per pound, was $5.65 per ton, or an average of $2.30 per ton less during the last two years."

A more misleading statement than the above scarcely could be made. In several long paragraphs which follow, the refiners express great concern for American farmers, whom they claim secure none of the advantages of protection to domestic sugar, all of which advantages they claim are appropriated by and inure solely to the benefit of the beet-sugar manufacturers. To one who knows, in no place in their letter is the cloven hoof of the refiners more apparent than in the argument they make to support this contention.

In an endeavor to substantiate their assertion they set forth the figures covering the price of beets for the four-year period 1919 to 1922. They do not allude to the fact that, due to the war, the price paid for beets in 1919 and 1920 was a hitherto unheard-of price—$11.74 and $11.63, respectively—nearly double the normal price, and for 1922 they take the "preliminary" payments—so stated distinctly by the Department of Agriculture in its mimeograph report—and give these as though they were all the farmers were to get. Then, to make it appear that the farmer does not participate in the benefits of the tariff on sugar, they compare the abnormally high prices the farmers received in consequence of the war, when the duty was lower, with the partial payments the farmers had received on their 1922 crop when the duty was higher, not taking or being able to take into account the additional millions of dollars which the farmers will receive when the 1922 crop of sugar shall have been sold and the factory managements are able to figure the sums which are due them.

To illustrate: The refiners give the average price of beets in 1922 as $5.50 per ton in Idaho and $5.08 in Utah. Referring to the January, 1922, issue of the Reclamation Record, issued by the Department of the Interior (p. 4), we find this paragraph:

"With this bonus growers will have received $6.25 per ton for their beets, with additional bonuses in prospect. Realizing that the bonus to the growers will be more than this amount, the company—Amalgamated Sugar Co.—declared this dividend to all the growers in Idaho and Utah, although a greater part of the sugar made from the beets is still unsold."

We know the 1922 tonnage of these two States was smaller than in 1921, but, as I have not the complete data covering it, will assume for the purpose of illustration that the tonnage was the same in both years. On this basis the refiners would have your colleagues believe that the total amount which has been or will be paid to Utah farmers for their 1,152,000 tons of beets is $5.08 per ton, or $5,852,160, and that all the farmers of Idaho will receive for their 380,000 tons of beets is $5.50 per ton, or $2,090,000, a total of $7,942,160 to the farmers of both States, whereas, as will be seen by the quotations above, they already have been paid $6.25 per ton, or $9,575,000, an excess of $1,632,840, and, as stated by the Reclamation Record, there are "additional bonuses in prospect." If the refiners' figures are as inaccurate for the balance of the States as they are for Utah, they have understated the payments to farmers by more than $9,000,000.

As for the future, the high prices which in the late winter of 1920–21 the factories contracted to pay for beets to be delivered in the fall of that year when sugar had dropped from 7 and 8 cents to 4.7 to 5 cents per pound all but ruined most of the domestic beet-sugar producers, and to prevent a recurrence of such a calamity still more of the new beet contracts are being based directly on the price of sugar, while in other cases the farmers receive a percentage of the factory's receipts from the sale of its sugar. So the beet grower is as vitally interested in the tariff and its effect on the price of sugar as is the manufacturer himself.

As a basis upon which to predicate reliable figures, the actual figures for normal years must be taken, and if this be done we find that the farmers have fared better with beets than with almost any other crop they produce.

The domestic beet-sugar industry was created through the enactment of the Dingley tariff bill in 1897, at which time we had but a half dozen struggling little factories. The Dingley bill levied a duty of 1.68½ cents a pound on 96-degree raw sugar and development of the industry commenced immediately. In 1899 we had 30 factories in operation and the United States Department of Agriculture collected and published figures covering the whole industry, including the average price paid to farmers for beets. Unfortunately the department failed to give these figures for 1920, else I would use an average, say, for a 5-year period. Also for a number of years prior to 1911 the figures are "estimated." The World War influenced prices from 1916 on, for which reason these figures are worthless as a basis of comparison. This leaves the 5-year period 1911–1915 which can be used with safety, and as 1899 was a normal crop year, I will compare it with this 5-year period (see E–3½ "Concerning Sugar").

The average price paid per ton of beets in 1899 was $4.39 and the average yield was 5.87 tons per acre. Thus the farmers' average return was $25.77 per acre of beets grown. In the 5-year period 1911–1915 the average price paid the farmer for beets was $5.63 per ton, an increase of 28.2 per cent in the price of beets, notwithstanding the fact that during the same period the price of sugar made from those beets had declined 15 per cent. But this is not the only increase secured by the farmers. As a direct result of the teaching given the farmers by highly trained and experienced agriculturists which are universally employed at heavy expense by the beet-sugar companies, they averaged to produce 10.50 tons of beets per acre during this 5-year period, an increase in tonnage of 78.8 per cent. Due to the increase in tonnage and the increase in the price per ton, the farmers' returns per acre rose from $25.77 in 1899 to an average of $59.12 during 1911–1915, an increase of 129.4 per cent on his return per acre.

Speaking of the influence of factory agricultural staffs in response to a Senate resolution the late Secretary of Agriculture Wilson told you (see S. Doc. No. 22, 61st Cong., 1st sess.):

"Every sugar factory management in this country must necessarily call to its aid a thoroughly scientific and practical agriculturist, and under him a corps of assistants equipped and conversant not only with cultivating sugar beets but familiar with methods of culture, fertilization, drainage, rotation, and all the necessary knowledge to produce successfully all kinds of crops indigenous to the particular locality. This agriculturist and his assistants are constantly traveling over the sugar-beet-producing district of this particular factory advising farmers particularly in the growth of sugar beets and generally in the production of all other crops. They are as much interested, incidentally, in the handling of the lands producing other crops as they are particularly the one in charge. It is these other lands that will produce sugar beets next year.

"A sugar-factory district is an 'extension course' in agriculture to every farmer in the district, whether he be growing sugar beets or not. It could not be conceived, with such influences constantly in operation, that the sugar industry is not exerting a potent influence most favorable in production of all crops."

As a direct result of this training and the introduction of sugar beets in the rotation, the farmers' average yields of all other crops grown in the rotation have increased as follows: Corn, 29.81 per cent; wheat, 49.87 per cent; oats, 50.49 per cent; barley, 56.88 per cent; and other crops in proportion. Inasmuch as the average farmer grows three to five times the acreage to these other crops that he does to beets, the money he receives from the sale of this excess amounts to more than it costs him to produce the beets.

With improved cultural methods, brought about by the advice given farmers by the factories' corps of skilled agriculturists, has come an improvement in both sugar content and purity of the beets, and this, together with improved factory equipment, has resulted in enabling the factories to extract 58 pounds more sugar to a ton of beets than they did in 1899. It is because of this that the factories have been enabled to pay a higher price per ton.

Compare, if you will, the increase of 129.4 per cent in cash yield per acre on beets with the increase for same period in the cash yield per acre from any other important crop the farmer grows and you will find no such phenomenal increase in the farmers' returns per acre. And this notwithstanding the fact that in such cases as wheat flour and corn meal, where, as with beets, the farmers' products are worked over by an intermediary before they reach the consumer, the consumer is paying higher and higher prices for these other finished products while paying lower and lower prices for sugar. From 1899 to 1913 the price of sugar declined 15 per cent, while the price of wheat flour increased 27 per cent and the price of corn meal 51 per cent.

BEET FACTORIES MISLEAD THE FARMER.

It is surprising how much the refiners would have your colleagues believe they know about the intricacies of the variable beet contracts made in 17 different States when compared with how little they have been shown to know, or rather, to state, concerning their own industry. It also is surprising to note the flood of crocodile tears which they shed over the beet farmers and American consumers in general. They say:

"The beet factories mislead the beet farmers by the form of contract they induced them to accept in 1921 and 1922. In general, it was a minimum of $5 per ton for beets averaging 15 per cent content of sugar, with an increase of $1 per ton for each 1 cent per pound that the factories averaged for the sale of its refined product for these years extending from October to October. The profit of the factory for each 1 cent per pound increase averaged about $2.70 per ton of beets, while they paid the farmer $1 of this amount, and the whole amount was extorted from the consumers by reason of this increase. The factories, therefore, do not stand to lose and the consumer is the victim, in any event, but as the prices of sugar happened to be quite low in 1921 and the greater part of 1922, the farmers did not benefit by this form of contract and actually raised their crops at a loss."

The refiners have experienced no little difficulty in deceiving your 96 Members, and to credit the beet-sugar producers with ability to deceive some eighty-five to ninety thousand American sugar-beet farmers of more than average intelligence is to credit them with a very superior ability indeed.

That American sugar-beet farmers, in common with domestic and foreign producers of sugar, were disappointed in their decreased returns brought about by the breaking of the 24-cent Cuban pool created by American producers of sugar in Cuba, goes without saying. The rapacity of these Cuban producers all but wrecked everyone in the world who had anything to do with sugar. Their confidence in their ability to bleed us might be likened to the Kaiser's confidence that he could whip the world.

They say:

"The profit of the factory for each 1 cent per pound increase averaged about $2.70 per ton of beets, while they paid the farmer $1 of this amount, and the whole amount was extorted from the consumers by reason of this increase."

The statement is worse than ridiculous. The average United States extraction of sugar from beets in 1921–22 was 275.2 pounds; thus an increase of 1 cent per pound in the price would amount to $2.75 on a ton of beets; and of this amount the refiners say $2.70 was "profit," $1 of which went to the farmers. On this basis it costs our beet factories only 5 cents to transport a ton of beets from farm to factory, unload them, run them through the factory, put the 275 pounds of resultant sugar in sacks, and transport it to destination. If the refiners have any technical man who can accomplish such results, he can name his own salary. To show the utter absurdity and maliciousness of the refiners' statement, the sacks alone cost about ten times that amount.

You can not fool the American farmer or compel him to grow beets if he chooses to devote his fields to other crops. In Cuba, where they harvest from 15 to as high as 50 crops from the same roots without replanting, cane is an agricultural juggernaut which crushes out all other forms of agriculture. You can not compel an American farmer to grow beets for his board and clothes, or retain an American laborer, if you give him only "grub checks," but in Cuba, where clothes are not needed, as anyone knows who has seen innumerable stark-naked children playing in the streets of the island, when the crash came and a moratorium for the island was proclaimed, press dispatches stated that mill owners announced that cash payments had ceased for the present and they would pay only in "store checks," thus saving themselves from bankruptcy and bringing about a speedy recovery, at the expense of the Cuban farmer and laborer.

HAWAIIAN SUGAR COMPANIES "CAPITALIZING THE TARIFF."

In an effort to discredit the sugar schedule of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill the refiners give a list of Hawaiian sugar companies and set forth with each the regular, special, or stock dividends which they allege have been paid since September 22, the date of the enactment of the new tariff bill.

They say: "The following special and increased dividends have been paid by various sugar companies in Hawaii since the passage of the tariff bill."

And after presenting their list they add: "Thus, through special dividends and the ingenious method of stock dividends, they are capitalizing the tariff."

Again the refiners would mislead my colleagues regarding those usually prosperous companies, nearly all of which made heavy losses in 1921. During the latter part of 1922 sugar prices were good, and, it appearing that prices were going to remain firm, several of these companies declared small dividends, paying them, not from current earnings, but from their surpluses and working capital; this is what the refiners designate as "capitalizing the tariff."

The annual reports of these Hawaiian sugar companies for 1921, as submitted to the Honolulu Stock and Bank Exchange, show how misleading are the refiners.

The refiners name the Ewa Plantation Co. as having paid several cash dividends during the last three months of 1922. Their annual report shows that they lost no less than $1,977,938 on their 1921 campaign. Unlike the subsidiary Cuban corporations, which the refiners own and which pay no taxes into our Treasury, when these Hawaiian companies make money they pay over a portion of it in income and excess-profits taxes. As indicating the decreased prosperity of this company, their December 31, 1920, annual report carried under assets, "reserve for taxes, $2,500,000," and in their December, 1921, report their "reserve for taxes" was only $500,000. Yet these people are represented as "capitalizing the tariff."

Another Hawaiian sugar company which is set forth by the refiners as "capitalizing the tariff" is the Maui Agricultural Co., which is listed by the refiners as having resumed dividends. I am advised by credible authority that this company has done nothing of the sort, but whether they have or not their annual statement shows their losses in 1921 amounted to $711,339.

I will not take up more time in analyzing these various companies which the refiners would have your colleagues believe are "capitalizing the tariff," but will set forth the list with 1921 losses, as shown by the annual reports to the Honolulu Stock and Bond Exchange:

Companies:	Losses in 1921.

Thus the scales fall from another of the refiners' many attempts to mislead your colleagues.

UNITED STATES BEET SUGAR COMPANIES CAPITALIZING THE TARIFF.

Apparently the refiners found but one newspaper notice regarding beet sugar companies which they could use in their effort to show that this industry was "capitalizing the tariff" and in their letter to your colleague, they reproduce it in full as follows:

[From Facts About Sugar, issue of December 30, 1922, page 542.]

WEST BAY CITY DIVIDENDS (BEET SUGAR).

"BAY CITY, MICH., December 25.—A stock dividend of 400 per cent has been declared by the West Bay City Sugar Co., increasing the authorized capitalization from $200,000 to $1,000,000.

"This is the first additional stock issue made since the company was organized 25 years ago, at which time a bond issue was put out to meet the cost of plant construction in excess of the $200,000 provided for. Since that time the bonds have been retired and several hundred thousand dollars have been spent in improvement, all coming out of earnings, while some large dividends have also been paid. The new stock issue is being made to transfer assets representing plant investment, and carried as surplus, to the stock account.

"The stock of the company is practically all held by the president, M. J. Bialy, and members of his family, the heirs of the late Charles J. Smith, and the heirs of the late John M. Kelton, all three of whom are among the original incorporators.

"This is another example of capitalizing the tariff."

Capitalizing the tariff indeed. Mr. M. J. Bialy, president of the West Bay City Sugar Co., has this to say about the matter:

"I have your letter of January 30, covering copy of letter from the Cuban interests, which I have noted with a great deal of interest particularly with its reference to the West Bay City Sugar Co. and as to the matter of the increase of capital stock referred to from newspaper publication, which is purely a matter of the reporter's imagination and short-sightedness as to actual conditions.

"This company was organized in 1899 with a capital stock of $200,000. Subsequent to the organization, we covered the plant by mortgage for $200,000 and in addition to this for further necessary capital the individual stockholders provided funds to carry on the affairs of the company, which we did and carried it along until 1910 before a dividend was paid, reserving all earnings for the purpose of creating surplus for business purposes."

So it seems that after putting up $200,000 for stock and $200,000 for bonds and additional amounts, say perhaps another $100,000 for carrying on the company's operations, the stockholders of this company received no dividends whatever for 11 years. Mr. Bialy says:

"During the year 1921 our returns to the customs department of the Government showed a loss of $239,000, and the present season, 1922, has been at a very small, if any, profit."

And now, after having received no returns for years on their half million-dollar investment and recently having met with tremendous losses, the stockholders of this company must be content with a stock dividend in lieu of cash; and the refiners, in their endeavor to prejudice your colleague against the domestic industry, quote the newspaper notice and proclaim that "this is another example of capitalizing the tariff."

In your speech of August 7 I gave the figures of four American beet-sugar companies which in 1921 lost over $13,500,000, and showed how they all were practically bankrupt and had to borrow $10,000,000 from the War Finance Corporation in order to tide them over. The four companies you named as having lost $13,500,000 were among the very largest and lowest-cost producing companies in the United States, and of course the losses of the smaller but higher-cost producing companies were much greater in proportion; yet the refiners would have your colleagues believe that the industry is a highly prosperous one and is "capitalizing the tariff."

REDUCE THE TARIFF TO ABOLISH CHILD LABOR IN THE BEET FIELDS.

In its efforts to prejudice your colleagues against a tariff rate which will preserve the domestic beet-sugar industry, the refiners quote an article from the American Child, published in New York, in which a fling is taken at child labor in the beet fields. They say:

[From the American Child, published by the National Child Labor Committee, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, issue of December, 1922.]

NOTES FROM OUR INVESTIGATIONS.

"In Utah we found that some rural schools were closed on account of beet-field needs. Think of it! In some rich beet-field districts through which the Denver & Rio Grande passed, that was the situation.

"Child labor conditions in Finney County (Kans.) beet-sugar districts are more deplorable than those in any other section of the State, according to Miss Alice K. McFarland, head of the welfare division of the industrial court.

"It is a common thing to see little tots with long sharp knives cutting tops from beets. In many cases they work from 6 o'clock in the morning until nearly dark with only a short stop for lunch." Topeka (Kans.) Capitol, October 26, 1922.

"Yet Senator SMOOT testified before the Senate Finance Committee that the opportunities offered by the beet-sugar industry of Utah to the child for work in the beet fields was a perfect godsend."

All rational human beings love children, but there is an honest difference of opinion regarding their bringing up. Some believe it is better for them to work in the open fields of the country, while others believe it better for them to idle away their vacation time in our crowded streets and alleys.

A year or so ago I had occasion to look into a lurid report made concerning child labor in Colorado, and I quote from a report which I received made under date of November 1, 1921:

"I do not know how serious these 'postural deformities and malpositions' may be. I do know that the beet workers' children in northern Colorado are about the healthiest specimens extant.

"Miss Mary Pritchard, Red Cross nurse for Weld County, Colo., gave figures which refuted the statements in the children's bureau survey. She declared that the Government investigators had their headquarters in her office, and that she was very familiar with their work in all its phases.

"Miss Pritchard states that she has examined over 12,000 children in Weld County, and has made comparative studies between beet workers and nonbeet workers, and that her positive knowledge of the situation does not justify in any way the conclusions arrived at in the survey made by the children's bureau agents.

"Miss Pritchard called attention to the failure of the Government agents to make comparative tests between beet workers and nonbeet workers. She declared that the Government agents have no basis for claiming that beet work per se is injurious to the children's health. The Government agents obtained no facts on the effect of malnutrition, heredity, condition of eyes, condition of teeth, and other factors that not only retard the health of the children but also retard their work in schools."

A small proportion of the work in beet fields is performed by children, but it is important not from the viewpoint of the sugar industry but from the viewpoint of the fathers and mothers of these children, especially the country children. Many of the best and most prosperous citizens of our western sugar-beet territory came there as poor immigrants, but with large families. They first rented small tracts of land, and largely because of the aid given by their children in thinning beets they accumulated money, then purchased small farms, and finally the largest and best farms in their respective communities, and later purchased other near-by farms for their grown children. Abolish the earning power of their children and their prosperity and consequent ability to educate those selfsame children would be lessened. People who live among them generally contend that it is to the advantage of the children, of their parents, and to the community at large that the children do this seasonal work, while theorists in our large eastern centers of population who concern themselves with the uplift of children are somewhat divided on the subject.

Their labor is not necessary to the well-being of the sugar industry, and it is not the sugar industry but their parents who are responsible for their working. I presume that if it ever should become apparent to the majority of the people of any of our States that working in the beet fields causes "postural deformities, malpositions," and other ailments which hysterical theorists rave over the voters will direct their State legislatures what to do in the premises. As yet the near-by and most interested observers do not seem to have imbibed any of the metropolitan hysteria on the subject.

UNITED STATES SUGAR ASSOCIATION BRIEF FOR THE AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING CO.

It, indeed, is too bad that some careless Baltimore newspaper reporter got his wires crossed and mixed up the American Sugar Refining Co. with a report regarding a 900 per cent stock dividend declared by an oil company. It is very thoughtful of the United States Sugar Association to place your colleague "in a position to correct it."

They say:

"The Indianapolis News stated that the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. had paid a stock dividend of 900 per cent, and a Baltimore paper referred to the American Sugar Refining Co. as having paid a stock divdend of 900 per cent. Both of these statements are erroneous. It was the Atlantic Refining Co., of Philadelphia, the largest producer of lubricating oils since 1874, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co., that declared a 900 per cent stock dividend in October, and these papers, observing the word 'refining,' jumped to the conclusion that the concern refined sugar instead of oil. There is no sugar refinery in the United States called the Atlantic Refining Co. The Pennsylvania Sugar Co., of Philadelphia, has declared no stock dividend and pays dividends at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, and the American Sugar Refining Co. has not only declared no stock dividend but has suspended dividends on its $45,000,000 worth of common stock for the past three years on account of the enormous losses sustained in 1920 and 1921. As the above impression may prevail among many Members of the Senate and House, I wish to place you in a position to correct it."

Apparently the United States Sugar Association carries a brief for the American Sugar Refining Co.—the Sugar Trust—which ought to be and probably is their heaviest financial supporter. This is only natural, as the Sugar Trust has three reasons for desiring a lower import duty on sugar while most of the refiners have only two. In considering these reasons it must be borne in mind that all domestic beet sugar is produced in its finished state ready for the table, and thus it pays no tribute to the seaboard refiners, whereas all imports from Cuba consist of raw sugar, and every ton of it yields tribute to one or the other of the seaboard refineries.

In the first place the Sugar Trust and other seaboard refiners do not wish to see the domestic beet-sugar industry expanded, because each additional ton of sugar produced at home means one less ton to be imported and pay tribute to a seaboard refinery for laundering. In this connection it should be borne in mind that a sugar refinery produces nothing—it is just a great laundry which cleanses a raw product produced by foreign labor in foreign lands, and as sugar comes wholly from the atmosphere, it is simply the rain, the wind, and the sunshine which sweep over foreign fields. From the sworn testimony of one of the leading New York refiners some years ago it was learned that for refining—laundering—a ton of raw sugar in America there accrued to American industry in labor, office help, bone black, and all other supplies just $6.72, whereas with beets then at $4.50 per ton, in producing a ton of sugar from American-grown beets, there accrued to American industry $82.13. The difference now is still greater, but even at this rate, on our last year's consumption of 5,700,000 tons of sugar, this difference to American industry as between refining imported sugar and producing our sugar from American fields, farmed by Americans and sliced in American factories operated by American labor, is the difference between $38,304,000 and $468,141,000.

In times of depression, when our farmers are getting a low price for their products and laboring men, mechanics, and technical men are seeking work, the expenditure of this extra $430,000,000 a year at home instead of sending it to foreign countries would help to keep the wolf away from the doors of a goodly number of people.

In the second place, the Sugar Trust has purchased a vast acreage of cane land in Cuba, where it has erected several of the largest raw-sugar mills in the world in order to supply its refineries with raw sugar at first cost. Its Cuban investments in great areas of both undeveloped and developed cane land and in mills is reputed to amount to $50,000,000.

In the third place, at a time when the elder Havemeyer thought he might be unable to carry through the Cuban reciprocity treaty and feared that the then rapidly developing domestic beet-sugar industry might expand so as to produce our sugar at home and thus put his refineries out of commission, he sent his emissaries into the beet districts, where they purchased a third interest for him and a third interest for the Sugar Trust in a number of our largest beet-sugar companies, with the purpose of controlling the sugar business of the United States whichever way the congressional cat might jump. With three exceptions these interests were disposed of after he secured the adoption of the Cuban reciprocity treaty; the outstanding exception is a beet-sugar company which operates a string of beet-sugar factories in northern Colorado and western Nebraska, where it produces sugar at less cost than it is produced for elsewhere in the United States.

It naturally might be supposed that if the officials of this company in which the trust owns a third and Mr. Havemeyer, jr., owns another third would, if free to act for the company's welfare, work in favor of an increased duty on sugar. But both the trust and Mr. Havemeyer, jr., are heavily interested in Cuba, and when it came to consideration of tariff rates last year officers of this company were among the most active workers lined up with the refiners not only in opposition to any increase but in favor of a decrease in the rate of duty. One explanation vouchsafed was the dog-in-the-manger position that if the tariff on sugar was increased it might result in new factories being erected in "their territory" by new capital and by competitive bidding raise the farmers' price of beets.

As to the United States Sugar Association's solicitude in not wanting it to appear that the Sugar Trust recently had paid a stock dividend, it might be stated that the late Henry O. Havemeyer took the bull by the horns at the outset and not only anticipated the Atlantic Refining Co. by several years but in amount. He formed the Sugar Trust by absorbing some 18 independent practically bankrupt refining companies whose total combined capital stock amounted to $6,690,000 par value and immediately issued $50,000,000 of new trust stock, or about 750 per cent increase at the outset. Later they increased it to $75,000,000 and then to $90,000,000, the present capitalization, although they have erected but two new refineries since the trust was formed.

During the first 10 years of the trusts' existence the owners of $6,690,000 worth of stock in 18 practically bankrupt refineries received no less than $68,281,250 in cash dividends, or at the rate of more than 100 per cent a year on their theretofore worthless stock which they turned into the trust. And although they since have watered it up to $90,000,000, except for one short interval they have annually paid $6,300,000 or more in dividends, or approximately 100 per cent a year on the original investment.

In the light of the above it scarcely seems worth while for the United States Sugar Association to shed tears over the deplorable fact that some careless newspaper reporter inadvertently got the Sugar Trust mixed up with his story about the Atlantic Refining Co.'s 900 per cent stock dividend payment. Having had this worrisome experience, it seems strange that the refiners in selecting a name under which to conceal their identity in carrying on their Cuban propaganda work should have adopted the name of a duly incorporated organization which for years has been openly working for the directly opposite result.

There is no better informed body of men concerning the universal financial chaos which existed in the sugar industry during the period of 1920 and 1921 than those engaged in the refining business, and yet in their letter they endeavor to make your colleagues believe that the domestic beet and Hawaiian sugar industries are most prosperous and are "capitalizing the tariff." The unfairness of their position is shown when they rush to the defense of the refiners with the following:

"The Pennsylvania Sugar Co., of Philadelphia, has declared no stock dividend and pays dividends at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, and the American Sugar Refining Co. has not only declared no stock dividend but has suspended dividends on its $45,000,000 worth of common stock for the past three years on account of the enormous losses sustained in 1920 and 1921."

Regarding the mix-up on the declaration of stock dividends, which some reporter erroneously attributed to the Sugar Trust when it should have been credited to an oil-refining company, the refiners hand the following naïve suggestion to my colleague:

"As the above impression may prevail among many Members of the Senate and House, wish to place you in a position to correct it."

As though they thought your colleague would dirty his hands by rushing to their rescue and explaining how this snow-white dove, which has pyramided $90,000,000 of capitalization on an original investment of $6,690,000, was being misrepresented. Their presumption is almost pathetic.

PER CAPITA COST OF THE TARIFF ON SUGAR.

Then comes the bewhiskered appeal to cupidity which the refiners wore threadbare in one of their publicity campaigns several years ago when they represented themselves as a "Committee of Wholesale Grocers," though, as afterwards disclosed, no wholesale grocer had anything to do with it.

They say:

"You will observe that our annual consumption now has reached 103.18 pounds per capita, and that the tariff on sugar, therefore, costs every man, woman, and child in the United States $1.82 per annum."

Again I suggest the headline "Important, if true." These figures are arrived at by a very simple calculation. If our per capita consumption is 103.18 pounds and the duty is 1.764 cents per pound, just multiply 103.18 by 1.764, and there you have it in a jiffy, $1.82. But this calculation fails to take several important matters into consideration. You showed in your speech (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 11058, Aug. 8, 1922) that when the sugar duty was increased the foreign producers of sugar and the American refiners absorbed 53.3 per cent of the increase in the lowered-in-bond price of raw sugar and the lessening of the refiners margin between raw and refined. Deducting 53.3 per cent from $1.82, we have left 85 cents per capita, which represents the maximum amount the duty of $1.764 per hundred costs the consumer who purchases 103.18 pounds of sugar. But the consumer does not purchase 103.18 pounds of sugar, as sugar. Much of our sugar goes into manufactured products, such as condensed milk, confectionery, jams, jellies, preserves, canned goods, chewing gum, and so forth, the prices of which are not governed or even affected by the price of their sugar content. Surely no one would contend that a pound box of candy which sells at 75 cents would sell for 74 cents if sugar were 1 cent cheaper, or at 76 cents if it were 1 cent higher, and so with dozens of other commodities which it is generally estimated absorb 55 to 65 per cent of all the sugar we consume.

The United States Department of Labor gathered the data from 11,900 families consisting of 58,310 persons, concerning the amount of foodstuffs they purchased and consumed during the last half of 1918 and the first half of 1919 (see Department Labor Review for May, 1922), during which time our total consumption of sugar in both manufactures and family purchases amounted to 79.39 pounds per annum per capita. The department found that these 58,310 people consumed an average of 146 pounds of sugar per family, or 29.79 pounds per person. Based on these figures, 62½ per cent of our total sugar consumption of 79.39 pounds per capita in 1918–19 went into other products, the prices of which were not affected by the price of their sugar content, and 37½ per cent of it was purchased by housewives as sugar. And so, after first cutting the refiners' alleged extra cost per capita by reason of the tariff from $1.82 to 85 cents by reason of a 53.3 per cent absorption of the duty by importers and refiners, we have to eliminate 62½ per cent of the 85 cents because of the sugar that went into manufactured products, and thus find that the total duty on sugar amounted to only 30 cents per capita.

We are all taxpayers and in our income and other Government taxes must provide such amount for the operation of the Government as is not collected from import duties. From January 1 to September 22, 1922, when the new tariff bill went into effect, we had collected $92,911,404 revenue on imports of sugar, and if the same ratio be maintained for the balance of the year the revenues from sugar imports in 1922 will amount to $117,926,000, or $1.07 per capita for a population of 110,000,000, thus saving each person in taxation more than three times the extra amount his sugar cost him by reason of the duty.

THE REFINERS' PLEA TO INDUCE A UNITED STATES SENATOR TO SPREAD THEIR MISSTATEMENTS.

The sinuous trail of insincerity and equivocation winds its slimy way through every sentence of the refiners' letter, and after splotching each page it closes as follows:

"Trusting the above will be found of value to you as an explanation of some of the effects of the present high tariff on sugar, and that you may find occasion to make use of it whenever the opportunity is presented, I beg to remain."

I have quoted almost every paragraph of this remarkable effusion, and if your colleagues can find in it any honest attempt at an explanation of the effects of "the present high tariff on sugar," their perception is superior to mine. So far as I am able to perceive, the only effect of it which is disclosed by their letter has been to cause them to sit about a round table and prepare as many misstatements as could be crowded onto seven pages of closely typewritten matter.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE UNITED STATES SUGAR ASSOCIATION.

First, a word in order to identify the United States Sugar Association, and thereby discover its motive in laying before my colleagues such a lengthy and unreliable epistle. The United States Sugar Association is composed of American sugar refiners and producers of raw sugar in Cuba, which island largely supplies their refineries with raw material.

This letter is a continuation of the same old Cuban propaganda put out anonymously 20 years ago by the Sugar Trust in its nation-wide propaganda to secure a reduction of duty on Cuban sugar by reciprocity treaty; later by the mythical so-called "Committee of Wholesale Grocers" (to which, as later was admitted under oath, no grocer ever contributed a cent), the "American Committee on Cuban Emergency," "American Producers of Sugar in Cuba," etc. There have been numerous changes in name but not in purpose, personnel, or in the utter disregard of truth displayed in their statements.

Masquerading under various names, these refining exploiters of Cuba have shown great ingenuity in their efforts to fool Congress and to fool the American people. Wherever it has suited their purpose the truth has been carefully avoided and their statements have been full of maliciousness. Scarcely a fair or honest sentence have they put forth in 20 years, and where they have not stated a positive untruth they have endeavored to accomplish their purpose by indirection and innuendo. This seven-page letter is no exception to their invariable rule; on the contrary, it is one of their numerous masterpieces.

THE UNITED STATES SUGAR ASSOCIATION.

Knowing the personnel of the United States Sugar Association and the object of their propaganda we are in better position to weigh the methods the refiners have adopted to secure their end.

The seven-page typewritten letter bears the printed heading "United States Sugar Association," yet every line of it reveals antagonism to sugar produced in the United States. The very name these seaboard refiners now masquerade under could have been chosen for but one purpose. In an endeavor to tear down an important domestic industry they have stolen the name of a widely known and duly incorporated organization which for many years has been actively engaged in trying to build up and expand that selfsame industry. There is but a slight difference between "United States Sugar Manufacturers Association" and "United States Sugar Association."

Were the headquarters of both organizations located in the same city there certainly would be confusion in the delivery of mail and telegrams, and, except to mislead, why does a body of men working against the interests of the United States endeavor to make it appear that they are a patriotic organization working in the interest of the United States? And why, even then, do they appropriate the name of a well-known domestic organization, working in the interest of American industry? Why call themselves the "United States" Sugar Association—why not "American," or "Federal," or "Domestic," or "National"; or if not endeavoring to deceive, why not "Cuban Sugar Association," or "United States Sugar Refiners Association," and be as open and aboveboard as is the "United States Sugar Manufacturers Association"? I leave you to surmise.

THE ELUSIVE REFINERS.

The letter is signed by one M. Doran as "assistant secretary" of the United States Sugar Association. Why the unknown "M. Doran"? Why not Mr. Henry A. Rubino, who appeared before your committee, is known to many Members of the Senate, and is the active head of the United States Sugar Association? Or why not some of the refining heads who so frequently are here to present their pleas and are personally known by you and by many of your colleagues? Apparently the seaboard refiners who with their associates own the bulk of the Cuban sugar industry and who created and support the United States Sugar Association realize full well the untruthfulness and unfairness of the contents of the letter, but after preparing it did not have the courage to attach their signatures to it, hence put it out over the signature of some one we never heard of before. Why camouflage their identity under a misleading name and then attach a signature which is about as illuminating as though they had signed it "John Doe"?

THE REFINERS AND THEIR CUBAN HOLDINGS.

These sugar refiners who now pose as the United States Sugar Association are rated as among the brightest and most astute to be found in any industry in our great metropolitan seaboard cities where their business lives have been devoted to the refining of imported sugar. They accumulated great fortunes in the refining business, and 20 years ago sought and secured legislation giving Cuba a preferential rate of duty, after which they began investing heavily in Cuban lands, on which they erected great numbers of the most efficient raw sugar mills in the world, and they produce the bulk of the Cuban crop of four and a half million tons.

According to their own statements, their vast Cuban holdings alone are valued at no less than $1,000,000,000. That these men understand the sugar business from A to Z and do not hand out such a mass of misinformation through inadvertence or ignorance goes without saying. Barring an occasional error, which is liable to creep into the statements of even the best informed, any one of them is perfectly capable of presenting almost offhand the true conditions which prevail in the sugar industry. And so, when a body of such experienced, well-informed sugar men prepare and send to United States Senators a seven-page closely type-written letter regarding sugar conditions, and practically every sentence and phrase of that letter is found to contain either an implied or actual misstatement of fact, there is only one conclusion which can be drawn.

SUGAR-PRODUCING POSSIBILITIES OF CUBA AND THE UNITED STATES.

The refiners rightly contend that Cuba is the cheapest sugar-producing country in the world, and if we so lower the duty as to render our domestic producers unable to pay such price for beets as will induce farmers to grow them Cuba will supply us with all the sugar we consume. We know this is true, for according to their testimony the refiners alone with their affiliated companies own sufficient cane land in Cuba to produce 8,188,000 tons of sugar a year, and, together with independent companies, American holdings in Cuba are sufficient to produce a crop of 10,970,000 tons annually. That Cuba could and would produce the sugar of the world if she could find markets for it is well known to all who have visited the island.

On the other hand, the late Secretary of Agriculture, Wilson, told us in Senate Document No. 22, Sixty-first Congress, first session, that the United States has sufficient beet-sugar area on which to produce the sugar of the world. Hence the conflict for possession of the greatest sugar market in the world, and the size of the United States import duty on sugar is the one determining factor that will decide the struggle.

PRODUCTS OF CUBA.

Cuba produces the best tobacco in the world, excellent coffee, cocoa, unexcelled tropical fruits, and many other articles which we import in enormous quantities from other countries, but the production of these articles does not readily lend itself to control by vast blocks of capital. They usually are produced by individuals rather than by corporations. With the exploitation of the Cuban sugar industry by American capital the production of all other crops has been relegated to the background, while the production of sugar has jumped from less than 350,000 tons at the close of the Spanish-American War to 2,500,000 tons the year before the World War and 4,400,000 tons in 1920–21, practically all of which must be exported and find a market in foreign countries.

MARKETS.

The object of all Cuban sugar propaganda is markets. Markets not only for their present production but for an increased production. One by one the great countries of the world have slipped off the shackles of the Tropics and have become independent of them for their sugar supply through producing it at home, Japan being the last to enter the list. Only Great Britain and the United States continue to purchase large quantities of tropical sugar, and the British market seems destined to be closed to the Tropics. The inability of Great Britain to secure from overseas her customary million and a half tons of sugar a year during the World War has convinced her free-trade statesmen of the desirability of the prime importance of a nation producing its sugar at home. As a consequence, Britain has decided to build up a great national sugar industry and is giving her two beet-sugar factories already in operation a tariff protection of 5½ cents per pound, the highest rate of sugar protection in the world. If Britain succeeds in her efforts, the United States will be the only great market in the world for export tropical sugar.

Last year we consumed 5,700,000 tons of sugar, or 28 per cent of all the sugar produced in the world. Of this amount 2,424,600 tons was produced at home and in our insular possessions, and 3,237,449 tons came from Cuba at a 20 per cent tariff preferential. The balance of the Cuban crop was compelled to find a market elsewhere and compete with other tropical sugar without any tariff favors.

Producers of sugar in Cuba see the possibility of a vanishing British market, due to home production. They see that should the United States beet-sugar industry grow and be able to supply United States consumption, Cuba must turn from sugar to the production of crops which do not lend themselves to corporate capital. Hence they first wish to see the United States duty on sugar so reduced as to prevent any further expansion of the domestic sugar industry, and if possible they want to see the duty so lowered as to ruin the domestic industry and thus open up to them an additional tariff-favored market for an extra two and one-half million tons of sugar. To gain such a vast market in which they could control prices at will, they will go to any length. The prices they would exact can be judged from our experience of a year and a half ago, when we were virtually out of sugar and producers in Cuba, with between 600,000 and 700,000 tons of raw sugar piled in their warehouses, formed a pool and pegged the price of raw sugar at 24 cents per pound, or twice the price at which refined sugar then was selling for in the United States. In consequence of the high prices, our foreign sugar bills in 1920 amounted to the enormous sum of $970,000,000.

If the United States tariff on sugar could be so reduced as to destroy our domestic sugar industry, the financial benefits which would accrue to the seaboard refiners and other Americans, whose Cuban investments already amount to over $1,000,000,000, would rival anything of the kind the world has ever seen. So much for the motive and the stakes for which the refiners have been playing for 20 years.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator if there is any advantage whatever to the producers of sugar, either in the United States or Cuba, by virtue of this big rise in price?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the refiners control the great bulk of sugar and they are trying to have a smoke screen made so they can blind the American people by saying that it is the tariff that is responsible for the increase. When they were selling that sugar at $4.75 a hundred the tariff was $1.60 a hundred, and under the McCumber law the tariff rate was increased 16 cents a hundred.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator have definite information as to what is the real cause of the big advance?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the time now, but I could go back into the history of the sales of sugar by these selfsame refiners and relate the history of it to the Senate, and Senators would then know what the cause is. They want to make all the money out of the Cuban sugar which they produce that it is possible for them to do. We know that there is enough sugar produced in the world to feed the world for the coming year.

Mr. BROOKHART. Are the producers a part of the combination that is raising the price? Are the producers in any way the cause of the price being raised at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. The Cuban producers are, but there are also the refiners.

Mr. BROOKHART. Who are the Cuban producers?

Mr. SMOOT. The refiners, principally, in New York and Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, perhaps at this point it would be well for me to give the names of the members of the United States Sugar Association, who they are, and let us see why this propaganda is being spread broadcast all over the United States. I have the list of the members of the United States Sugar Association. The following are a few, but I will insert the names of all of them:

E. Atkins & Co., by Frank C. Lowry, 111 Wall Street, New York. Who are they? The Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co.

The Atlantic Fruit Co., by Allen H. Richardson, vice president, 17 Battery Place, New York, of the National Sugar Refining Co.

Bernebe Sanchez Adan, of Cuba. Then follow a lot of Cuban names, all in nearly every case connected with refiners of sugar.

I ask permission to put in the RECORD the list of names.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want Senators to understand and the country to understand that this association is nothing more nor less than the sugar-refining companies that are putting out this propaganda, and they intend to destroy the sugar industry of the United States, if possible. When that is done, God help the American people as to the future prices they will pay for sugar in this country.

Some Senator just asked what is the wholesale price of sugar to-day. It is over 9 cents a pound. I want to say to Senators that the same identical sugar, made by the same sugar-refining companies and produced by the same sugar-refining companies, was sold recently in the United States for a little over 5 cents.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. What I want to say is that this is no new propaganda on the part of the sugar companies. Every year when American sugar is exhausted, which takes place some time in February or March, the people pay for Cuban sugar anywhere from 2 to 4 cents more than they had been paying for American sugar. There has been no exception to that rule for the last four or five years. It is the old, old story over and over again. I put in the RECORD last year a statement showing that it cost the American people something like $100,000,000 to eat Cuban sugar or foreign sugar for six months more than it did American sugar produced on American farms, beet sugar in the West, and cane sugar in the South.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. When the Senator knows that within 45 minutes we will adjourn, and there are a great many of our colleagues going out of public life and we desire to say something about them, does the Senator think it is fair for him to take the closing hour of the Congress in the defense of a proposition with reference to which a resolution was introduced by me some time ago providing for an investigation, which the Senator himself obstructed and blocked?

Mr. SMOOT. With reference to blocking the investigation, that was not what the resolution was for. If it had been a straight-out resolution of investigation nobody would have objected.

Mr. HARRISON. I should be glad to amend it in any way to meet the Senator's views.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator not limit his time so I may have five minutes to answer him?

Mr. SMOOT. If Senators will not interrupt me, I shall be through very quickly. I would have been through before this if it had not been for interruptions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have not interrupted the Senator. I think the Senator ought to limit the time so that an answer may be made to his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I have only a little more to say, and if the Senator will not interrupt me I shall be through very quickly.

I want to refer to one of the statements made, for all of the statements which appear in what I have had printed as a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

There was room on the seventh page of the refiners' letter for a further amplification of one of their many misstatements, and hence the following postscript:

"P. S.—Understand that several delegations of beet-sugar farmers have complained to the Tariff Commission and other sources at Washington about the treatment they have received from the beet-sugar factories. The burden of their complaint has been that they have been forced to raise their crops at a loss and that the beet factories have shared with them none of the benefits of the increase in tariff of 76 per cent."

Diligent inquiry fails to develop the fact that any beet growers have lodged complaints of the nature mentioned, excepting only growers in the section where the beet-sugar company, in which the Sugar Trust is so heavily interested, operates a chain of factories to the exclusion of independents.

Incidentally, "M. Doran" for the refiners overlooked the fact that it was this untrustworthy United States Sugar Association which almost before the ink was dry on the new tariff bill filed with the Tariff Commission a formal application with a view to having the tariff reduced on sugar.

Only those familiar with the sugar business can comprehend the extent of the malignity displayed in this letter toward a struggling home industry the members of which are trying to emerge from a universal condition bordering upon bankruptcy because they kept faith with 80,000 American farmers, and without a question paid them their high contract price for beets, regardless of the fact that due to the acts of these American Cuban interests the price of sugar had gone to smash. Quite a contrast to the "grub" store-check plan some of the mill owners were reported to have adopted in Cuba.

I remember that when the head of this United States Sugar Association, Mr. Henry Rubino, of New York City, appeared before the Finance Committee he had the effrontery to assume that Americans who had invested money in the sugar industry in Cuba were as much entitled to protection by the United States as were other Americans who have invested their money in our domestic sugar industry. In fact, he went even further by assuming that because, according to his figures, we had only $545,000,000 invested in the domestic sugar industry and these American exploiters had over a billion dollars invested in the sugar industry of Cuba they and not the investors in the home industry were entitled to first consideration.

Mr. Horatio S. Rubens, also of New York City, who posed here as representing "the Committee on Cuban Emergency," but who is chairman of the board of the Cuba company which built and operates the railroad running from Santa Clara to Santiago on the south and Antilla on the north, and owns and operates several of the largest and lowest cost-producting sugar mills on the island, also expressed the same views. He said:

"There are millions of dollars invested in American enterprises there (Cuba) that seem to me to have the same right to protection. There is $1,000,000,000 of it as against $175,000,000, at the outside, in the beet industry. The question is whether this is going to be legislation for the greatest good for the greatest number of American citizens, not only for those stockholders who have interests in Cuba to the extent of a billion dollars but for those merchants and laborers who are manufacturing articles for export commerce to Cuba."

The Senators may remember the analysis of Mr. Rubino's tabulation given in my speech of August 7, which showed that of the 85 mammoth American-owned mills in Cuba 49 are either owned outright by seven groups of American refiners or by companies which are affiliated with them, and that these mills have a capacity of 2,331,023 tons of sugar a year, or 53 per cent of the total Cuban output in 1920–21, their banner year up to that time. It also developed in Mr. Rubino's testimony that these refining interests owned enough cane area in Cuba—nearly three and one-half million acres—to produce, when planted, over 8,000,000 tons of sugar a year. The Cuban output has increased over a million and three-quarter tons during the past 10 years. If they keep on expanding, where are they going to find a market for this plethora of sugar? Excepting the United States and Great Britain, all the great nations in the Temperate Zone have shaken the tropical sugar shackles from their feet and by the aid of protection are producing their sugar at home. Japan is the latest nation to attain this enviable position. She started in 20 years ago with a well formulated plan, which included a protective duty, the setting aside of large tracts of land, the guaranteeing of 6 per cent interest on the investment, the furnishing of free fertilizers, the purchase and loaning of sugar machinery, and so forth, and her policy never wavered until she had accomplished her object. Quite a contrast to the vacillating policy the seaboard refiners have induced our Government to follow.

Since I came to the Senate 20 years ago, I have seen the sugar crop of my own State grow from 20,000 to 162,000 tons, or over 800 per cent, and I have seen the beet-sugar crop of the United States grow from 86,000 to a million tons, or an increase of over 1,160 per cent. This only has been made possible by the beet people keeping some one here who was alert and able to analyze the reams of misleading, lieing statements with which the refiners have almost constantly flooded Members of both Senate and House, and thus, by exposing their misstatements, enabling us successfully to controvert them. As I say, I have seen the industry grow to over a million tons, but against what odds has this increase been brought about? Twenty-one years ago, when the industry started to boom, it enjoyed a tariff rate of 1.68½ cents per pound. A few years later the refiners, scared at the erection of so many beet-sugar factories, succeeded in bringing about Cuban reciprocity which reduced the duty to 1.34 cents per pound. Later on they made another onrush and succeeded in bringing it down to 1 cent per pound and providing for automatic free sugar 2½ years later. But the World War intervened, we needed the revenue, and the free-sugar provision was repealed three days before it was to have gone into effect. But for our vacillating policy we undoubtedly would be producing our sugar at home to-day instead of having to send as much as $970,000,000 abroad in a single year for the purchase of raw sugar.

The refiners rightly contend that Cuba is the cheapest sugar-producing country in the world and, if we so lower the duty as to render our domestic producers unable to pay such price for beets as will induce farmers to grow them, Cuba will supply us with all the sugar we consume. We know this is true. On the other hand, the late Secretary of Agriculture Wilson told us in Senate Document No. 22, Sixty-first Congress, first session, that the United States has sufficient beet-sugar area on which to produce the sugar of the world. American capital is anxious to expand the domestic sugar industry to the limit of our consumption. But as neither here nor elsewhere in the world can beet sugar be produced as cheaply as can cane sugar in Cuba, to expand or even to maintain the industry a reasonable rate of duty must be maintained, and the duty ought to be stabilized.

Beet-sugar factories are not built for a season. They cost from one and one-half to five million dollars to erect and are built for generations. Farmers are slow to take hold of a new crop. Even under favorable conditions several years usually elapse before a factory has enough beets to make a really profitable run, for which reason the new investor is greatly handicapped—a new factory experiencing several years of losses—while a near-by, older factory, where the farmers are familiar with beet culture may at the same time be making a fair profit.

Last year we consumed 5,700,000 tons of sugar, or 28 per cent of all the sugar produced in the world. Of this amount 2,424,600 tons was produced at home and in our insular possessions and 3,237,449 tons came from Cuba, at a 20 per cent tariff preferential. The balance of the Cuban crop was compelled to find a market elsewhere and compete with other tropical sugar without any tariff favors such as they enjoy on sales to the United States. Their other sugar goes largely to Great Britain and now the possibility of losing the British market only adds to the determination of the sugar exploiters of Cuba to crush our domestic industry and thus enlarge their United States market. The inability of Great Britain to secure from overseas her customary million and a half tons of sugar a year during the World War convinced her free-trade statesmen of the desirability, indeed of the prime necessity, of a nation producing its sugar at home. As a consequence Britain has decided to build up a great national beet-sugar industry and is giving her two beet-sugar factories already in operation a tariff protection of 5½ cents per pound, the highest rate of sugar protection in the world. If Britain succeeds in her efforts, the United States will be the only great market in the world for the export of tropical sugar.

Mr. President, make no mistake, it is not the Cuban planters who are behind this propaganda to destroy our domestic sugar industry. The real Cuban planters have as much reason to fear the American refining exploiters of Cuba as have our domestic sugar producers. Twenty years ago it was largely the Cubans themselves who operated the sugar industry of their island, but since the American refining interests went in there with their mammoth mills they have crushed out and bankrupted or absorbed most of the smaller native planters and of the island's present production of nearly four and one-half million tons only a small fraction is produced by Cubans, most of whom fear that they also will be crushed out sooner or later by their wealthy and powerful American low-cost production competitors.

And the Cuban people as a whole are no better off than they were before this great development of the Cuban sugar industry took place. In fact, they are far worse off. The small plantations, on which the natives formerly produced coffee and numerous other tropical products, which we import to the value of over $400,000,000 a year, have been absorbed by those great sugar plantations, and the formerly independent native is either growing cane for them or is working for them by the day—for cash when times are good, for "store checks" in times of depression.

Most of the vast sum of money which the sugar industry is supposed to scatter among the Cuban people never leaves New York. Most of it goes no farther than the Jersey hills, Long Island, Tarrytown, or Lenox, or the suburbs of Boston and Philadelphia, where reside most of the refining magnates. The native Cubans get only a few of the crumbs which fall from the refiners' groaning table.

When one considers the tremendous stake which the refiners are playing for it may not appear strange that people lacking in patriotism should stoop to such a low plane in their efforts to destroy an important industry of their own country. With Cuban holdings sufficient to produce 8,000,000 tons of sugar a year, give the refiners complete control of our markets, with power to fix at will the price 110,000,000 people must pay for their sugar, and their wealth in 10 years would eclipse anything ever dreamed of by a Rockefeller or Henry Ford.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, if I may do so without losing the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have requested the Senator from Mississippi to yield to me in order that I may reply very briefly to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. President, the speech which the Senator from Utah has just delivered has been brought about by reason of the claim which was advanced in a communication from the United States Sugar Association, which has been printed in the RECORD, that refined sugar advanced in wholesale price from 6¼ cents a pound to 9 cents a pound since the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law last September. The Senator from Utah does not dispute the fact that in five months refined sugar advanced in price 2¾ cents per pound; he does not dispute the fact that the price of sugar is higher in America to-day than it has been in 40 years, with the exception of five months during the peak of war prices in 1919 and the average price for 1920; he does not dispute the fact that the Fordney-McCumber law levied a tariff tax upon Cuban sugar amounting to almost 2 cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. The duty is $1.76 a hundred pounds.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The contention held by the writer of the communication and by members of the minority is that if the tariff of 2 cents per pound upon sugar were removed refined sugar would be selling in this country to-day for 7 cents per pound instead of 9 cents per pound. It is not often that tariff duties are so soon reflected in increasing prices, but sugar is such a necessity of life and such a commonly used food product that the tariff levied on the sugar that it is necessary to import to supply the demand is certain to at least advance the price of the domestic supply to the level of the cost of the raw product at the foreign source of production, plus the freight charges and the duty levied.

Mr. President, to deny that the tariff is responsible is a most inconsistent attitude for Senators to take now that prices have increased following the passage of a tariff act. What did you demand a tariff upon sugar for? Was it not to enable the home producer to increase his price to the level of the foreign cost, plus the amount of the tariff? What are the real facts about sugar? The price of 96 per cent raw sugars to-day is 5.62½ cents per pound, and the duty cost and freight is 1.78½ cents per pound, making the duty-paid price upon arrival in America 7.41 cents per pound. The price of refined sugar is 9 cents per pound, less 2 per cent, or net price of 8.82 cents per pound. Thus the refiners' margin is 1.41 cents per pound, to cover cost of refining, marketing, brokerage, and profit. It is evident that if the tariff was 1 cent instead of 1¾ cents per pound, sugar would be selling at about 8 cents per pound, and if raw sugar was admitted free refined sugar would be selling at about 7 cents per pound.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I can not yield to the Senator. He consumed three-quarters of an hour in discussing this question, and I am under obligations to the Senator from Mississippi for yielding to me.

The Senator from Utah in his argument has not disputed the fact that if the tariff were removed from sugar its price would be reduced. He has not and he can not dispute the fact that the levying of the tariff duty of 1.76 cents per pound increased the price of sugar by about 2 cents per pound. To deny it is to dispute the whole theory of protection to home industries.

Mr. SMOOT. I do dispute it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator answers the claim made by talking about the selfish motives and purposes of the writer of the letter submitted by the United States Sugar Association, but I am not going to take the time of the Senate at this late hour to answer an adverse criticism of sugar importers.

I wish to say, however, in reply to the Senator from Utah that not only sugar but practically every article which was given protection in the Fordney-McCumber tariff law has in the last five months reflected an increase in price. For instance, sweaters, blankets, woolen clothing, woolen underwear, all classes of woolen goods, have been very substantially increased in price, as have building materials of all kinds and cotton cloth; in fact, there is scarcely a single article on which the duty was increased in the Fordney-McCumber tariff law to which there has not already been reflected an increase in prices.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I can not yield. The Senator from Mississippi has yielded to me. I can not give away his time.

Mr. GOODING. I merely desire to say that most building materials are on the free list or have a very small duty imposed upon them, and that carpet wool is on the free list, and yet carpets are selling at a higher price than has ever been known in the history of this country.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, let me enumerate a few price increases which have occurred. I shall quote from a communication from the Fair Tariff League. Where can we determine what materials have increased in price except from those who deal in such materials? Where can we learn of the effect of the tariff in increasing the price of sugar except from the sugar corporations and the sugar dealers, wholesalers and retailers? Where can we learn about the effect of increased prices upon woolen goods except from clothiers, and about the effect on building materials except from those dealing in such materials? The division of building and housing of the Department of Commerce in a recent table shows that the cost of a 6-room house made of brick has advanced since the passage of the new tariff law 9 per cent; that the cost of a 6-room frame house has advanced 10 per cent, and the cost of a typical factory building has increased 15 per cent. The only articles that show practically no increase in price are such articles as brick and cement, which were kept on the free list.

I wish I had time to read this list and to show how in five months the cost of living to the American people has increased from 10 to 30 per cent on many of the necessities and essentials of life. The per cent of increase on sugar alone is about 45 per cent. Sugar is only one article the price of which has enormously advanced, but practically every single article upon which a duty has been levied has already reflected that duty in an increase in price, and it is expected that the increases will continue, because the law has been in operation for so short a time that the full effect of the tariff in increasing prices has not yet been reflected.

I have a communication before me from a leading clothing manufacturer of Baltimore, in which he confirms what has already been said by the clothing manufacturers of New York. He says:

> The great change (in prices) is in the domestic fabrics on both suitings and overcoatings. I should say the average increase is 15 to 20 per cent for the materials, so that affecting men's wearing apparel for the fall and winter season of 1923 a suit or overcoat which sold formerly for $30 retail will have to bring $35.

So on suits of clothes an increased price of $5 has already been reflected. This is not hearsay, but from a manufacturer who states how the increase is brought about.

But, Mr. President, I can not and will not longer take the time of the Senator from Mississippi. I ask permission that certain very important and enlightening communications which I have from the Fair Tariff League, from two clothiers, and two other communications showing the effect of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill in increasing prices may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is done I desire to say a word.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator does not want to yield, I shall object to the communications being printed in the RECORD. I do not care, of course, whether they are printed in the RECORD or not; but if they are to go in, I want them to go in with the very distinct understanding as to whom the communications are from. When that is made known I shall have no objection to the communications being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have no purpose to camouflage the authors of the communications.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will let me make a short statement, I shall not object.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. One communication is from the Fair Tariff League; another from M. Stein Co., of Baltimore; another from William Goldman, of New York; and two other communications, one from the United States Sugar Association, and one from Spokane, Wash.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to show what the Fair Tariff League is. I want to say to the Senate that the Fair Tariff League is nothing more nor less than Mr. H. E. Miles; that is all there is to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I decline to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if I can not make the statement, I shall object to the communications going in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely do not wish to lose the floor. I will yield to the Senator if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say further to the Senator from Massachusetts that, coming from the source it does, I deny the statement as to woolen goods. I say that it is not true. I would not ask Senators to take my word for it, for I could prove it now if I had the time.

Mr. President, with that statement the communications may go into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communications will be printed in the RECORD.

The communications referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES SUGAR ASSOCIATION,
New York, March 3, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Observing that the Brookhart resolution to investigate the sugar situation has somewhat stirred up matters and that you were considerate enough to insert my communication, I thought I would add a few observations in anticipation of what Senator SMOOT might have to say.

The price of 96° raw sugar to-day is 5.62½ cents per pound, and the duty, cost, and freight to be added is 1.78½ cents per pound, making duty-paid price 7.41 cents per pound. The price of refined is 9 cents per pound less 2 per cent or net price of 8.82 cents per pound. Thus refiners margin is 1.41 cents per pound to cover cost of refining, marketing, brokerage, and profit, which does not display extortion on the part of refiners.

On the other hand, according to Weather, Crops, and Markets issue of December 23, 1922, the average price paid beet farmers by beet factories for a ton of beets containing 15.50 per cent of sugar from which 13.17 per cent of refined sugar, or 263.4 pounds, were extracted was $5.65. Thus the beet factories have secured their raw product at an average of 2.14 cents per pound and are now selling it on the basis of New York price of refined, 9 cents plus freight charge; in Colorado, Utah, Montana, Michigan, Nebraska, Wyoming, and other States, which ranges between 1 cent and 1.84 cents per pound more. They are therefore taking advantage of the rise on the cost of raw cane sugars to refiners to raise their prices though their raw product cost has been constant at 2.14 cents per pound. As the cost of beet factories to make refined, when they have secured their raw product at 2.14 cents per pound is no more than 1½ cents per pound, their total cost to produce is 3.64 cents per pound, leaving them a margin between cost and selling price of 5.36 cents per pound at 9 cents, 6.36 cents per pound at 10 cents, and 7.20 cents per pound at 10.84 cents per pound, in contrast to a cane refiners' margin of 1.41 cents per pound at present prices of 9 cents. Such prices mean 11 cents to 12 cents per pound retail in the Western States where beet sugar is produced in surplus quantities. Even if cane refiners were extorting abnormal profits, the beet factories are profiting to a greater extent as they follow all advances and sell upon the basis of the New York refined price, and their margin of profit is from 5 to 7 times that of cane refiners.

The tariff adds 2 cents to every pound and is responsible for 2 cents of the cost. If removed, sugar would now be selling at 7 cents instead of 9 cents. If reduced 1 cent, sugar would be selling at 8 cents instead of 9 cents, as it would cost refiners just so much less for their raw product, and they could afford to offer it just so much less.

I observe that Senator SMOOT returns to the old charge that refiners now control the raw production of Cuba and are themselves raising the price of the raw product. In his speech of August 7 last, Senator SMOOT attempted to show that a refining group controlled 2,331,035 tons of the Cuban production. This was answered by Mr. Rubino in his article "Sugar, the proposed high duty." The complete story, pages 20 to 27, wherein he shows that individuals who may be stockholders in refineries are interested in Cuban companies which produce 530,000 tons instead of 2,331,035 tons, and that the group charge of Truman G. Palmer and Senator SMOOT is absurd. As a matter of fact, a refiner's profits depend upon the low price at which he may obtain raw sugars; the more he pays the less his profits. So if he went extensively into the raw production he would be doing so at the expense of his refining business. One business would be operating against the other. For this reason neither Arbuckle, Federal, Penn, or Savannah refineries, as well as National, have any raw sugar interests whatever. It is a simple business proposition with them not to have a raw sugar interest compete with their refining interests.

Let Senator SMOOT explain how it was that sugar advanced from 6.25 to 9 cents per pound since the passage of the tariff bill, when he attempted to show that the price would decline; how the price of sugar went up during the very time that Louisiana and domestic came on the market, when he said that the price invariably declined during this period, and what benefit the farmer derives at a price of $5.65 per ton with sugar selling at 10 and 11 cents in 1923, when the farmer was getting $5.84 per ton in 1912 and $5.69 per ton in 1913 when average prices for refined were 5.04 and 4.278 cents, respectively, and why the factories do not share the benefits of tariff with the farmer when their profit from it on 263.4 pounds of sugar extracted from a ton of beets in 1922 at 2 cents per pound is $5.268 per ton in itself, and they pay the farmer but $5.65 per ton even when they sell their sugar at 10 cents per pound.

Thanking you for the consideration given my communication and trusting that the inclosed may serve to further embarrass any of the high tariff advocates who may attempt to defend their position on sugar tariff, I beg to remain,

UNITED STATES SUGAR ASSOCIATION.
By M. DORAN, Assistant Secretary.

NEW YORK, February 12, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I promised to write you a little later concerning the advances on other articles of wool manufacture and also concerning the opening prices on suitings, which were generally opened last week.

With regard to the latter, the fancy suitings opened by the American Woolen Co. reflected price advances ranging from 15 to 20 per cent over those of a year ago, and that about reflects the situation generally throughout the market on other lines. One worsted manufacturer making very fine suitings told me that if he marked his goods on the basis of the existing price of wool, they would have to be 25 cents a yard higher, a difference of perhaps 6 or 7 per cent. Practically all manufacturers have stated that they are not selling their goods on a basis of the existing wool market; that they are all figuring their wools on the basis of actual cost; and practically all of them provided stock to make their goods out of several months ago.

I have spoken to one of the largest manufacturers of woolen underwear. He tells me that on all-wool underwear the advance is 20 per cent; that the great bulk of the business, however, is done on part-woolen underwear, and the advances range from 10 per cent on this class of merchandise, depending upon the quantity of wool used.

With regard to hosiery, he tells me that the situation is somewhat confused on account of some dislocation in this industry due to the style factor and the competition with the silk-hosiery business, but he said that the situation would not be different than it is in underwear if the manufacturer had to go out and buy his wool and sell it on his usual percentage of mark up.

I have spoken to another very large manufacturer of sweaters. They specialize in the manufacture of a sweater coat that is sold all over the country in a very large way at $6 at retail. He says the price for the coming fall will be $7.50 at retail, and if he were to buy wool on the present market it would have to be higher.

Very truly yours,

WM. GOLDMAN.

M. STEIN & Co.,
Baltimore, Md., February 20, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to conversation we had on the train last week, and in compliance with your request for information as to increased prices on domestic and imported woolen and worsted fabrics, and what effect the increased price will have upon suits and overcoats, beg to say that notwithstanding that the duty on imported fabrics under the new tariff bill is much higher, there is only a change of about 20 per cent increase on imported woolens and worsteds when landed here.

The great change is in the domestic fabrics on both suitings and overcoatings. I should say the average increase is 15 per cent to 20 per cent for the material, so that, affecting men's wearing apparel for the fall and winter season of 1923, a suit or overcoat which sold, will say, for $30 retail will have to bring $35.

The $5 increase, for your information, I will say, is made up as follows:

The woolen or worsted fabric that would go into a $30 retail suit costing last year an average of $3 a yard will cost now 20 per cent more, or $3.60 a yard. This increase, together with a minimum of 20 per cent increase on trimmings that goes into a garment, will mean that the manufacturer will have to charge the retail merchant at least $3 more for the garment, and the retailer, of course, will ask about $5 more.

The same percentage of increase prevailing in the highest priced garments will mean that the manufacturers will have to ask $5 to $6 more of the retailer, who in turn will have to add $10 to the retail price over last year.

If there is anything additional that you would like to know, I will be glad to hear from you.

Yours very truly,

M. STEIN.

SPOKANE, WASH., January 29, 1923.

HON. SENATOR WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

I recently noted an article which appeared in the Associated Press dispatches, published in our little paper here, regarding what Senator SMOOT had to say about the highbrows objecting to the Republican Party's tariff of 31 cents per pound on wool, etc., not increasing the cost of a suit of clothes to any extent. His talk about only the highbrows objecting is all bunk, and his statement is misleading, inasmuch as he would figure out that my wool suit of clothes would cost me only $1.24 more. Senator SMOOT is trying to throw sand in the people's eyes for the benefit of the woolgrower. I am a Republican in politics, but I could never support a party which would place a tariff on wool, hides, etc., where a very, very few people are benefited at the expense of 110,000,000 American citizens. The $1.24 tariff on the 4 pounds of wool in my suit of clothes, at Spokane, works out about as follows:

Tariff on the 4 pounds of wool	$1.24
Plus the American Woolen Co.'s expenses and profit manufacturing and selling the cloth, 45 per cent	.56
	1.80
Plus the clothing manufacturers' cost, 40 per cent	.72
	2.52
Plus the wholesale clothing company's expenses, freight, profit, etc., 30 per cent	.76
	3.28
Plus the retailer's freight, expenses of selling, and profit, 60 per cent	1.97
	5.25

That is about the way it works out, and when I buy my suit of clothes here it has a cost of $5.25 to $6 more for the $1.24 tariff on the wool in my suit of clothes. Of course, we know it should not, but it does. In reality, we figure about $6 on each man's suit.

Respectfully,

J. COURTNEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 3, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Answering your inquiry as to changes in prices in recent months, and in particular since the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law September 22, 1922, I submit the following:

The Division of Building and Housing of the Department of Commerce, in a recent table, shows that a six-room house made of brick advanced 9 per cent in cost from July last to January last; a six-room frame house, 10 per cent; and a typical factory building 15 per cent.

A table recently prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Commerce shows that plate glass from 8 to 5 inches square advanced 10 per cent from August to December last. These pieces, it should be noted, are cut out of large broken pieces. Pieces 5 to 10 square feet advanced 22 per cent. Single A window glass advanced 9.6 per cent and single B 6 per cent. Lumber has advanced 9 per cent. Common brick and cement, which were left on the free list, advanced 2 per cent only, while the high-protected articles like glass advanced from 6 per cent to 22 per cent. Nails advanced 11 per cent; structural steel, 11 per cent; steel bars for reinforcing, 13 per cent. Since these December advances there have been further considerable advances in the metal market. It seems clear that the makers of heavy steel products will get all or most of the $351,000,000 per annum that our experts figured that the Fordney law permits them to add to their prices. The entire steel market is very firm and prices advancing to an alarming extent, in the judgment of manufacturers and others. The Fordney-McCumber tariff law raised the duty on files from 25 per cent to 44 per cent, an increase of 19 points. Prices were immediately increased 15 per cent, or three-fourths of the tariff increase.

The entire tariff increase was added to the price of aluminum almost immediately, one advance being 2 cents per pound and the next advance 3 cents. The price of domestic aluminum to-day is the English price plus the duty plus freight to New York on the competitive English product.

Lead increased 40 per cent; zinc, 8.3 per cent; antimony, 30 per cent; and aluminum, 27 per cent. These advances are from September 1 to January 4 last. Of the steel alloys used to make automobiles and other manufactured products lighter and stronger, prices have advanced greatly, some having doubled in price.

Knit underwear has increased 15 per cent. Clothing generally has increased 15 per cent. Some woolen goods are being offered at apparently old prices, but they are of cheaper quality, with more of cotton and shoddy in them.

Cotton cloths have advanced from 20 to 25 per cent; from one-fifth to one-fourth of this advance is due to increase in raw material, the rest principally due to the tariff. Indianhead cotton sheeting, a well-known brand, has advanced 22½ per cent. Some cheap sateens for women's wear and for men's sleeve linings have advanced about 50 per cent. Certain English cotton spinners have expressed satisfaction at our high rates, saying that they restrict her importations, which are only $10,000,000 per year, but they lessen our competition in other countries to which England exports $500,000,000 worth. Linens have advanced in this period 3 cents per yard; ordinary damask, 5 per cent; linen canvas, 5 cents per yard.

* * * * * * *

The Journal of Commerce of New York City in January last published a list of about 75 chemicals on which the duties were advanced in the Fordney law. All but one had added all or most of the increase in the duty to the price. Of another list of 13 drugs and chemicals, each had added all or most of the duty. Of another list of five chemicals that were put on the free list, the price had decreased on each.

Very truly yours,

FAIR TARIFF LEAGUE,
(Signed) H. E. MILES, Chairman.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let us have the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was perfectly willing to yield to the Senator from New York who I thought was going to report the resolution introduced day before yesterday by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] to investigate the increase in the price of sugar. I am willing now to yield to him, but a point of order would probably be made against me, and I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Secretary of Commerce has a large appropriation for this purpose and he intends to investigate the subject, and, therefore, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is perfectly appropriate——

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I want to proceed for just a few minutes. Does the Senator from New York want to ask a question?

Mr. CALDER. I have a resolution which I desire to report.

Mr. HARRISON. What resolution, may I ask?

Mr. CALDER. The sugar resolution. I am prepared to report that resolution if it is in order.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator refers to the resolution to investigate the sugar situation?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield for that purpose, unless I will thereby lose the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the regular order?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Wisconsin knows what is the regular order as well as I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know there is a regular system here to block this investigation of the sugar trust.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. He has not yielded to anyone.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent, if the Senator will yield, that the Senator from New York be permitted to report the resolution just referred to.

Mr. CURTIS. I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is perfectly appropriate that during the last 35 minutes of the Congress the distinguished Senator from Utah, who is known to stand for high-priced sugar to the consumers of the country, should have spent this time in a defense of the increase in the price of sugar, whether it came by virtue of a trust in Cuba or by virtue of a trust in this country. At the last Congress, when we had thoroughly discussed this whole sugar problem, after those of us on this side and some on the other side had joined hands to prevent the increased tariff rate on sugar going into the tariff bill, the Senator from Utah saw fit, during the last minutes of a dying Congress, to rise in his place and make an extensive speech defending the tariff on sugar. I pointed out night before last that in all probability during the last minutes of this Congress, when no one would have a chance to reply, he would follow the same policy. That prophesy has come true.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must know that I had no chance to speak earlier, on account of the filibuster that took place here yesterday afternoon and evening.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator had no chance because he and others were trying to put down our throats the ship subsidy bill——

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. When everybody knew for weeks that they had no chance to do it, and if they had stopped sooner we could have gone along in an orderly way, and many of the bills that have died on the calendar, which you promised your constituents to pass, could have been passed.

Mr. President, I am sorry that it has been necessary to say that even during the closing hours of a Congress, when everybody except a Republican Senator should feel good because Congress is at an end. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries must preserve order.

SENATOR JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say that personally I am very sorry that many of my colleagues on the other side will be here no more. Politically, of course, I am glad; but, Mr. President, I have risen to-day to speak very briefly of one gentleman whose departure from this body is universally regretted.

Few men ever entered this Chamber better prepared by education and training and natural ability to render great public service than did my distinguished colleague, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS. Possessing a towering intellect, a store of ready information that is inexhaustible, a sharpness, a quickness, and a richness in debate that is as attractive as it is effective, it was natural that during his 30 years of congressional life he should have risen to the leadership of his party in the House and a commanding position in this body.

His peculiarity of style, his grace and purity of diction, his clearness of imagery, his thorough understanding of economic and diplomatic problems, both national and international, enriched the debates of the Senate and the literature of our country. A picturesque and unique character, he will be greatly missed from this Chamber and the public life of the Nation. He voluntarily retired from public service. He could have remained here as long as he lived. There was not the slightest sign of opposition to him upon the political horizon when he announced his intention to retire. He goes back to his people, whom he loved and served so long and faithfully.

Mr. President, the heart of Mississippi to-day is heavy because of the retirement of her mightiest statesman. Not only Mississippi but the Nation, as well as civilization, needs him at this hour; but he has followed his own inclination, callous to tempting and highly remunerative offers, he chose to go back to his plantation in Yazoo, where he might live anew with his old friends, might play with his grandchildren, listen to the stories of trusted colored servants and field hands, and hear, as he has beautifully said, the chorus of his mocking birds, and pluck from his own garden, with his own hands, his own flowers, kissed by the southern dews.

I am sure I voice the sentiments of not only the people of Mississippi but those of every Member of this body and a large part of the country in expressing these few words of regret at his retirement and warmest good wishes for a long life and happiness.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 466) to provide an additional appropriation for the Federal Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year 1924, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $24,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, to provide payment for the following additional positions in the Federal Farm Loan Board: Two members at the rate of $10,000 each and two private secretaries at the rate of $2,000 each.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. If it leads to no discussion, I shall not object. It ought to be passed.

Mr. BURSUM. What is the proposition, Mr. President?

Mr. McLEAN. It provides the compensation for the two new members of the Federal Farm Loan Board agreed to by the action we took yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 473), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn unless the President has some further communication to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. ROBINSON as the committee on the part of the Senate under the resolution.

COMMISSION OF GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the provisions of Senate Resolution 469, creating the Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry, the Chair appoints the following Senators members of the commission: Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. ODDIE, Mr. GOODING, Mr. WALSH of Montana, and Mr. PITTMAN.

ADJUSTMENTS OF CONGRESSIONAL SALARIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to section 10 of the act (H. R. 14435) making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, the Chair appoints Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as members on the part of the Senate of the joint committee of Congress to investigate and report to Congress on the first day of the next regular session what adjustments, if any, should be made in the compensation of the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including joint committees and joint commissions, the office of the Architect of the Capitol, the legislative drafting service, and the Capitol police.

SENATOR CHARLES A. CULBERSON.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourns to-day my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], will retire from this body, after a service of 24 years. In point of sustained efficiency, industry, and effective statesmanship that service is notable in our country's annals.

Before coming to the Senate he had been governor and attorney general of Texas, and in these capacities had made so brilliant a record as to win, not only the devotion of the people of Texas, but the attention and the approval of the Nation.

Entering the United States Senate immediately upon the conclusion of his official career in Texas, he soon established himself in the front rank of this assembly. For almost a quarter of a century he has maintained that relation here—honored, beloved, his counsel valued, his judgment sought. He has been the official leader of his party on the floor, his period of command proving an asset and an inspiration to the fighting Democracy.

I need not review on this occasion his memorable labors for Texas and the Nation. His stainless conduct, his engaging personality, his fidelity to the public interest, his intellectual strength, his amazing grasp of detail, and his ability to reduce the most complicated problems to the crystal clearness of a simple formula, evidenced no less by his success at the bar than by his efforts in executive and legislative positions, exemplify what is best in American character and achievement. I have risen more especially to express the sadness I feel, and which I know the Senate feels, in witnessing his departure from this arena, on which he has reflected a luster in keeping with its brightest traditions.

THE TARIFF AND THE FARMER.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion between the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I have here an article which appeared in the American Farm Bureau Federation Weekly News Letter discussing the tariff in its relation to the farmers of the country. I ask permission that this article may be printed in the RECORD in eight-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the American Farm Bureau Federation Weekly News Letter of January 11, 1923.]

MORE COST THAN GAIN IN TARIFF—NET LOSS TO AGRICULTURE IS ESTIMATED AT $300,000,000.

This tariff study is submitted by the department of research as a final summary of conclusions on the tariff situation.

This study of the tariff was undertaken for the purpose of appraising the effect of a protective tariff on the income and expenditures of the farmers of the country, having special reference to the tariff of 1922. This involved two tasks—first, to determine to what extent farmers as producers are benefited by import duties on their own products through resultant increases in market prices; and second, to estimate the increased cost of commodities purchased by farmers, whether agricultural or industrial products, attributable to the existing tariff. In the foregoing articles of the series an analysis of the relation of each of the more important farm products to the tariff has been made; a general discussion of the effects of import duties on prices of the products of other industries has been presented. In the present article a summary of conclusions will be set forth and an estimate of tariff gains and costs based on a final scrutiny of the data at hand will be offered, which, it is believed, indicates reliably, though roughly, the net financial significance of the new tariff for the general farming community.

For the purpose of this presentation the tariff schedules may best be divided into two groups: Those relating to farm products and those relating to other commodities. In the first group, farmers generally are interested both as producers and as consumers; in the second group they are interested directly only as consumers.

AGRICULTURAL SCHEDULES INVOLVE BOTH GAINS AND LOSSES.

Taking up first the schedules relating to agricultural products, it is to be noted that certain of the duties carried will increase the value of products to the benefit of those farmers who produce the given product, and thereby increase the cost of living or of operation for other farmers purchasing that product in raw or manufactured state. On the whole, however, it is estimated that gains to producers will outweigh increases to farm consumers of farm products. The accompanying table presents the figures in detail for each group of commodities accorded protection in the present law.

The bases of these various estimates and a résumé of general conclusions regarding each line of product—derived chiefly from the foregoing special article of this series—follow:

Table showing estimated results of tariff on farm products.

THE WHEAT TARIFF.

As the United States is an exporter of wheat the general impression is that an import duty is useless as a means of increasing domestic prices. Little exception can be taken to this statement of the case as regards winter wheat. A complication arises, however, in the fact that hard spring wheat is at times imported as a premium grade from Canada for mill consumption in this country. An import duty is probably in some years of material benefit to American spring wheat growers. The facts regarding imports, exports, and consumption of this product are not available. The general situation which determines the price for it, however, seems to be this: Under conditions of free trade the price of spring, as well as winter, wheat is based on the Liverpool quotation; neither American nor Canadian spring crops can sell much above the price prevailing at Liverpool, given freedom of shipment across the border, though they may sell either above or below winter wheat, depending on the relative volume of spring and winter production. In the second place, production of spring wheat in the United States has been practically stationary for the past 20 years, which probably accounts for the fact that in three out of the last six years quite considerable quantities of Canadian wheat have been imported and ground—and presumably consumed in this country. Now, given such conditions, there will be a natural tendency for prices of American spring wheat to rise above the Liverpool base whenever the crop of that grain falls below the average or when the crop of winter wheat or of Canadian spring wheat is unusually large. That is, there will be in the United States a local relative shortage of spring wheat not existing in the world market, with consequent tendencies toward bulging prices. Free entry of Canadian grain levels down this tendency and the existence of a tariff barrier against that grain allows the domestic situation to secure its logical effect.

CROP OF 1921 AFFECTED.

There is evidence that the tariff did maintain the price of northern spring wheat above world levels in the season of 1921 and 1922, as it remained consistently above Canadian prices for Manitoba as well as above domestic prices for red winter. This year, with a very large crop of spring wheat, the effect of the duty is apparently slight or probably entirely nil. The determination of a definite figure to represent benefits to growers is largely guesswork owing to the complexity and obscurity of the factors involved. The amount here fixed upon, namely, $10,000,000 per year, can only be taken to indicate that the sum is small compared to the total value of output, taking the average of one year with another. The cost to consumers in the form of higher prices for flour and mill feed is placed at $12,000,000, allowance being made for the increased cost of imported wheat. Of this amount $3,000,000, or 25 per cent, is allocated to farmers as consumers.

OTHER CEREALS.

Import duties on corn, oats, rye, barley, and rice are of little significance. Growers of buckwheat probably benefit somewhat from the duty on Canadian grain brought in mainly for feed. The duty on corn may occasionally be a minor factor when conditions favor imports from Argentina, which is not the normal situation, as that country's surplus will usually find a better market in Europe; and the tariff on oats and barley will probably influence prices seasonally and locally along the Canadian border to a small degree. Gains to producers are estimated roughly at $1,000,000 per annum; cost to consumers, including increased cost of imported cereals, in which rice from the Orient figures most largely, at $1,500,000; and cost to farm consumers at $500,000.

SUGAR.

There can be no question that the duty on sugar increases the price of that commodity to about the extent of the duty on Cuban 96° centrifugals, which was fixed in conference at 1.7648 cents per pound. If it be assumed that the whole of this increase accrues to the growers, the addition to the value of their average production is $45,800,000 annually. There is, as pointed out in the article dealing with the sugar tariff, some question whether the manufacturers may not be able to retain some of this increment; but as there is no basis for estimating any definite proportion going to manufacturers, the whole amount is allocated to growers' gains. The cost to consumers, based on 1921 consumption figures, is $192,400,000, of which burden it is estimated that farmers as a group bear 25 per cent, making the increased cost of sweets consumed on the farm $48,100,000. In these latter estimates it is assumed that only the amount of the Cuban duty is passed on to the consumer. As a matter of fact, the full rate of duty, which is 25 per cent higher than the Cuban preferential rate, applies to imports of refined sugar, as none is imported in the refined state from Cuba. Imports of refined sugar are usually negligible, and this excess protection accorded the manufacturer is here ignored, as its benefit can only be secured through price-fixing agreements, as to the existence of which nothing is here affirmed.

DAIRY AND POULTRY PRODUCTS.

The duties on this group of products are of slight importance to agriculture. The rates on milk and cream will probably influence materially prices received in the Boston territory. The duty on dried and frozen eggs will affect egg prices in New York, especially in the early spring months and on the grades known as breaking stock. The cheese duty will increase the prices of European types, but this will be of no particular significance to the farmer, as he produces very little of such cheeses. The estimate of a gain of $3,000,000 to producers is based on the receipts of milk and cream at Boston, and of eggs at New York during the first six months of the year. The $9,000,000 cost-to-consumer figure includes increased cost of the products just named as well as the cost of the duty on imported and domestic European cheese.

THE WOOL DUTY.

Roughly speaking, the duty of 31 cents per clean pound is added to the price of wool in our markets. This is equivalent to about 12.7 per grease pound on the average of domestic wools and means an increase of about $37,500,000 in growers' receipts, on the assumption that the farm price will be increased in the same amount as the market price. Further assuming that the exact equivalent of the duty is shifted onto the final consumer—which is probably more or less than the truth, according to market conditions—the cost to consumers is placed at $91,000,000; that is, 31 cents per pound on the total consumption of scoured wool. The farmer probably consumes his per capita share of wool, and his increased clothing cost is accordingly figured at 30 per cent of the total cost, or $27,300,000.

LIVE STOCK AND MEATS.

Under present conditions import duties on animals and packing-house products can have very little influence on the markets. In the earlier study of the subject it was concluded that the duty on Canadian cattle would probably have some effect on the purely local fluctuations in feeder cattle at St. Paul and slaughter stuff at Buffalo. It has been rather arbitrarily assumed that the operation of the duties will stimulate prices to the extent of one-fourth to one-half a cent a pound in the two markets named and on the particular classes mentioned. From the statistics of feeder movement at St. Paul and slaughter at Buffalo the benefits to producers are computed to be about $1,500,000 and the increased cost to consumers $1,800,000. Consumers of meat locally in the Buffalo market will feel the effect of whatever price increases result there, while the Corn-Belt feeders will shoulder the burden of any increase in cost of feeder cattle at St. Paul. The latter item, therefore, $1,000,000, is charged as a cost to farm consumers.

TOBACCO.

The export and manufacturing types of tobacco, constituting the bulk of the crop, are not subject to tariff influences. Cigar leaf can be but slightly affected because the import cigar tobaccos are of a different quality and not truly competitive. Connecticut wrappers are probably increased substantially in price by the $2.10 duty on Sumatra leaf with which they come in competition. How much the increase may be there is no way of determining. As what is believed to be a reasonable guess, based on general considerations of rates of duty, production, and price quotations, the probable benefit to producers is placed at $10,000,000. As the duty on some 85,000,000 pounds of Cuban Sumatra and Turkish tobaccos imported annually is undoubtedly added to the selling price of cigars and cigarettes, the cost of the tobacco duty to the consumer is much higher than the gain to producers amounting, on the basis of duties assessed, to $53,000,000. Of this 10 per cent is assigned to farmers as consumers of cigars and cigarettes.

OILS AND OIL-BEARING MATERIALS.

Whatever might be the effect of a general tariff against vegetable oils, the law as actually passed can not materially benefit any farm producers save flaxseed growers. The flaxseed duty of 40 cents per bushel will no doubt be genuinely protective.

The effect on prices, however, will be somewhat less than the amount of the duty owing to the drawback privilege whereby crushers secure a refund of a portion of the duty on the exportation of linseed meal or cake made from imported grain. Comparative prices in the United States and Canada over a period of several years indicate that the differential in favor of the American market equals approximately four-fifths of the amount of the duty. This, under the new law, is 32 cents per bushel—as the nominal rate is 40 cents—which on an average production of 11,000,000 bushels gives us $3,500,000 as the apparent benefit to growers. Applying the same rate of increase on the linseed oil consumption of the country the indicated cost is roughly $9,000,000, of which 30 per cent is charged as a cost to farm consumers. It should, perhaps, be noted that while 32 cents per bushel or thereabouts is the effective rate as regards the influence on the flaxseed market, it may not be the effective rate of increase in linseed oil prices. This rate on the seed is equivalent to about 1.7 cents per pound on oil. The actual rate on imported oil is 3.3 cents per pound. If the crushers are able to take advantage of the latter rate, the cost of the duty to consumers will be obviously about twice as much as the above estimate.

MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCTS.

Among the minor farm products are several which will be more or less influenced by the tariff. These include lemons, raisins, almonds, walnuts, clover seed, onions, and hemp. Gross increases in producers' receipts are estimated at $12,500,000. In estimating increases in consumption costs imports not only of these products but of others not commercially produced in this country, such as dates, figs, pineapples, filberts, etc., must be taken into consideration. The figure is placed at $22,000,000, taking into consideration production, imports, and rates of duty. Cost to farm consumers is figured at $7,000,000, farmers being small purchasers of most of the commodities under consideration but the sole consumers of clover seed on which they must pay higher prices not only for domestic but for imported seed.

Considering the agricultural schedules as a whole, the estimated gains to producers is $124,800,000, and the cost to farmers as consumers $94,900,000, leaving a net gain to agriculture from the tariff on its own products of $29,700,000. The total of costs to consumers of farm products is $391,900,000. These figures, while admittedly rough, probably approximate the truth.

To estimate the effects of the tariff on the market prices of other commodities, as has been done for agricultural products, is far from a simple matter. It can not be carried out to an unlimited extent by the method which has been followed in the case of farm products; namely, by a detailed analysis of competitive conditions, prices, production, and consumption for all the individual products of all branches of an industry. To undertake such an investigation to determine the effects of the tariff in all industries—manufacturing, mining, and so forth—that operate in the United States would be far beyond the resources of this department; and no adequate inquiry of that character has been made by any agency thus far. Hence if any attempt to estimate in dollars and cents the cost of the tariff to the farmer as a consumer of the products of other industries be made, it must be by recourse to some other method.

QUESTION OF COST TO CONSUMERS.

Several estimates of the cost of the tariff to consumers have been put forth, from which the total cost to farmers might be derived by estimating his share in consumption of dutiable commodities. No particular basis for these estimates seems, however, to be discoverable and they are therefore ignored. The only basis that appears to be available for any reasonably safe estimate of the sort is the cost-to-consumer figure above presented for agricultural products. The cost of such commodities is increased by import duties to the extent of some $392,000,000 according to our estimates. This is a trifle over 2 per cent of the average total value of the output of the farms. It might be assumed that the cost of other products would be increased in like ratio, whereby the increased cost to consumers could be computed. Such an assumption, it is believed, would be a minimum.

The assumption is here made, and the cost is so computed. The average value of gross output of all industries other than agriculture is about $65,000,000,000; applying the ratio ascertained for farm products, the result is $1,323,000,000, which by this computation is the cost of the tariff on other than farm products to American consumers.

FARMERS' SHARE 25 PER CENT.

Now, as to the portion of this tax which falls upon the farmer consumer. In the estimates relating to agricultural products it will be noted that the share of the cost-to-consumers figure allocated to farm consumers is a little under 25 per cent of the total. The 25 per cent share seems reasonable on other grounds. The income of farmers is estimated by the National Bureau of Economic Research as 18 per cent of the national income. Their purchasing power would therefore be 18 per cent of that of the whole country; as purchasers of ordinary consumers' goods at retail, however, they would probably buy close to their per capita share, which is 30 per cent; for a much smaller portion of farm income is spent for railroads, factories, industrial materials, and equipment, in the form of corporate securities, than is true of business profits. Furthermore, consumers' goods, where the farmers' largest purchases lie, are probably more affected by the tariff than are producers' goods, most of which are either on the free list or not susceptible to tariff influences. Moreover, the item of house rent absorbs part of the city man's income.

The farmers' share in the cost of the tariff on other than farm products is therefore placed at 25 per cent of the total, or $331,000,000. Subtracting his net gain on the agricultural schedules, which amounts to $30,000,000, the remainder is $301,000,000, which represents the net cost of the tariff to agriculture. Combining the agricultural and nonagricultural schedules, the figures are, in tabular form, as follows:

Summary of benefits to farmers and minimum cost to consumers.

	Average value of output 1917–1921.	Tariff cost to consumers.	Cost to farm consumers.
Farm products	[1] $19,245,000,000	$392,000,000	$98,000,000
Products of all other industries	[2] 65,000,000,000	1,323,000,000	331,000,000
Total	84,245,000,000	1,715,000,000	426,000,000

[1] U. S. Department of Agriculture. [2] Partly estimated.

Gross cost to farmers	$426,000,000
Gains to farmers as producers	125,000,000
Net cost to agriculture	301,000,000

It is recognized that these figures are liable to a large degree of error. They are, however, based in part on a careful detailed analysis (that relating to farm products) and on a further assumption that seems reasonable as a minimum, namely, that industrial products are affected by the tariff to the same degree as are agricultural products. The chief weakness in the method is in deriving a ratio of cost of the tariff from value of total output, output being taken as roughly indicative of consumption. The figures of gross production contain a large amount of duplication both within the agricultural and industrial groups and between agriculture and industry. Production figures are therefore somewhat ambiguous; but the duplications will offset each other more or less, since they occur in both agricultural and industrial returns. That the estimate is likely to err below rather than above the truth is indicated by two further considerations. First, no allowance has been made in any of our estimates for possible "pyramiding" of duties between producer or importer and final consumer. It is most probably true that the original tariff increment to the price is, in many cases, increased as the goods pass through the channels of trade; this would naturally occur where commodities are handled on commission and, perhaps, to greater or less extent in the ordinary processes of manufacturing, wholesaling, and retailing. It has been estimated by some observers that the cost of import duties is "pyramided" to the extent of two or three fold. Such an assumption seems excessive, and there is no basis of actual measurement; the whole question has been ignored by this department in preparing estimates. In the second place, farm products enter into commerce relatively much less than industrial products.

If the ratio of tariff costs could be based on actual sales instead of gross production, the resulting figure for industrial products would undoubtedly be higher than the one above given.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate ought not to adjourn without at least giving consideration to bills which have been reported out for the relief of the defenders of the country.

Since this omnibus pension bill has been reported I am advised that three of the beneficiaries have died, so that the total number, which originally was 1,117, is now only 1,114. Of course, there may be those who will say that in the interest of economy we ought not to pass this legislation; that by the next Congress all of the 1,117 beneficiaries will have died and the Government will be that much ahead. These veterans and widows are dying at the rate of more than 4,000 a month. These omnibus bills seek to provide for the most needy, the most aged of the veterans who served during the Civil War in defense of their country, and the widows of those who have died. These veterans are poor; they are in needy circumstances; and it seems to me that it is a niggardly policy, it is an unappreciative policy, that will permit the defenders of the country who served us in time of peril to die penniless, or to depend on charity for their existence.

There is no class of people to whom the Nation is more indebted and more obligated than the veterans who served during the Civil War. Of course, the power of Senators by simply making an objection can avail to prevent action; yet yesterday we witnessed here a filibuster, lasting some eight hours, as a protest against the House of Representatives, because two or three leaders in the House, as was alleged, prevented action upon certain legislation which these distinguished Senators favored and thought ought to have a chance; yet here in the Senate, while only one objection has been raised against these bills, there is apparently no opportunity to have them considered.

Members of this body of both parties, representing at least three-fourths of the Senate, have said to me, "We are in favor of passing pension legislation, and especially the omnibus bill, and helping out these old veterans"; yet it has not been possible even to obtain a vote. What fine friends the old veteran has in the Senate, that he can not even get a vote on the consideration of a bill for his relief or for the relief of his widow!

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, even at this late hour, to take up and pass House bill 13980, the omnibus pension bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator asks that it be taken up, I have no objection.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask that it be taken up and considered.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator said that he wanted it passed.

Mr. BURSUM. I would expect it to pass. Of course, you never can tell what will happen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DIAL. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. BURSUM. I now move that we proceed to the consideration of House bill 13980.

Mr. DIAL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BURSUM. I demand a roll call.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from South Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to a resolution (H. STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this morning when I took up the RECORD my attention was called to some figures submitted by the senior Senator on the minority side of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. OVERMAN] respecting appropriations of 1923 and 1924, and also appropriations dating back to 1915. It is usual in long sessions for the Committee on Appropriations to present to the Senate and to have inserted in the RECORD a full showing of all direct appropriations.

I thank the Senator from New Mexico for yielding.

Mr. President, I ask to have the following tables inserted as a part of my remarks. Table 1 compares the appropriations of fiscal years 1923 and 1924. Table 2 compares the Budget estimates and appropriations, fiscal year 1924. Table 3 compares Budget estimates and appropriations, deficiency and supplemental, fiscal year 1923 and prior fiscal years. Table 4 is a recapitulation of comparisons of Budget estimates and appropriations, and Table 5 is a chronological history of regular annual and deficiency appropriation bills.

The following gratifying results are shown:

The total appropriations for fiscal year 1924 are $233,802,504.60 less than same for fiscal year 1923.

The Budget estimates for fiscal year 1924 have been reduced $7,825,118.07, and for 1923 and prior years the sum of $2,918,640.20; in all, $10,743,758.27.

The reduction of the total appropriations for 1924, as compared with 1923, in the sum of $233,802,504.60 is most welcome information for the taxpayers of this country. This result has been achieved by painstaking cooperation on the part of all concerned. In a letter of April 26, 1921, to President Harding I suggested that "the one thing leading most directly to desired results in economy is teamwork between the legislative and executive branches of the Government."

This satisfactory result could not have been accomplished without strenuous teamwork. The executive departments, the Budget Bureau, the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, the House of Representatives, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the Senate, and finally the President—all these have had their part, and all have given to their country their best efforts; hence a good result. It is pleasant to say that there has been no ill feeling or prejudice between any of the above-named. In the very nature of things there will be differences of opinion among men, but none so strong that reasoning, conciliation, and compromise can not overcome them as to national finances.

The reductions in supply bills for the fiscal year 1924 have been so made that no legitimate function of the Government will suffer. Notwithstanding the reductions made, there has been appropriated as follows: $1,295,097,000 for the interest on the public debt and public-debt redemption funds; $428,160,773 for the Veterans' Bureau to care for the needs of the veterans of the World War; $253,000,000 for Army and Navy pensions for soldiers of the Civil War and other wars; $70,532,060 for rivers and harbors, flood control, and Muscle Shoals improvement; $50,411,500 for the United States Shipping Board; and $34,050,000 for the construction of roads.

Criticism of deficiency appropriations made at this session is not warranted. The first, second, and third deficiency acts appropriated $233,492,526.37—largely the results of war. The greater portion of this sum went for purposes authorized by law and over which Congress had no discretion. For example, $121,105,000 for refunding taxes illegally collected; $25,000,000 for the cooperative construction of rural post roads; $20,950,000 for scrapping naval vessels; $16,000,000 for Army and Navy pensions on account of monthly payment of pensions; $13,235,000 for military and naval insurance, Veterans' Bureau; $5,842,483.08 for judgments, audited claims, court awards, and damage claims; and $2,595,793.87 to carry out new laws and treaties. The seven items above enumerated amount to $204,728,276.95. Deducting this sum, there remain deficiencies amounting to $28,764,249.42. Of this sum $12,108,013.58 was appropriated for the Postal Service and made payable out of postal revenues, and made necessary by the increased volume of business, and $6,500,000 for changes in range of turret guns of certain battleships permissible under the terms of the treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament. Deducting these two items, there remains but $10,156,235.84 for real deficiencies, which is comparatively a very small amount.

A glance at Table 5, the chronological history of regular annual and deficiency appropriation bills, shows the appropriations have never been handled so early nor in such a systematic and expeditious manner. The Budget law has demonstrated its worth. It helps separate the chaff from the grain. It gives accuracy, as well as integrity, to estimates, which results in less work on the part of Congress. Under the old system congressional committees were obliged to spend a great amount of time on extravagant and questionable estimates. In fact, meritorious estimates are never the cause of great contention. Now, that estimates mean something, the work of all is accelerated.

[a] This sum is $7,500,000 more than the amount stated in the Budget. The difference arises under the Reclamation Service. The Budget does not include in the 1924 totals the amount for that service estimated to be funded from repayments to the reclamation fund ($7,500,000). As previous estimates and appropriations are computed on the basis of including such funding from repayments, it is confusing not to add that sum to the total for 1924, otherwise the Reclamation Service will show apparent reductions for 1924 under 1923 and prior years that are not actual.

MARCH 14, 1923.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, we now have just eight minutes, according to the clock. I hope there is no Member of this body with soul so dead, and who is possessed of such a cruel heart, that he will be willing to engage in a filibuster for the remaining eight minutes in order to prevent the veterans of the Civil War and their widows from obtaining the relief which would be accorded them under this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am glad the distinguished and able Senator from Wyoming admits that the figures I have put in the RECORD are correct. I ask each Senator to examine those figures, which he will find in the RECORD, giving the figures which have been certified as correct. I want to say that the clerks did not prepare them; I prepared them myself and sent them to the clerks to verify, and they have been verified. They extend back to three years before the war and three years since the war, and, deducting all those appropriations which have grown out of the war, this Congress has spent $512,000,000 more than we spent in 1915.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator did not state, and, of course, it was not his purpose to state, the fact that the income has also increased. For instance, the Senator has referred to the expenditure of $600,000,000 for the Post Office Department, or such a matter, but the income and the earnings of this department have very largely increased. Again, in the matter of internal-revenue taxation, these deficiency appropriation bills have contained between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000 in repayments, or to provide for future repayments, of illegally collected taxes. In the meantime we have been collecting more than a billion dollars of taxes that were uncollected in former years. So that the income is keeping pace with and is really a great deal more than the outgo.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the figures and facts as certified to me by the Bureau of Efficiency, a Republican bureau, show that the expenses for this year exceeded the expenses of 1915 by more than a billion dollars, but in fairness I have deducted all those appropriations growing out of the war, still leaving an excess of appropriations of $512,000,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I am told that the objections which were made to certain Senate resolutions on yesterday will be withdrawn. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate Resolution 427——

Mr. BURSUM. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the motion to take up House bill 13980.

Mr. McCUMBER. Also Senate Resolution 437, providing for assistant clerks to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was one of those who objected, and I withdraw the objection, and hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. BURSUM. I call for the regular order. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has not in his figures made note of the fact that since 1915 we appropriate each year over $500,000,000 for the wounded and disabled veterans of the World War. That does not appear in the figures, so that the people of the country could know it. I may add, Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is wrong, as he usually is when he talks about figures. I did deduct $500,000,000. The Senator is a great juggler with figures. [Laughter.] I take that back. All I ask the Senator to do is to take these figures, and take a speech I made a few years ago, in which I did deduct all the war-veteran appropriations, and the Senator will agree with me that every figure I have given is accurate, because the clerks of the committee and the Bureau of Efficiency have certified that they are accurate.

Mr. SMOOT. All I can say is this——

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. He has yielded the floor.

Mr. CARAWAY. I just want one minute.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I just want to say to my Democratic colleagues to remember what Schley said at Santiago. When the Spanish fleet was being sunk, he asked the sailors not to cheer. He said, "The poor boys are dying." I hope Senators on this side will not taunt the Republicans.

Mr. SMOOT. I expected just such a statement from the Senator.

I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the Senator from Utah may be a juggler with figures, as he intimated, but I never state a figure to this body that I am not able to prove. I will say that to the Senator, whether I juggle them or whether I do not.

I want to say to the Senator further that he should take into consideration the $25,000,000 we paid to Colombia, the pork barrel bill for rivers and harbors of over $65,000,000, and many other items too numerous to mention in time remaining in this session of Congress. In 1915 we did not have to appropriate anything for the payment to the veterans of a World War, to the disabled and wounded——

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a vote on the pension bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will permit a vote. I yield now.

Mr. DIAL. We can not get a vote now. We have no intention of having a vote.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. ROBINSON appeared, and Mr. LODGE said:

Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate had completed its business, and ask if he had any further communications to make, have fulfilled that duty, and the President informs us that he has no further communications to make to the Senate.

STATE BANKS, ETC., MEMBERSHIP IN FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the provisions of section 506 of the agricultural credits act of 1923, the Chair appoints Mr. McLEAN, Mr. WELLER, and Mr. GLASS members on the part of the Senate of the joint committee to investigate the question of securing larger membership of State banks and trust companies in the Federal reserve system.

TRIBUTE TO DEAN OF CORPS OF OFFICIAL REPORTERS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are many faithful employees of the Senate who have rendered splendid service during this Congress, but there is one who is outstanding in that service. This is the twenty-eighth Congress he has seen expire. He came here in 1868, and is still fresh and active. He is the dean of the Official Reporters, and I am sure we all wish our friend, Mr. Shuey, well. [Applause.]

SENATOR JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there is an article in the Baltimore Sun of Sunday morning in regard to Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type. It was written by Mr. Theodore Tiller, one of the ablest correspondents in Washington; and I also ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Memphis Commercial Appeal, written by Mr. R. M. Gates, to be printed in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

NO MORE BOREDOM IN SENATE FOR JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS—VETERAN MISSISSIPPIAN SLIPS QUIETLY OUT OF WASHINGTON TO AVOID ELABORATE CEREMONIES OF FAREWELL.

(By Theodore Tiller.)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The manner of the exit of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS from Washington and public service was typical of the whimsicality and modesty of the man. Only a few of his intimates knew until to-day that he had not awaited the fall of the gavels bringing the Sixty-seventh Congress to a close. Now the story may be told—all the way from that quiet little dinner at the home of Philip Roche to a scene at the Union Station as Senator WILLIAMS slipped out of Washington last Wednesday afternoon.

He heard that they might give him a farewell speech or so in the Senate. He wanted no such display. He heard also that the back-home folks, around Yazoo City, Miss., and a town or so en route, wanted to stage a home-coming celebration in his honor. And then he decided that he would slip quietly out of Washington and quietly into Yazoo City, no one knowing the exact time of his departure or arrival.

NO CEREMONY OF FAREWELL.

There were just a few who knew that he intended to go four days before the end of the session. One of them was Philip Roche, a doorkeeper at the Senate Chamber. Philip Roche was there when the train pulled out of Washington. The tears ran down his face as he said good-by to JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, whom he almost worships. His voice was thick with emotion and sighs came from the broad bosom of a bulky, gray-headed man, whose shoulders stooped a bit more as his friend left.

Philip Roche is an Irishman, born in county Tipperary, who came to this country fifty-odd years ago. For 30 years he has known and loved JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS; but even before that time there had been a faint family association, for Roche's brother-in-law fought for the Stars and Bars alongside Senator WILLIAMS's father, who was killed at Shiloh. Most of Roche's relatives were in the Confederate Army. So were most of WILLIAMS's.

In the old days Philip Roche owned a saloon on Newspaper Row in Washington. It was a cozy place, to which came politicians, writers, and others. Senator WILLIAMS dropped in there at times for a toddy, and Philip Roche served the best thing in the house when his favorite statesmen came in. After prohibition Roche became a Senate doorkeeper in his old age.

ONLY ONE DINNER AT PARTING.

During the last month of Senator WILLIAMS's service of nearly 30 years in Congress he received dozens of invitations to attend banquets, State functions, formal affairs in Washington. He declined them all. The day before he was to go Philip Roche asked Senator WILLIAMS to come to his home and break bread with him before he quit Washington. That was one invitation JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS instantly accepted.

They went to the modest home of Philip Roche. Others who gathered there for this remarkable dinner included former Senator Mark Smith, a crony of WILLIAMS, Senator PAT HARRISON, Joseph P. Tumulty, and a few more. Roche, with all the hospitality of his nature, waited on the table a part of the time and then sat down and ate with his guests. Then they sat around and told stories and reminisced, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS and Mark Smith doing most of the talking and going back into memory for wonderful experiences of other days.

That was JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS's farewell dinner in Washington. It was without formality or speeches. But sentiment and old friendships were there, and that is why WILLIAMS went. This brings us to something he said about sentiment not long ago.

SENTIMENT ALONE ENDURES.

"A few days ago," said WILLIAMS, a man to whom the Senate always gave attention, "we heard a Senator refer to sentiment contemptuously. There is no poetry in the soul of a man who can refer to sentiment contemptuously. To say that a man is sentimental is to pay him the highest compliment that one man can pay to another, or that a pure woman can pay a brave man. The only thing that is not rotten and can not rot is human sentiment.

"I belong to a breed of men who for 400 years have been dying on the wrong side. Some of them fought like fools for the Stuarts in England. Some of them died under Tyrone's Roman Catholic insurrection in Ireland. Some of them followed the Stars and Bars until they fell in gloom, though not in disgrace, at Appomattox.

"We do not recognize that sentiment is to be referred to contemptuously. If it were so to be referred to, the man who died for the Stuarts was simply an infernal fool, and the man who followed Robert E. Lee to Appomatox did not have much sense. But, all the same, he had heroism, he had courage, and he had communion with the immortal gods, because they were in his heart, and the very spirit of Jesus Christ was before him—because Jesus fought for the greatest lost cause the world has ever known. I have no sentiment to waste on the man who refers to sentiment contemptuously.

LAST TRIBUTE TO BLACK MAMMY.

The last resolution Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS asked the Senate to consider was one authorizing the erection on public grounds of the United States, in Washington, of "a monument in memory of the faithful colored mammies of the South." The Senate adopted it unanimously. Jefferson Davis Chapter, No. 60, United Daughters of the Confederacy, will erect this monument to the old southern "mammy."

Senator WILLIAMS typified the old South, but not the "professional southerner." His drawl was inimitable. So pleasing was it that it might have lulled one to sleep—except that no one ever slept while JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS spoke. He had all the weapons of oratory from satire and sarcasm to eulogies of the purest English. Educated both in this country and abroad, he was one of the few real scholars who have made Senate debates historic.

He was genuinely southern and pastoral in his tastes, too. When he said good-by to the Mississippi Valley Society of Washington a few nights ago he spoke to folks from back home, and in his quaint way said, in substance:

HIS ART OF GROWING OLD.

"I am going back to Yazoo City and my old home on a rural free-delivery route. I want to get up again each morning as I hear the roosters crow. I want to pick flowers while the dew is still on them. Then, I want to come back and have my coffee and breakfast. Later on, if I am so fortunate as to have any left in these days, I want to stir myself a toddy whenever I feel that I would like one.

"Through the middle of the day I will read books, putter around the place, and talk to my neighbors. At noon I will leisurely eat my dinner.

"After dinner I will read some more, and then late in the evening I will eat supper—and notice that I call it supper, this last meal of the day. That's what we call it in Mississippi.

"And as night and the time for bed approaches, I will listen to the greatest chorus of voices that man ever heard, music that will charm me and make me ready for repose—the voices of my mocking birds."

Going on, Senator WILLIAMS said he wanted to live that way until he died and then be carried out of the house by his neighbors and buried among his people.

PARTING SHOT AT THE SENATE.

Quickly shifting from sentiment to cynicism, he added:

"Now, some may say that that is not a very wonderful thing to do—all this I've mapped out for my future days—but it is a lot more honest than being a Senator."

Months ago Senator WILLIAMS told his colleague, Senator PAT HARRISON, that he was tired of the Senate and public life and would not seek reelection (which no doubt he could have had without opposition).

"I'd rather be a dog and bay the moon than stay in the Senate another six years," he said. "I'm tired of it all, and going home to rest."

NO DESIRE FOR MONEY, EITHER.

This spirit of abandon and desire for repose was exemplified during the past few weeks, when he received numerous offers to go on the lecture platform, to write books, to write weekly comment for newspapers, and what not. One syndicate offered Senator WILLIAMS $30,000 a year to write a story each week about current events or any other topic selected by him. A young fellow came down to persuade Senator WILLIAMS to sign the contract. With that enticing drawl in his voice Senator WILLIAMS finally said:

"No, young man, I want to rest, not to write. I wouldn't be tied down to do anything once a week for anybody or for $30,000. You might take it up with me three or four months from now, when I am rested up a bit, and maybe I'll write a story or two, but I don't think I will."

In Senate debate no Senator could draw a smile or a laugh from the galleries more quickly than JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS. When he arose everyone knew that he would lend a sparkle to the proceedings; that the shafts of his wit would hit somewhere in the Chamber. Here is a sample extract from his last speech in the Senate, wherein he discussed everything from the ship subsidy bill to the Louisiana and Florida purchase:

PERSUASIVE WAYS OF JACKSON.

"We not only rather coerced the Florida purchase," he said, whimsically, "but old 'Andy' Jackson went down there and invaded the territory, fought everything in sight, hung three British subjects, and then afterwards got so mad because the Secretary of State questioned his right to invade foreign territory and hang three British subjects—somebody having censured him for it—that he and Thomas H. Benton spent nearly the balance of their official lives trying to get the censure removed. And finally they did get it removed, so that the Journal of this most august body to-day stands with various lines run through it and others rubbed out."

"I hesitate to question the historical accuracy of a great scholar like the Senator from Mississippi," interrupted Senator STANLEY, "but I think he has given Andy credit for one too many—it was two instead of three British subjects that he hung."

"Perhaps so," said WILLIAMS, "but that was not Andy's fault, for he would have hung another if there had been any more he cared to hang."

"They were hanged in Florida," said Senator LODGE.

"Yes; they were hanged in Florida, for Andy did not even take the trouble to bring them over the line," agreed Senator WILLIAMS.

HATED KAISER BUT NOT GERMANS.

During the World War Senator WILLIAMS made many speeches arraigning the German military machine and the Kaiser, but he was different in his feeling toward the German people. Remembering his days at the University of Heidelberg, in Baden, he once said:

"I join the President in having no hostility toward the German people. I spent two and a half years of my life with them, and I love them—a whole lot of them. The man who inhabits the borders of the Rhine, the man who inhabits Bavaria and Wurttemberg—easily moved to tears, and easily moved to laughter, and easily moved to rage—is a man whom I have learned to love.

"And I have always believed this war in Europe, brought on by the obstinate refusal of the Kaiser to leave either to a tribunal of arbitration or to a concert of Europe the question at issue between Austria and Serbia, and inspiring Austria to refusal, is a proof of the truth of the adage, 'Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad.'"

READY FOR ORATORICAL BATTLE.

In the retirement of Senator WILLIAMS it is generally conceded the upper Chamber loses one of its most entertaining and ablest men. In both Senate and House he was always ready for debate, but there was no rough-and-tumble display about him. Going into action, he walked slowly down the aisles, his left hand always cupped behind a deaf left ear. His gray hair was frequently rather touseled. He wore always an old-fashioned standing collar, with his Adam's apple showing through its wide space at the front. He was clean but careless in his dress. If his trousers bagged and his coat sagged it mattered little to him.

He had a way of going across the Chamber and sitting right in front of a Senator to whose speech he wanted to listen. He would sit there as though enraptured, never taking his eyes from the face of the speaker and never removing that left hand from behind his ear. Sometimes he did this to disconcert a political enemy. For instance, when Senator MCCUMBER was delivering a long, dry speech on the tariff bill, Senator WILLIAMS moved across and seated himself almost at MCCUMBER's knee.

Senator MCCUMBER had brought into the Chamber various articles of foreign and domestic manufacture to illustrate the difference in quality and cost of production. Among them was a cuckoo clock. Senator WILLIAMS, disconcerting MCCUMBER a bit, began to play with the clock. Occasionally he peered more closely at it, as though expecting the cuckoo bird to hop out. There was amusement on both floor and galleries. About everybody was smiling except MCCUMBER, who orated on and got little attention because everybody was watching WILLIAMS.

FINALLY BREAKS THE CLOCK.

Eventually the Mississippi Senator tugged too hard at the pendulum and the clock fell down with a great noise at MCCUMBER's feet. Then, having had his little joke, the Mississippi Senator grinned and went out of the Chamber. He had little patience with time-killing tariff debates. He, a member of the Finance Committee, had the faculty of making a tariff speech and putting bits of pep and jazz into it.

His oratorical powers ran the gamut from deepest sentiment to bitterest sarcasm. He seldom if ever used the bludgeon of outright ridicule. His make-up encompassed everything from geniality, conviviality, and love of human nature, and birds and animals, to a fighting spirit inherited from ancestors described by him as fighting for lost causes for 400 years.

Coming to Congress 30 years ago, he has written "30"—the signal of the telegrapher and the newspaper man meaning "the end"—to his own remarkable and brilliant career. Yazoo City takes him back with open arms; the mocking birds he talked about will sing for him each day, and Philip Roche, the doorkeeper, is not alone in Washington when he laments the voluntary departure of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS and calls him "one of God's noblemen."

I also present an article on Senator WILLIAMS from the Commercial Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn., written by their Washington correspondent, Mr. R. M. Gates, an excellent newspaper man:

[From the Commercial Appeal, Memphis, Sunday morning, February 25, 1923.]

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS LEAVING CONGRESS AFTER 28 YEARS OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE—HIS DEPARTURE A SEVERE LOSS TO STATESMANSHIP.

Lord Bryce's estimate of southern statesmen—that "they had an enlargement of view and an aptitude for grasping and deciding continuous lines of policy and, in fact, a turn for statesmanship as contrasted with mere politics"—applies particularly to Mississippi's famous orator, who within a week goes back to Cedar Grove.

(By R. M. Gates.)

WASHINGTON, February 24.—Of the 15 Senators who will pass out of the upper House of Congress March 4 it is the going out of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS that will be remarked and regretted as a national loss. He has evoked and held uninterruptedly the admiring interest of the Nation as no other Member of either House of the Congress within the past 30 years. This is true, first, because the retiring senior Mississippi Senator's statesmanship has long since come to be regarded by thoughtful students of the Government as one of the Nation's political assets, and, secondly, his vision in the contemplation of large governmental problems has never been obscured by the petty fogs of little personalities and prejudices that invariably envelop the loose-jawed demagogue and political timeserver.

Neither as a Senator nor as a Representative in the lower House did JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS ever seek or attempt to deceive himself as a national legislator, and because of this unbroken allegiance to his own political conscience he never sought to deceive or mislead either the people of his own sovereign State or the people of the United States. He has always been scrupulously honest in his attitude toward public questions, even though he may not always have been either wise or right in the massed opinion of the majority.

Never in the 28 years of his congressional service was he ever suspected or accused, even by his critics, of casting a vote to catch the popular ear or to appeal to the particular phase or fancy that at the time seemed to hold the popular imagination. Creasy said that "it would indeed be difficult to name a single quality which a general ought to have and with which the Duke of Marlborough was not eminently gifted."

To say that it would be difficult to name a single quality which a statesman ought to have and with which Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS is not eminently gifted may be hyperbole, but certainly Senator WILLIAMS embodies as many of the essential qualities that make for sound statesmanship as any Member of the Senate to-day or of any Member of that august body within the past quarter of a century. Upon the basic foundation of moral and intellectual honesty a superstructure of scholarly attainments, reinforced by natural gifts and graces of mind of a rare order, has been reared, and from this almost marvelous storehouse of information he has given freely to the world in Senate and House debates on questions of national moment and concern. Suffice it to say that the Senate of the United States will be the poorer for the loss of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

GOING BACK TO CEDAR GROVE.

So much by way of preface to the more important and pertinent fact that on March 4, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, senior Senator from Mississippi during the past 12 years, will retire from public life that he may give himself over to the fuller, sweeter, and ideally reposeful life that awaits his coming at Cedar Grove, in Yazoo County. There, as he expressed himself the other day, he expects to enjoy his children, grandchildren, the birds, the trees, and the flowers that unite to make the old ancestral Sharp home and plantation the dear and delightful shrine that it is. Whether in this congenial and compensating environment he will devote even a portion of his time to distinctly literary effort is problematical. He may or may not write a book or several books.

Pressing and flattering have been invitations from the leading publishers of the country to give them something from his pen after he shall have separated himself from political life, but thus far Senator WILLIAMS has remained silent. Some time ago he thought that he might write the life of John Marshall as one way of employing a part of his leisure, but he has not recently said anything that would encourage his friends and admirers to look forward to such an illuminating production.

Senator WILLIAMS's intimate friends know he feels that no adequate or sufficiently discriminating life of the great Virginia jurist has yet been given to the world. He does not feel that this famed Virginian has been portrayed as he was, but, on the contrary, most of his biographers—Macaulaylike—have in too many instances sacrificed facts to fancy and fine writing. Up to the present time Senator WILLIAMS's sole contribution to library literature is his "Thomas Jefferson," which in reality is a series of lectures delivered at Columbia University. Undoubtedly the life of John Marshall by JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS would take instant rank as an American classic. May he change his mind and devote himself to the task, is the wish of those who know his ability to make its execution a permanent contribution of inestimable educational and historical value.

28 YEARS IN CONGRESS.

Twenty-eight years, nearly a generation, is the measure of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS'S service in public life. He was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1893 and served in that body 16 years. He had not been a Member of the House but a short time before he was accorded first rank as a debater, though the membership of the House at that time included some of the brightest minds and most incisive intellects in the Nation. In those days the rule of the States was to send men of exceptional merit, generous ability, and of a high order of general accomplishments to Congress. The number of "pikers" was comparatively small, or at least small enough to render their demagogy harmless on the whole.

When JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS entered the House in 1893, he found Champ Clark and De Armond from Missouri, W. C. P. Breckinridge from Kentucky, Breckinridge from Arkansas, McMillin, Richardson, and Enloe from Tennessee, Sam Robertson from Louisiana, Judge Turner and Charles F. Crisp from Georgia, Oates from Alabama, Joe Bailey and David B. Culberson from Texas, George D. Wise and Harry St. George Tucker from Virginia, and from his own State Hernando D. Money and "Private" John Allen. Over in the Senate there were such notables as George and Walthall from Mississippi, Jones from Arkansas, Caffery from Louisiana, Wade Hampton from South Carolina, Zeb Vance from North Carolina, Beck and Joe Blackburn from Kentucky, Morgan and Pugh from Alabama, Voorhees and Turpie from Indiana, Brice from Ohio, and Harris and Bate from Tennessee. Although comparisons are reputed odious, how do the names of a similar number of House and Senate Members of to-day compare with those mentioned above?

From almost the day of his entrance into the House JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS was recognized as one of the leaders of his party, but he was not formally designated leader of the Democrats for several years thereafter. It was his measuring of verbal lances on the floor with such keen Republican intellects as Pete Hepburn, of Iowa, John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, and Charles H. Grosvenor, of Ohio, that convinced the Democrats that WILLIAMS was the man for party leadership. Republican leaders ere this had been convinced, to their sorrow and confusion, that they had a foeman worthy their best steel. Even Republican Senators had been attracted by the Mississippian's prowess in the field of open debate and did not hesitate to render him the homage of public acknowledgment of their admiration. It was the late Senator John W. Spooner, of Wisconsin, who said that "as a rough and tumble debater JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS did not have an equal in any parliamentary body in the world."

The Mississippian was minority leader in the House when the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency currency bill was passed, and it was due in a large measure to his unanswerable attacks on that piece of class legislation which in the ensuing congressional elections resulted in the loss of the House to the Republicans and its consequent organization by the Democrats the following year. He branded the bill as just another attempt to tighten the grip of the New York money interests on the rest of the country.

The single speech delivered in the House by JOHN SHARP WILLIAM, and the one with which his name and fame will be longest associated, was in opposition to the annexation of the Philippines. His opposition was based upon the contention that the proposition was opposed to the birth principle and the life principle of the American Republic and therefore subversive of the very spirit of the Declaration of Independence, and he still holds to the objections which he then urged as a nonannexationist.

ENTERED THE SENATE DEBATING.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS entered the Senate after having been out of public life two years—from 1909 to 1911—and it is almost literally true that he went in debating. When he became a Senator after a voluntary hiatus of two years the outstanding Member of that body on the Democratic side was Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas. That is, the virile Texan was deservedly esteemed as the ablest debater among the Democrats at least; and when JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS was elected to the Senate there was much speculation as to how he and Senator Joe Bailey would hit it off. They had served together in the House and each had taken the measure of the other in debate. Now that he was a Senator, Capitol gossips were passing along all sorts of predictions of jealousy and rivalry and verbal clashes in open forum between the distinguished Mississippian and the oratorically famed Bailey, of Texas.

While there was never any surface manifestation of jealousy or rivalry between Senator WILLIAMS and Senator Bailey, they held sharply divergent views in regard to certain fundamental principles of party government, and it happened that on the second day of his senatorship JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS found himself in the middle of a furious debate with the Texas Senator on the question of free raw material. The debate consumed two days, and as a result of it Senator WILLIAMS gained at the very outset the rank in the Senate which his career in the House had given assurance he would achieve long before the expiration of his first term in the Senate. That he would become Democratic leader in fact, if not by formal party designation, was predicted, but that he would find opportunity to earn that distinction within less than three days after entering the Senate was in the nature of the unexpected.

The debate between Senator WILLIAMS and Senator Bailey, as stated, was on free raw material, the Texas Senator having issued the challenge by the statement that free raw material was not historically a Democratic doctrine but originated with President Grover Cleveland. Senator WILLIAMS sprang into the debate with the contention that free raw material had been political policy in the Democratic Party since the administration of Thomas Jefferson, whose Secretary of the Treasury, Gallatin, had defended the principle and urged its practice. From Jefferson to Buchanan, said Senator WILLIAMS, the Democratic Party had stood consistently for free raw material, which had been an established policy in England from the days of Adam Smith. Senator Bailey's position was that if the manufactured product was taxed, the raw material should likewise be subject to a tariff tax.

The clash between these giants in debate was denominated as epochal, and for several years thereafter it was to the Senate that visitors flocked for edifying discussion. Opinion as to whether the palm of victory should be awarded to the versatile Mississippian or to the ponderous Texan was divided, but certainly there was no diversity of opinion as to the account which JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS gave of himself. He had done the very thing that had been prophesied he would do, viz, take the front rank as a debater in the Senate. This rank and distinction he has held uninterruptedly down to the present time.

OTHER MEMORABLE DEBATES.

Notable as was the Williams-Bailey free raw-material debate as a senatorial curtain raiser, the new Mississippi Senator was destined to shine forth even in brighter radiance in discussions not yet foreshadowed. There was in the Senate at that time a Senator from Idaho. His name was Heyburn and he was, in spite of any inherent goodness or charity that he may have been justified in claiming, a sort of professional "South hater." He seemed not to have realized that the War between the States had ended at Appomattox and that there was a United States of America. While Senator WILLIAMS loved the South and the cause of the Confederacy with as much warmth of affection as Heyburn was wont to exhibit for the North and the cause of the Union, he discretely refrained from any unseemly manifestation that might be construed as deliberately provocative of sectional discussion.

Not so with Senator Heyburn, who was in season and out keen for a pretext that might be seized upon as warranting a wallop at the South and the Confederacy. For several years the unreconstructed Idaho Senator had been aspersing the South whenever his breakfast or his lunch had gone against him, and aside from drawing more or less desultory fire from the Democratic side of the Chamber, his sectional "ravings" went unnoticed. It was different when JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS entered the Senate. The romping on the South days of the irascible Idaho Senator were then numbered. Their first clash came when one day Senator WILLIAMS proposed that the Senate increase the monthly pay of an old and partially decrepit negro employee of the Capitol, who had been brought to Washington by Senator Jefferson Davis. This proposal was a match to the Huyburn powder keg, and the explosion that followed was verbally terrific. Heyburn's yet dripping "bloody shirt" was again unfurled. Decorously, yet with gathering fury, Senator WILLIAMS listened to the unprovoked attack on his section, his State, and his party, and when the exhausted Heyburn took his seat the incensed Mississippian let go all the artillery in his arsenal.

This was Heyburn's first real castigation, and his usually composed and florid face alternated expressions of pain and amazement. He had been soundly drubbed for the first time, and that, too, by a Democratic Senator who was comparatively a new Member, who, according to Senate tradition, should be seen a long time before he is heard. This experience sufficed to keep a quietus on Heyburn for months, and though he never lost an opportunity afterwards to take a crack at the South, he never again remained in his seat under JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS's fire in retort, but almost invariably retired to the Republican cloakroom when the Mississippi Senator rose to reply. But Senator WILLIAMS was at his best as a debater in the Senate during the days just preceding America's entrance into the World War. Absolutely and unequivocally a believer in the justice of his country's cause and of its provocation for taking part in that titanic struggle for the preservation of Christian civilization, Senator WILLIAMS had no patience, either sentimental or intellectual, for those who by word or deed would even seemingly thwart the preparations which President Woodrow Wilson was then urging upon the Congress as precedent to America's participation. The chief obstructionist to President Wilson's program was Senator LA FOLLETTE, and because of this regrettable fact the erratic Wisconsin Senator was oftenest within the range of Senator WILLIAMS's patriotic fire. The clashes between these opposing Senators were frequent, but, as might be expected, the Mississippian emerged each time unscathed and with unabated zeal. Senator WILLIAMS's famous reply to Senator LA FOLLETTE'S concluding antiwar speech was remarked and will be remembered as enlarging his reputation for forensic debate even to greater proportions than his two days' discussion with Senator Bailey on free raw material.

LAST OF OLD-TIME SENATORS.

When JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS goes out of the Senate March 4, the last link that binds the upper House of Congress to the South of heroic memories will be broken. He is literally the last of the Mohicans, so far as the South, as the once recognized nursery of statesmen in the Senate is concerned. And the pity of it does not lessen its truth. It will be said that the South still produces men capable of notable achievement in high official station. That is true, but it is true also that men of that type, as a rule, are to be found in the walks of civil life. It may be said also that for some reason the South seems to have lost much of the old pride which in other days prompted her to chose her biggest and brainiest and best men to speak her sentiments in the halls of the National Legislature.

But back to JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, now soon to pass from that stage upon which for 28 years he has taken major rôles to the lasting credit of himself, to the State of Mississippi, and to the Nation. Writing in his American Commonwealth of southern men who entered politics before the War between the States, Lord Bryce said: "But he had courage and a clear vision of his objects, the two gifts essential for a statesman." And, again, the same distinguished author and philosopher reflects on southern statesmen of those pre-Civil War days who showed "an enlargement of view and an aptitude for grasping decided and continuous lines of policy, and, in fact, a turn for statesmanship as contrasted with mere politics." It will hardly be denied by the informed that these descriptions fit JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS as a cap. He has courage and a clear vision and a remarkable aptitude for grasping decided and continuous lines of policy. That he is not a politician is a well-established fact in his entire official career. Perhaps no Member of either branch of Congress ever voted with less thought of what the galleries might think of his vote, but always did he vote as his conscience, his intelligence, his courage, and his sense of responsibility dictated. Instance his vote shortly after the signing of the armistice when a resolution with respect to Ireland was offered in the Senate. Obviously the resolution in question was of political origin and intended as an opportune appeal to an element in the American electorate constitutionally susceptible to any utterance smacking of criticism of England.

The only negative vote against this resolution was cast by Senator WILLIAMS, who stated at the time that he voted as he did because he felt convinced that the resolution was conceived in hatred and delivered for the sole purpose of waking the animosity of a class. But this very resolution had no other effect than to afford certain Senators on both sides of the Senate Chamber a coveted opportunity to deliver themselves of anti-British speeches.

LEGISLATIVE SERVICE.

Throughout his years in the House and Senate it was the aim of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS to render a constructive legislative service. If he is to be judged alone by a mere utilitarian standard a different verdict of the man and his work will be delivered.

It was his sense of duty to the Nation as a legislator in the Congress of the United States that made JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS a national figure as well as a national factor and influence. He might have allowed his time to be taken up by the countless little details of his office, but being a student and a thinker and a factor in the shaping of national policies and legislation, he was content to leave matters of strictly utilitarian character to others. When on one occasion he was asked by a captious critic if any big piece of legislation bore his name, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, then a Member of the House, replied that while it was true his name was not so connected, he could say that he had helped to kill a lot of very foolish and potentially harmful legislation. But things have changed, and under the new political dispensation the average Senator now points to his capacity to get something for his people or settle some disputed matter a constituent has in one of the Government departments at Washington. This form of service seems to have superseded the conception of public duty which at all times appears to have actuated the elder statesman, and by which the old standard of congressional service seems to rest largely upon the ability of the Senator or the House Member to walk fast and much, and to speak long and loud on any subject without reference to whether he knows anything worth while pertaining to it. And the people are getting what they want in inverse ratio to what they pretend to esteem in the interchange of views in private.

WILLIAMS AND HARRISON.

This article would be incomplete did it not take into account the comradeship that has subsisted between Senator WILLIAMS and Senator HARRISON from the very day of the entrance of the junior Senator into the Senate. The relationship has been almost as father to son—PAT HARRISON regarding his senior colleague with a respect and an affection almost akin to paternal reverence. Their teamwork has been harmonious at all times, though not upon all questions have the two Senators voted alike. But in all matters affecting the interests of Mississippi they have cooperated without the least friction. It is due Senator HARRISON to say here that Senator WILLIAMS will retire from the Senate with the highest respect and admiration for his junior colleague, whose progressive career he has watched with increasing pride. Not long ago Senator WILLIAMS remarked that PAT HARRISON had grown more than any new Member of the Senate whose course he had observed.

When Senator WILLIAMS announced some months ago that he would retire at the end of the present Congress Senator HARRISON gave notice that he desired to be assigned to the seat in the Senate now occupied by his colleague, which, by the way, is the seat that was occupied by Jefferson Davis as a Senator from Mississippi. Senator HARRISON has been assigned the seat and will take it at the next session of Congress. Furthermore, Senator HARRISON, as an additional mark of his friendship for and admiration of Senator WILLIAMS, will occupy the latter's rooms in the Senate Office Building—No. 217. Senator HARRISON now has rooms on the fourth floor. The rooms occupied by Senator WILLIAMS are on the second floor and overlook the beautiful park on the east side of the Capitol. It should be stated also that Senator WILLIAMS has the highest respect for his successor, Hon. HUBERT D. STEPHENS, of New Albany. He regards him as a man of fine sense, splendid ability, courageous, and loyal to his party and to his convictions.

WILLIAMS AS A MAN.

As a man, considered apart from his activities and attainments as a national legislator, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS stands four square. Utterly without fear, his heart is attuned to the sweeter sentiments which impart to life its finest flavor. He loves the true and beautiful as depicted by Ruskin, and spurns the little mean and tawdry things that dwarf the mind, shrivel the soul, and cheapen human relationships.

The very embodiment of loyalty to every commitment of heart and mind, he has never been suspected of ingratitude to a friend or treachery to a political foe. The entire length of his 28 years in the House and the Senate is lined with men ready to shout praise of his name, admiration for his fame. Certainly no man retiring from public life could wish for or could receive a nobler testimonial from those who esteem him and love him because they know him and have wrought with him. No sweeter memory will JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS take into retirement than this.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico to proceed to the consideration of House bill 13980.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there seems to be some anxiety about getting some measure passed, and many Senators are in favor of getting action on the resolution of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with reference to an investigation into the prices of sugar. I think it would be more proper to consider that resolution and let the country know why the cost of sugar has so mounted.

I do not think it is proper to wait until just before we are about to adjourn——

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock of the 4th day of March, 1923, has arrived, and, in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, the fourth session of the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States has ended, and the Senate of the United States stands adjourned sine die.

PRESERVATION OF THE HALIBUT FISHERY OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC OCEAN.

In executive session this day the following convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed March 2, 1923, for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, including Bering Sea, was adopted; and

On motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom and from the papers accompanying the same:

IN EXECUTIVE SESSION, SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive D, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, a convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed on March 2, 1923, for the preservation of the halibut fishery on the Northern Pacific Ocean, including the Bering Sea, subject to the understanding, which is hereby made a part of this resolution of ratification, that none of the nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of any other part of Great Britain shall engage in halibut fishing contrary to any of the provisions of this treaty.

The Senate:

I transmit, with the view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed March 2, 1923, for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, including Bering Sea.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 2, 1923.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed March 2, 1923, for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, including Bering Sea.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 2, 1923.

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, being equally desirous of securing the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, have resolved to conclude a convention for this purpose, and have named as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State of the United States; and

His Britannic Majesty: The Honorable Ernest Lapointe, K. C., B. A., LL. B., Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The nationals and inhabitants and the fishing vessels and boats of the United States and of the Dominion of Canada, respectively, are hereby prohibited from fishing for halibut (Hipoglossus) both in the territorial waters and in the high seas off the western coasts of the United States, including Bering Sea, and of the Dominion of Canada, from the 16th day of November next after the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, to the 15th day of the following February, both days inclusive, and within the same period yearly thereafter, provided that upon the recommendation of the International Fisheries Commission, hereinafter described, this close season may be modified or suspended at any time after the expiration of three such seasons, by a special agreement concluded and duly ratified by the high contracting parties.

It is understood that nothing contained in this article shall prohibit the nationals or inhabitants and the fishing vessels or boats of the United States and of the Dominion of Canada from fishing in the waters hereinbefore specified for other species of fish during the season when fishing for halibut in such waters is prohibited by this article. Any halibut that may be taken incidentally when fishing for other fish during the season when fishing for halibut is prohibited under the provisions of this article may be retained and used for food for the crew of the vessel by which they are taken. Any portion thereof not so used shall be landed and immediately turned over to the duly authorized officers of the Department of Commerce of the United States or of the Department of Marine and Fisheries of the Dominion of Canada. Any fish turned over to such officers in pursuance of the provisions of this article shall be sold by them to the highest bidder and the proceeds of such sale, exclusive of the necessary expenses in connection therewith, shall be paid by them into the treasuries of their respective countries.

ARTICLE II.

Every national or inhabitant, vessel or boat of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada engaged in halibut fishing in violation of the preceding article may be seized except within the jurisdiction of the other party by the duly authorized officers of either high contracting parties and detained by the officers making such seizure and delivered as soon as practicable to an authorized official of the country to which such person, vessel or boat belongs, at the nearest point to the place of seizure, or elsewhere, as may be mutually agreed upon. The authorities of the nation to which such person, vessel or boat belongs alone shall have jurisdiction to conduct prosecutions for the violation of the provisions of the preceding article or of the laws or regulations which either high contracting party may make to carry those provisions into effect, and to impose penalties for such violations; and the witnesses and proofs necessary for such prosecutions, so far as such witnesses or proofs are under the control of the other high contracting party, shall be furnished with all reasonable promptitude to the authorities having jurisdiction to conduct the prosecutions.

ARTICLE III.

The high contracting parties agree to appoint within two months after the exchange of ratifications of this convention a commission, to be known as the international fisheries commission, consisting of four members, two to be appointed by each party. This commission shall continue to exist so long as this convention shall remain in force. Each party shall pay the salaries and expenses of its own members, and joint expenses incurred by the commission shall be paid by the two high contracting parties in equal moieties.

The commission shall make a thorough investigation into the life history of the Pacific halibut, and such investigation shall be undertaken as soon as practicable. The commission shall report the results of its investigation to the two Governments and shall make recommendations as to the regulation of the halibut fishery of the North Pacific Ocean, including the Bering Sea, which may seem to be desirable for its preservation and development.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting parties agree to enact and enforce such legislation as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of this convention, with appropriate penalties for violations thereof.

ARTICLE V.

This convention shall remain in force for a period of five years and thereafter until two years from the date when either of the high contracting parties shall give notice to the other of its desire to terminate it. It shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional methods of the high contracting parties. The ratifications shall be exchanged in Washington as soon as practicable, and the convention shall come into force on the day of the exchange of ratifications.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention in duplicate, and thereunto affixed their seals.

Done at the city of Washington the 2d day of March, in the year of our Lord 1923.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, March 4, 1923.

(Legislative day of March 3, 1923.)

The recess having expired (at 10 o'clock a. m.), the House was called to order by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas as Speaker pro tempore.

RELIEF OF OWNERS OF THE BARGE "HAVANA."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4322, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4822, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4322) for the relief of the owners of the barge Havana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Staples Transportation Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the Stat of Maine, owner of the barge Havana, arising out of a collision between the United States steamship Quincy and said barge Havana at Hampton Roads, Va., on February 4, 1920, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said barge by reason of damages to said barge, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States of America, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs as in like cases of admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That the act entitled "An act for the relief of the owners of the barge Havana," approved September 18, 1922, is hereby repealed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Congress earlier in the session passed virtually this identical bill, but the Staples Transportation Co. was erroneously described as a corporation existing "under the laws of the State of Massachusetts." It should have been "under the laws of the State of Maine."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the original papers in the case of House bill 5931, a pension bill, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the papers indicated, there having been no adverse report on the bill named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMANENT ASSOCIATION OF INTERNATIONAL ROAD CONGRESSES.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 263, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to accept membership in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses and that the United States be represented in that congress by the maximum number of delegates allowable, and that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend annually, out of the administrative fund provided by section 21 of the Federal highway act of 1921, the sums necessary to cover the membership fees and such other expenses as may be necessary in maintaining membership in said association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how much expense will this resolution carry?

Mr. ANDERSON. Six hundred dollars, I am told.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of what value will it be to the United States to have membership in this organization?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it will be of very great value. The whole question of road construction is still in the formative stage. The object of this convention is the exchange of information with reference to road construction. This proposition has been recommended by the former Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Meredith, by the present Secretary of Agriculture, by the Secretary of State, and by the President. As the gentleman knows, this invitation can not be accepted except by special consent from Congress under the limitation we previously passed. I think this convention is of very great value.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has there hitherto been any meeting of this international congress?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. It met in 1908 and again in 1913. After that there were no meetings on account of the World War. The next meeting of the International Roads Congress will be held at Seville, Spain, next year.

Mr. STAFFORD. What value accrues to the Government by attending this international congress?

Mr. ANDERSON. There is a general expression of views on all questions of road construction. A publication issues from it which is circulated all over the world, in which there are articles dealing with the development of road construction. The results of the international congress are very valuable to road engineers. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object; and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects, and makes the point or order that there is no quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll

APPROPRIATION FOR THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 466) to provide an additional appropriation for the Federal Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year 1924.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $24,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, to provide payment for the following additional positions in the Federal Farm Loan Board: Two members at the rate of $10,000 each and two private secretaries at the rate of $2,000 each.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, just a word. The rural credits act, that passed through both Houses early this morning, provides for two additional members and two secretaries. There is no money available for the payment, and this resolution provides for it. I hope it will be considered favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO ROBERT E. KELLEY POST, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6577, an act authorizing the conveyance of land in the State of South Dakota to Robert E. Kelley Post, No. 70, American Legion, South Dakota, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Mr. HILL, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Mr. SHAW, Mr. COLE of Iowa, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. IRELAND, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina made the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to these requests?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 10 days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all Members may have 10 days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks that I made last night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks that he made last night. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address of Hon. Guy D. Goff before the Kiwanis Club, of Parkersburg, W. Va., on February 6, 1923. The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. GUY D. GOFF BEFORE THE KIWANIS CLUB, OF PARKERSBURG, W. VA., FEBRUARY 6, 1923, ON THE SUBJECT "THE SPIRIT OF AMERICA."

The problem of the United States—your problem; my problem—is not to create a democracy but to preserve republican institutions and ideals, to the end that civic power shall dominate and individual achievement shall grow for the common good. And let us always remember that the so-called poor and lowly—the "exploited class," as the socialist loves to call them—have in a Government of equal opportunities, where no restriction is placed on ability, risen to places of power never attained by those "born to the purple." Lincoln and Lloyd-George, the products of such conditions, are world figures, and of the 12 men comprising the present administration in Washington—the President, the Vice President, and the Cabinet—nine have earned their own way in life without any economic inheritance and eight started as manual laborers.

The present awakening of the world demands reality, not adornment; worth, not cleverness; character, not the cupidity and the prejudice of the bloc. It is the purpose of the age, and it is bound to win in the end. Conditions change, but fundamentals remain the same. Suspicion, despair, and hate yet control human nature and, I regret to admit, inspire human purpose. This Republic needs to-day, as it never did before, men and women of character, purity, vigor, and unselfish judgment. It needs men to stand in the hard places and fight the hard battles. It needs women to answer its questions and to solve its problems. It needs citizens with wisdom—men and women who are not too busy with envy and greed to pause and think, and who are willing to think out at the fireside the best solution of our present troubles and then act in obedience to such conclusions. This Nation to-day needs citizens who are not afraid of the demagogues and the unprincipled politicians who for selfish and sordid reasons have retarded recovery and made the people believe that they are constantly being cheated, deceived, and tricked, until confidence is destroyed and honor always questioned.

APPEAL TO YOU.

I appeal to you as the sober, law-abiding, plain, everyday people of our country—you who believe in the sanctity of the home and the democracy of the fireside. You labor and save, and your feet are planted solidly on the ground. Your fathers and your mothers produced this Nation, and they made it great. And, what is better yet, they believed in the religion of the Bible and the morality of the Bible's religion as the sole and only safeguard against the evils of civil and political despotism. Their Christian belief and faith saved them from morose pessimism and criminal revolt against things as they are. You are the men who create and sustain civilization, and you are capable of transmitting it to posterity. You are the class that has gained the control of industry, and from your frugality has come the surplus savings—the capital that employs labor and creates enterprise. But do you ever pause and reflect whither we are drifting? Are you conscious that our civilization hangs trembling in the balance? It is not the first civilization of the world. Six thousand years ago, back in Egypt, there was a wonderful civilization replete with the courtesies and the amenities of life. Then, too, there were the wonderful days of Greece and Rome—the cultured and the refined periods of Pericles and Horace—only to be followed by centuries of darkness. Go to any museum and you will ponder if such is our destiny and what can save us.

OTHER REPUBLICS FELL.

Americans are accustomed to regard a republican form of government as a natural condition. A glance at history does not lend encouragement to this cheerful view. Venice had a republican form of government for 1,100 years; Carthage for 700 years; Athens, with various intermissions, for 900 years; Florence, 300 years; and Rome, 500 years. We have lasted now 146 years, and if we should continue 300 years more we would go down in history as one of the most splendid and shortest-lived among the wrecks of nations. If we do go down, have you wondered where the world will find a new birth of progress? Obviously not in Europe; and, if not there, is the potency of stability to be found only in the yellow millions of the Far East? Is it not our duty to take most serious thought that we may escape the fate that has befallen others?

We must have more statecraft and less partisan politics. The future of this Nation rests with those who will take the time to think with those who can think and who will think, with those who can grasp a major premise and a minor premise, and then, drawing a conclusion therefrom, never desert it. Individual men and women have knowingly sought substitutes for their old maxims and have weakly proclaimed new discoveries in the make-up of society. All classes are more or less influenced. Many people feel that they have been exploited for the benefit of some one else, and that the time has now come for the cure of all human ills. This is largely due to mental listlessness. Such people are the easy victims of the misleading catch phrases of the day—new words coined to lead those who allow others to think for them.

The call was never greater for the highest type of moral, fearless patriotism to assert its force and reincarnate its power. The remedy is simple, plain, and imperative, if we hope to survive as a great people. One word—honesty—tells what is needed. It tells us, too, that it is quite as important that we know and reaffirm that it is a word with no double meaning. There is no comparative degree. There is no alternative, save its opposite. A man is honest or he is not, and so it is with a people.

AMERICA MAY FALL.

Recently a great statesman and patriot, speaking about the perils of the Republic, said to me: "The time is not far distant when the Federal Constitution will be scrapped and we will be fighting to make America unsafe for democracy, unless those who are American at heart sense the situation and act as vigorously as when they threw themselves against the German advance." This statement, pregnant with prophecy, may be true. This Government may go under and anarchy be temporarily substituted for law; but if this deplorable state should ever happen, when the clouds lift the soviet propagandist and the socialist quack will be found maimed and mangled in the wreckage of the democracy which they have destroyed.

Violence is not the way out, because force is never the way out of any difficulty. We condemn violence in the abstract, but many often believe in it when employed to advance our own purposes. Physical force is the weapon of the autocrat or the bully, who is always a law unto himself and who always identifies and blends the right with the whims and caprices of his own personal wishes and will.

To uphold the Nation in this era of flux, it is not enough that we think the Nation to be useful; the better part of our nature must feel our Nation to be holy. When the heart is right, then there is true patriotism. The new order of things must give us men and women who have never lost faith in the Constitution and the home, men and women who have an abiding confidence in the final triumph of democratic principles and republican institutions. Civic responsibilities must be met by men and women alike, because the country's need is "eternal vigilance." For centuries the institutions we enjoy to-day have been unfolding in accord with the divine laws. They have been built up slowly, almost imperceptibly, with the sacrifices, the blood, and the sorrows of struggling millions. We must repeat and teach with renewed vigor, lest we forget, the old truths that government will not and can not run itself; that liberty solves no problems; that if the people tolerate fraud and inefficiency it is their own fault; and that for the citizens of a republic each day is but a preliminary judgment day in which the voices of doom are written large for a people who have ceased their sacrifices to truth and virtue and, because of the weakness of success, fail to taste the full joy of a lofty and pure idealism.

REFORM BY VIOLENCE.

To-day there are those who would deprive us of all we have achieved. Irreconcilable doctrines are grappling with one another. Individual liberty is drawn up against collective servitude, personal initiative against the tyranny of socialism. The socialists and the self-exploiting political malcontents offer no substitute; they merely aim to destroy everything that is. "Wipe the slate clean," they cry, "and we will write thereon a new religion, a new morality, a new education, and a new civilization." Yes; in the twinkling of an eye the hand of appetite and the mind of violence will hand you over the equivalent of that which must grow up within us. Think of it, pray, that this poor human clay can move toward the heights without passing through sorrow, suffering, and affliction. May God pity him who is not chastened by pain and does not know of grief, for he surely is dwarfed and infirm of soul. There must always be payment in kind, specific reward for specific effort. There is no barter or substitution, nothing but payment in kind, the struggle of man through the centuries, earning and gaining only by the sweat of his brow.

The unrest of to-day has its rise in envy and jealousy; mankind is dividing into classes, becoming suspicious, doing nothing, playing safe, and each because of greed envies the other. There is an instinctive struggle for that will-o'-the wisp equality. There is no equality. There will be inequality wherever there is individual opportunity. No two human beings have the same ability, the same temperament, the same tastes, or the same physical powers, and for such reasons there will never be equality except equality of opportunity. In a word, let me state a self-evident truth: The real value of man lies not in what he has but in what he is and in what he may become, not artificially but slowly and painfully through the development of his God-given gifts. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," means that labor shall be protected and idleness prohibited by law. So in our struggle for honesty, stability, decency, and the betterment of society, all that is patriotic in our American citizenship, must be enlisted; not mere love for country, which is commonplace; not mere willingness to fight and die, which is sweet and glorious, but we must bring to the affairs of home and State all the intelligence, morality, and unselfish wisdom which we possess. We must as a people go into a committee of the whole and determine to hold fast the rights and privileges which have been secured to us by past sacrifices.

DISRESPECT FOR LAW.

In one of his latest works, a pamphlet entitled "Maxims Concerning Patriotism," Bishop Berkeley, shortly before his death in 1753, made the following observations: "Would you make a man who had no sense of God or conscience the guardian of your child? If not, why the guardian of your State? He who says there is not an honest man you may be sure is himself a knave." My friends, there must be respect for and obedience to the law of the land. Disrespect for law is a gnawing evil and demands the attention of all patriotic and right-thinking people. Never in our history has there been so much hatred, prejudice, and suspicion; never so little effort to pull together in the exercise of a common purpose to improve our social and industrial conditions. When men ignore the courts and defy the laws they become savages. Mob rule turns back the hands of time upon the great clock of civilization and sweeps away the greatest achievements of mankind. The harvest of anti-Americanism is ripening. Our form of government is challenged, not alone upon the soap box, not alone by oath-bound secret societies, that cloak their deadly hatred of free principles under the guise of patriotism, but by men in "the seats of the mighty."

POPULAR INDIFFERENCE.

It is a most disheartening symptom that it arouses so little interest and so little public condemnation. The gravest danger is the gross indifference of our people to the duties of citizenship. It is an alarming situation when men can not work without fear of violence from those who will not work. The right to work is as sacred as the right to quit work. Indeed, it is more sacred, for it is one of those inalienable rights of man proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence, because it is a right thundered by God from Mount Sinai. This is a government of laws, not a government of men.

Reverence for the law depends largely upon the ideals and the standards of citizens such as you; and when, for the promotion of their private interests, men and women disobey and scoff at the law, they are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting the rule of the mob. They are sowing dragons' teeth, and they need not be surprised when they find that no judicial or police authority can save them or the country from reaping the harvest of the rabble.

Disrespect for law is the reverse of all that mankind has built up of good by nearly 2,000 years of effort. It is the Sermon on the Mount written backwards. It leads to bloodshed, torture, rapine, and ruin. It repudiates God and builds its own throne on the basest passions of mankind. If it is allowed to grow and continue, it will mean the end, the destruction of individual rights, the family, the Nation. It will mean that we in our sordid selfishness have closed the doors of our souls to duty and drawn tight the blinds of our hearts, that we might not hear the gabble of the goose beneath our window nor the watchdog's solemn warning. In our pride and our neglect many are living in a fool's paradise and writing indelibly on the gravestone of America "Mene, mene tekel upharsin"—God hath numbered our kingdom and finished it.

There must be a warfare without truce or quarter against those who violate the law. We must do our part. We must respect and uphold the law of the Constitution, and fundamentally we must educate and practice what we preach.

FREEDOM TO WORK.

No people can be either free or civilized until they willingly obey the law and cooperate in enforcing and maintaining it. No people are or can be free until men have the right to work, and do work, with head and hands and receive fair wages in return, but always upon the understanding that such a wage implies honest service. The wage and the job are property, and each must be protected, unless the minority can deny to the majority the very right it claims for itself.

And, above all, working conditions must be made moral and sanitary, lest national decay and economic loss inevitably follows. We all want to make the world a better place in which to live. We are anxious to improve the morals, conserve the health, and advance the welfare of every man, woman, and child with whom we come in contact and whose lives touch ours. We are anxious to decrease the hours and the severity of labor and increase the rewards of those who do the intellectual and the manual labor of the world. It is the moral law, the eternal law of God, and the man who comes without these things comes empty handed and is too selfish to share in the rule of this Republic. These are our patriotic wishes, but we must put our patriotism into action. It is time to awaken the misguided selfish rich and selfish poor alike and show them whither they are drifting and dragging the country with them. It is time to show these lords of misrule that patriotism lies too deep in the American nature to be uprooted by socialism, organized minorities, or sentimental internationalism. The nation that is awake to its dangers has fought and won more than half the battle. Public opinion, once aroused, will tolerate no violations that are founded on injustice and unrighteousness.

SACRIFICE FOR SERVICE.

Our conscience teaches us it is true and our reason tells us it is right that if government is to come closer to man's needs we must have better citizens and more unselfish statesmen. We must have men and women who respect and appreciate the great problems of human life, because they have felt its pinch, experienced its tragedies, and lived its joys. We need men and women who believe that they find their lives by losing them in the service of others, not men who under the thin veneer of statesmanship, with their ears to the ground and their hopes for themselves, traffic in our liberties and deprive us of our prosperity, but men whose conceptions of every public and private trust are righteously formed, boldly developed, and honestly administered—men whose lives appeal to our intellects, arouse our ideals, and touch the best in all of us. If we can recreate such a feeling, such a thought, in our people, then by these forces only can we keep our country on the map and our flag in the sky until the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll.

STATE'S FUNCTION.

In these days the State is continually asked to assume additional functions, because many believe that the State should take the place of individual initiative and reduce all men to the dead level of the most incompetent. It is necessary to ask, What is the proper function of the State? The State is society organized in reference to jural relations and for the purpose of doing certain things for those who constitute its citizenship. The State should do that which a man ought not to do. The State should do that which a man will not do. The State should do that which a man can not do for himself.

No government ever made or will make a people great except as it guarantees the liberty whereby the people shall make themselves great. No people ever have made or will make themselves great by relying upon their government to do for them the things which Almighty God intended—yea, decreed—that they should do for themselves. The State does not exist as an insurance company to protect your property and mine. This Government exists not merely to maintain order but to develop in all of the people a national spirit of self-reliance and moral purpose directed to the attainment of the noblest aims, without which no people can endure.

There is too great a tendency to allow the wishes of the crowd to become the dominant element in our affairs. There is danger in being satisfied with glittering generalities and cheap shibboleths and in accepting the belief that differences in aptitude and ability are the result of too much freedom.

We must never permit the tyrannical creed, that an aggressive minority can deny life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to the majority. Oppression is no less hateful in the hands of the people than in the hands of the despot, and democracy will avail little if in the end it rescues us from the absolutism of the king only to hand us over to the absolutism of the mob.

PATRIOTISM GONE TO SEED.

Indifference in civic matters is patriotism gone to seed and indifference is the prolific parent of social unrest. If we would grow individually and help others to advance, we must each aim to achieve a proper objective. Work is the law of life. Not every man or woman can make a distinguished success, but every patriotic citizen can be industrious, helpful, and useful. No man and no woman has any right to make his or her contribution small by not doing his or her best.

We have all been, and many of us are, too passive, if not neutrally apathetic. We fall too willingly into the hands of those who tell us that the fault is not with ourselves but with our system of government. It is not until we worry financially and suffer personally and domestically that many of us realize our civic duties and appreciate how very sacred our political obligations really are. And then all too often, in a spirit of pique or downright jealousy, we do what we know is not good for the many and which is obviously injurious to ourselves. The American citizen who thinks and reflects for himself knows that efforts to reform the world at one fell swoop or to readjust the vast disarray that succeeds the cataclysm of war are predoomed to fail. And he realizes that the dissensions now existing are the unavoidable consequences of the most unusual causes. In fact, we all know that it is the suggestion of selfishness directed to susceptible minds that is preventing the people from accepting conditions as they are and beginning the slow process of building up again. Even the agitator knows this, and he also knows that the first requisite of citizenship is respect—serious, sympathetic respect—for the rights of others and the welfare of the community as a whole. We do not care enough about the priceless fabric of liberty transmitted to us by our forefathers as the most precious of heritages.

We are too much absorbed in our own private affairs. Our institutions have not been fairly tried, because whenever called upon to do something for them we always begin to make excuses. In our ease and our comfort we have forgotten that every gift is accompanied by an obligation to do. We need today not only admonition to diligence but exhortations to patriotism. Upon our dead selves as stepping stones we have not risen to higher things.

YOUTH IS NATION'S HOPE.

The spirit of all this must survive and express itself in the young men of the country. They must take up the flag our fathers bore and carry it forward to greater achievement. We must look to the young men of ideals, men yet unspoiled by the cynical touch of the selfishness of life, men full of courage, mentally equipped and capable of tremendous self-sacrifices. Neither the craven nor the coward need enlist. The race is to the swift and the battle to the strong—to the men and the women who never quit.

We should make it our duty to find such men among the mentally and the spiritually young, not among men hopelessly chained to the traditions of the past or heated by the fevers of immoral creeds; not among men who live in idle ease and wear soft raiment; not among men who cringe before power and grow morally flabby in the presence of luxury. We must look among those who, while they respect the past for the good it has produced, believe that the present is all important and the future hopeful. We must look to men who would rather be social exiles, having the testimony of an approving conscience, than be guests in kings' houses. We must look to men who, hearing, can and will answer the call of the hour.

This is our country and our home, and while we welcome, as we did in the past, those who wish to become American citizens, without any mental reservations, we have no room for those who believe that our ideals are false and that our civilization is a vain and empty pretense. This is the best government the world has ever seen for the obvious reason that it has worked out best in practice. There is no country in the world where the generations of the present are so little connected by blood with the generations that have molded and maintained our institutions. The descendants of the men and the women who founded this Government are almost lost in the European millions that have poured into our country during the past 50 years. The names of Washington and Lincoln are meaningless to many of our adopted citizens, because our language and our history have been no more to them than their history and their language have been to us.

MUST TEACH IDEALS.

It therefore becomes our grave and earnest duty to proclaim and teach that American institutions are the great bulwark behind which the forces of liberty are intrenched; that American history is but the story of the advanced guard; and that the American State rests upon the solid foundation of an ideal—the ideal of liberty, equality, and fraternity, emergent above the ruins of autocracy. This ideal—the ideal around which our national life has gathered—is the ideal for which our fathers died and which they embodied in the very core of this Nation, the American Constitution, which for generations has been the outward and the visible means by which the blessings of liberty have been secured. We must love these traditions and objects, not positively but actively; and we must never forget that if we approve politically what we condemn as prudent business men, we have not only failed civically but we have entered the wedge that will destroy us individually and nationally.

In our own small way we must defend as best we can the well-ordered liberty of our Constitution, never forgetting that it has secured a higher degree of happiness to a greater number of people over a longer period of time than any other device or scheme ever struck off by the brain or the purpose of man. If we do our work with enthusiasm, not for gain but because it is part of the plan; if we discharge our public duties, not for personal advancement but in obedience to the realization that comes from honest accomplishment and because the noblest chords in our soul thrill at the thought that we are American citizens intrusted with all that man has gained in his climb toward God; if we are true to our work, our country, our friends, and our firesides—then and then only will we burn incense to liberty and quit our obligations in full to the Commonwealth.

DUTY REMAINS.

After all is said and all is done, when the play is over and the player gone, the spirit of duty, patriotic duty, remains—not success for its own sake but the doing justice between man and man, our brother, and the stranger within our gates. There is nothing heroic in the discharge of duty. The incentive is often lacking, and at times it costs us the admiration and the respect we crave, but if we have simple faith in common chances and are content with our share and our part in the common hope, if we are true to our highest promptings in civic and national affairs, then we will best express our purpose and serve the spirit of our people.

Some one has said, "No just cause ever dies, and no evil cause ever lives in perpetuity." The sepulcher of the centuries is filled with the bones of dead evils, slain by man in his climb toward God. You may build, build in your pride and power as deep as the continent, build as high as the Himalayas, but if you build upon human wrong or human injustice the hour will come when somewhere the heart throb of a woman or the pulse of a babe will beat down the edifice you will rear, topple it in ruins about your nerveless, helpless feet. This is true, and we know it.

Yes, for thousands of years the God of our fathers kept this country hid from kaisers, anarchists, kings, and czars, and then in his own good time sent Columbus to lead the way, not for the craven and the coward, but for those who loved liberty actively and positively and who will always be ready to guard it and defend it. God has placed upon our heads a diadem and laid at our feet power and wealth beyond description and beyond calculation, but we must never forget that we take these gifts upon condition that justice and mercy shall hold the reins of power, and that the upward avenues of opportunity shall be free to all the people.

EACH HAS A DUTY.

Every American citizen has a duty to perform. It is a sacred, inescapable duty to see that unremitting warfare is carried on against every existing evil until the festering ulcer of corruption is cut out of the body politic. This is not a time for complacency but for earnest, energetic action. If you, my fellow citizens, fail your country now, then your independence, your morality, and your liberty are lost. If the people of this Nation fail now to do their duty in meeting and determining the issue which everyone knows is before us—the issue of honest, impartial, free, progressive, sane government—then reaction and the slow death of our free institutions will come, as did the decline and fall of Rome, when money and class—not justice—was power, and when brutal and aggressive minorities assumed to make the laws for all. Then men and women bartered their honors and exchanged their consciences for the golden gifts of a sordid world.

It will be a sad day if our people shirk responsibility and become unworthy. The nation that compromises with its conscience is feeble in resolution, fat in purse, and flabby in soul, and will soon have a lean, strong race knocking at its gates. If a reason be needed, why self-interest is not the safe means to a suitable end, it is found in the fact that expediency pays by the day, while principle always declares an eternal dividend. Human selfishness defeats its own ends and ultimately loses all it strives to obtain.

WORTHY SONS.

When Pericles came to make that most wonderful of all funeral orations over the dead bodies of those who died in the Peloponesian war, he did not describe the deeds of heriosm they had performed; he did not tell of the glories they had achieved—but he spoke of the Athens, not the Athens of brick and marble; not the far-famed Athens of garden and climate; not Athens with her beautiful sea kissing her beautiful feet; but Athens of developed intelligence, Athens of generous emotion, Athens where all men who had merit had opportunity; that Athens that gave to the world an example of intellectual glory, that lightened the world with her magnificent trophies of the mind; that Athens free, obedient to law, full of learning. That was the Athens.

And then the highest praise he could pay to the dead was that they were the sons of such a city, worthy to be born of such a people, and worthy to die for such a country. And such is the conception that I would put into your minds and leave with you of what America must be, what you and I must be, if this Government is to endure and realize the hopes of those who sacrificed their all for what we enjoy to-day. We must stand for something infinitely and splendidly great. It is vital to the human race, and the victory will not be won until we—we, the children of the purest Republican virtues, have developed the moral character, which renders liberty a power and never a danger.

WORTHY FATHERS.

Our fathers before us solved every problem that confronted them. They feared God and loved liberty, and, though they sleep in the narrow trenches of death, their imperishable spirit lives in the American citizen of to-day, and must live throughout the years to come. They lived and fought and died for the universal cause of liberty, and that we might be free and Christian civilization emerge to its final triumph. Their sons in France sought in sacrifice an opportunity that our flag might be unspotted and unstained. They, too, died that all men beneath its folds should bear no chains or live in dishonor while a single star shone in the firmament of God. We shall keep the faith with our dead—fathers, sons, and brothers—and if we break it they will not sleep, "though the poppies grow in Flanders' fields."

REDEDICATE OURSELVES.

And let us now again rededicate ourselves to the pledge that this Nation, hallowed with the tears and the hopes of our sacred dead, shall stand—stand and endure as it was built upon the foundations of long ago. Let us pledge that no group, whether it be called a Soviet, a syndicate, or a communism, whether it be composed of capitalists or the proletariat, whether it be made up of employers or employees, of millionaires or paupers, shall ever rule this country. And let us reaffirm that the ballot, not the bullet, shall express our national will, and that the torch and the bomb will only ignite the fires of patriotism at every hearthstone. And if we do—and I know we shall—then, because justice is greater than power, this Government will live to scatter the richest of human liberty to races yet unborn and advance the cause of civilization, that future generations may inhabit a happier world and God live in the souls of men.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the war is over, but the often unrecognized mental attitude of the American people is still to look to the Federal Government for the exercise in normal times of peace of the abnormal war-time powers essentially called into force for the very existence of the Nation created by the Constitution.

The prevailing antidote for any public evil to-day is either a new Federal law or an amendment to the Constitution itself. The first is bad, but the last is fatal to the existence of that form of government under which this Nation became great and under which, until the eighteenth amendment, it was contented.

What we need to-day is demobilization of bureaucracy, demobilization of the popular attitude "it ought to be a Federal amendment."

I am glad to call to your attention to-day the fact that one recent attempt at increasing bureaucracy has failed. An identical bill was introduced in the Senate and House to create from the prohibition unit in the Treasury Department an entirely independent prohibition bureau, outside of the regular organization of the executive departments of the Government, and responsible to no one but the President. This was intended to be a logical step toward the creation of an executive "department of prohibition," with a "secretary of prohibition" at its head. I am happy to say that this attempt failed in the Sixty-seventh Congress.

Hearings were held on this bill to establish an independent prohibition bureau before the Committee on the Judiciary beginning Monday, February 19, 1923. Mr. Kramer, of Ohio, formerly Federal Prohibition Commissioner, spoke in favor of the bill, and, as usual, Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel and legislative agent of the Anti-Saloon League, was in attendance. I appeared before the committee in opposition to the bill, and filed letters of protest from prominent business men in Baltimore—druggists and others in similar legitimate businesses—objecting to the conferring of autocratic power on the Federal Prohibition Commissioner as provided by the proposed bill. Under the bill as offered the salary of the Federal Prohibition Commissioner was to be increased to $10,000, and about a half million dollars more added this year to the amount already appropriated for expenditure by him under the name of law enforcement. Again I repeat, I am very glad that this attempt at increased bureaucracy in the Federal Government failed. I think this is an indication of the coming return of normalcy on the question of the eighteenth amendment.

In this connection I desire to file with the House the last phases of the inquiry to which I called the attention of the House on August 14, 1922.

On April 26, 1922, I requested from the Federal Prohibition Commissioner a ruling on the meaning of the word "nonintoxicating" as applied to cider and fruit juices which were exempted from the penalties of the Volstead Act by Title II, section 29. The Federal Prohibition Commissioner first advised me that his office would not consider as "intoxicating" cider or other fruit juices for use in the home containing not more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume. He later rescinded this ruling, and I have not up to this time been able to get any further ruling from him on this subject.

On page 11457 of the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 16, 1922, I presented for your consideration the letter to me on July 3, 1922, from the Federal Prohibition Commissioner. I thereafter continued my efforts to find out what the word "nonintoxicating" in Title II, section 29, of the Volstead Act means.

I made inquiry of the Secretary of the Treasury, not being able to obtain the information from his subordinate, the Federal Prohibition Commissioner. I received the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury under date of September 22, 1922:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, September 22, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HILL: Your letter of September 16 has been referred to Mr. J. J. Britt, who is the legal adviser of the Prohibition Commissioner, with the request that he construe for Commissioner Haynes section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act.

You state in your letter that this request was made "in order that the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland may cease to encourage law violations by advising my constituents that 'the present regulations made in pursuance of the Volstead Act permit the farmer to have cider and let it ferment and become intoxicating, allows him to drink it in his home or give it to his friends when they drop in.'" Mr. Britt is not the legal adviser of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, and the prohibition unit has no authority to advise the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland on legal matters or to control its actions.

A sincere effort is being made to enforce the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, and the commissioner will be advised as to the meaning of the section to which you call attention.

Yours very truly,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

Upon receipt of this letter I wrote to the Federal Prohibition Commissioner as follows:

SEPTEMBER 26, 1922.

The FEDERAL PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated September 22, 1922, reading as follows:

"Your letter of September 16 has been referred to Mr. J. J. Britt, who is the legal adviser of the Prohibition Commissioner, with the request that he construe for Commissioner Haynes section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act.

"You state in your letter that this request was in order that the Anti-Saloon League of Maryind may cease to encourage law violations by advising my constituents that 'the present regulations made in pursuance of the Volstead Act permit the farmer to have cider and let it ferment and become intoxicating, allows him to drink it in his home, or give it to his friends when they drop in.' Mr. Britt is not the legal adviser of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, and the prohibition unit has no authority to advise the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland on legal matters or to control its actions.

"A sincere effort is being made to enforce the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, and the commissioner will be advised as to the meaning of the section to which you call attention."

Will you be good enough to advise me whether your legal adviser, in accordance with the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, has advised you as to the construction of section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act, and tell me what regulations you have issued as a result of such advice for the enforcement of this section, which relates to the alcoholic content of cider and nonintoxicating fruit juices? I have been endeavoring to obtain this information since April 26, and will be obliged to you for a prompt response.

Yours very truly,

JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Member of Congress.

I received from him in reply the following communication:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FEDERAL PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER,
BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, September 29, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HILL: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of September 26, 1922, in which inquiry is made as to whether or not, at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. J. J. Britt, the counsel of the prohibition unit, has rendered any opinion to the Commissioner of Prohibition as to the proper interpretation of section 29 of Title II of the national prohibition act, pertaining to the making of nonintoxicating cider and other fruit juices, exclusively for use in the home, which would serve as a basis for regulations on the subject, or instructions to the head of the Anti-Saloon League of the State of Maryland.

In regard thereto you are informed that from a careful examination of the files of this office, it does not appear that Mr. Britt has rendered any such opinion and no new regulations have been issued on the subject, or information furnished the head of the Anti-Saloon League of the State of Maryland pursuant to such opinion.

You have heretofore been furnished with full information and such regulations as have been issued on this subject and there has been no departure therefrom since you were informed by letters in regard thereto. The information heretofore furnished you is such as is furnished to all persons interested in the subject, and is in accordance with the views of the best-informed officials as to the proper interpretation of section 29 of Title II of the national prohibition act.

Every effort has been made by the officials of this office to so interpret the law as to give full force and effect to the national prohibition act, and in accordance with the intent of the Congress of the United States as determined from the statute.

Sincerely yours,

R. A. HAYNES,
Prohibition Commissioner.

This letter contained the definite statement that the Federal Prohibition Commissioner's attorney had not yet rendered an opinion as to the meaning of the word "nonintoxicating" in the exemption it conferred upon the dwellers in rural communities, whose votes were sought by the provisions of Title II, section 29, of the Volstead Act; and so, on October 9, 1922, I made the further following inquiry:

[Fast day telegram.]

712 KEYSER BUILDING,
Baltimore, Md., October 9, 1922.

Mr. ROY A. HAYNES,
Prohibition Commissioner, Treasury Department,
Washington, D. C.:

Referring to your letter September 29, please wire me to-day, 712 Keyser Building, Baltimore, whether, in accordance with instructions of Secretary of Treasury, Mr. Britt has rendered you opinion and you can advise me of proper interpretation of section 29, Title II, of national prohibition act.

JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Member of Congress.

In answer to this telegram I received the following response from Mr. Jones, Acting Prohibition Commissioner:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 9, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
712 Keyser Building, Baltimore, Md.:

Question of legal status of cider and unfermented fruit juices submitted to Attorney General by Secretary Mellon. Opinion not yet handed down.

JONES, Acting Prohibition Commissioner.

Desiring to continue this interesting investigation with the ultimate hope of obtaining a specific ruling as to the meaning of the word "nonintoxicating," I made further inquiry of the Treasury Department, and in response received this telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 20, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Baltimore, Md.:

Your wire 19th. Britt was directed to construe section 29, Title II, for Commissioner Haynes. He preferred to have Attorney General pass on matter and promptly referred it to that office. Department Justice has this day been requested to expedition opinion.

MELLON, Secretary.

I was naturally delighted that the matter had been finally placed before the Department of Justice in such an urgent manner, and on the same date that I received this telegram I sent the following telegram to the Attorney General:

BALTIMORE, October 20, 1922.

The honorable the ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.:

The Secretary of the Treasury advises me under date of the 20th that he has requested from you a construction of section 29, Title II, of Volstead Act for the information of Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes, concerning which I asked you for an opinion some time ago. The Secretary of the Treasury advises me that he has requested you to expedite this opinion. Will you please wire me, Keyser Building, Baltimore, at my expense, copy of your opinion for use at meeting to-morrow night? Under section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act, can cider of an alcoholic content of 2.75 per cent be legally made and used as a beverage in the home?

JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Member of Congress.

The reply to this inquiry was immediate and specific, and was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 20, 1922.

JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Keyser Building, Baltimore, Md.:

Opinion re alcoholic content cider not yet rendered.

DAUGHERTY.

Desiring to be able to inform my constituents of the meaning of the Volstead Act, and fully realizing that law enforcement is impossible unless a clear understanding of the act is obtainable, on March 2 I introduced the following resolution in the House of Representatives:

House Resolution 572.

Whereas there is considerable demand for a compilation of the rules and regulations now in force relating to the enforcement of national prohibition: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Prohibition Commissioner be directed to transmit to the House copies of all such rules and regulations now in force.

Resolved further, That the Government Printing Office be authorized to print 50,000 copies of such rules and regulations, and that 100 copies be allotted to each Member of the House.

This resolution was a House resolution and did not require action by the Senate. I felt confident that if the Federal Prohibition Commissioner should telephone to Mr. VOLSTEAD, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, requesting action, that this resolution would be immediately and promptly passed, and so I sent by special messenger a copy of this resolution to the Federal Prohibition Commissioner, my letter to him being as follows:

MARCH 3, 1923.

Mr. ROY A. HAYNES,
Federal Prohibition Commissioner,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I inclose herewith resolution which I have introduced in the House of Representatives directing you to transmit to the House copies of all rules and regulations in force relating to the enforcement of the national prohibition act. This being purely a House resolution, concurrence of the Senate is not necessary, and I am hoping to get this resolution through to-day or to-morrow, since I can not conceive any serious opposition to advising the public of the rules of your office, concerning which there is much uncertainty at the present time.

Since April, 1921, I have been trying to obtain from you a ruling as to what the word "nonintoxicating" means in Title II, section 29, of the Volstead Act, and what are the regulations of your office concerning the amount of alcohol permitted in cider and homemade wines before the same are to be considered "intoxicating" under the Volstead Act.

The Secretary of the Treasury advised me that he had asked the Attorney General for a ruling on this subject. The Attorney General advised me he had not yet rendered such an opinion. Could you advise me if such an opinion has been rendered as yet and send me a copy of the opinion?

If, due to the press of business in the closing days of the House, the inclosed resolution (H. Res. 572) does not pass, I hope you will send me a compilation of the rules and regulations referred to in this resolution.

It is impossible for the general public to obey the Volstead Act unless they know what the act means. I therefore urge you to use your influence with the Judiciary Committee of the House, to which this resolution has been referred, for action on this resolution to-day or to-morrow. I am sending you this letter by special messenger.

Yours very truly,

JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Member of Congress.

I deeply regret, and I know that you will deeply regret, that the Federal Prohibition Commissioner did not use his influence with this House to have my resolution passed. I received from him under date of March 5 a letter on the subject, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FEDERAL PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER,
BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, March 5, 1923.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I acknowledge receipt of your communication of March 3, delivered by special messenger, calling for a copy of all the rules and regulations of this unit and referring to the requested opinion of the Attorney General as to the allowable per cent of alcoholic strength in cider and unfermented fruit juices, and in reply have to say that I shall be very glad to have assembled and sent to you a copy of all existing regulations and decisions governing the administrative business of this unit. As to the opinion of the Attorney General, it has not yet been rendered, but I am to-day informally advised that it may be expected soon, and as early as it is received and printed I shall be glad to furnish you a copy of it also.

Very truly yours,

R. A. HAYNES,
Prohibition Commissioner.

I note with great interest that the long-expected opinion of the Attorney General at the close of the Sixty-seventh Congress still remains unrendered. I note also with regret that neither you nor I will be able in these closing days of the Congress to advise our constituents as to what the word "nonintoxicating" means as applied to cider and fruit juices in Title II, section 29, of the Volstead Act. I have done my duty in seeking the necessary information and I report to you the results. Perhaps in the next Congress we shall be able to learn the alcoholic content of the beverages which may be legally enjoyed by the dwellers of the rural communities of America.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, under the permission of the House to extend my remarks, I desire to review briefly the legislative history of the Government's Muscle Shoals enterprises—water-power and nitrate plants. In doing so I realize that my remarks would be extended quite too long if I should undertake to review in any detail the history of the Government's Muscle Shoals enterprises from the date of the national defense act, passed in 1916, authorizing these enterprises, to November 11, 1918, the date of the armistice.

MUSCLE SHOALS PLANTS NECESSARY FOR MILITARY PREPAREDNESS.

The lessons of the war and its enormous consumption of nitrogen for explosives make it clear that to criticize the policy of the Government in establishing nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and developing water power for the national defense of the country is to make a mockery of preparedness for war. No nation can claim that it is prepared to defend itself unless it is prepared with a supply of its own nitrogen for explosives.

Therefore I will review briefly the Muscle Shoals case from the date of the armistice to the adjournment of the Sixty-seventh Congress. Right at the outset our national pride suffers humiliation, for we find that the United States engineers advised Congress in reports on Muscle Shoals that it would require about three years, or possibly four, to build Dam No. 2 and complete its power development.

The order for building Dam No. 2 was issued February 25, 1918, and there was a brief suspension of work on account of war demands for labor and material, but work on the dam was promptly resumed after the signing of the armistice.

In the hearings on Muscle Shoals we find our engineers now advise us that power will not be ready for service at Dam No. 2 earlier than 1925, and if power is ready then we shall have been seven years building the dam and completing the power development.

UNITED STATES OUTDONE BY CANADA AT QUEENSTON.

Every sentiment of national pride is humiliated when we contrast a very similar power development at Queenston, Province of Ontario, Canada, which was started at about the same time as Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, for at Queenston on the Niagara River the Canadians have had 150,000 horsepower of their development in service for nearly a year. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadians at their Queenston power development—about equal to our development at Dam No. 2, Muscle Shoals—can get 150,000 horsepower in service in about four years, when at Muscle Shoals we take about seven years to get 100,000 horsepower, perhaps, in service? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that we have failed to agree upon a policy at Muscle Shoals.

The construction work on Dam No. 2 had been about 30 per cent completed in the fall of 1920 when the United States engineers requested of Congress that $10,000,000 be appropriated in the sundry civil bill during the last session of the Sixty-sixth Congress. This appropriation was refused, the leaders of the majority in the House contending that further investigation should be made of the Government's water power and nitrate enterprises.

MAJORITY RESPONSIBLE FOR DELAY.

The appropriation failed because the responsible majority of the House refused to adopt a policy at Muscle Shoals. All of the facts inviting the responsible majority of the House to adopt a policy were well understood, and Congress was well advised by the United States engineers.

With the failure of the appropriation of $10,000,000 the work was shut down at Dam No. 2, with the loss of a year's time and a money loss estimated at more than a million dollars.

The present Secretary of War upon taking office made public announcement that he would not favor sending any more "good money after bad" at Muscle Shoals; but if anyone would propose to the United States to pay a fair rate of interest on the future cost of completing the locks, dam, and power houses at Dam No. 2, he would favor their completion.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS ASKS FOR BIDS.

Under instructions of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers on April 2, 1921, sent out proposals to those who might possibly be interested which read as follows:

The Secretary of War has directed me to ascertain what arrangements can be made to derive a reasonable return upon the investment if the United States completes the dam and hydraulic power plant at Muscle Shoals, Tennessee River.

If you are interested I would be pleased to discuss the matter with you at this office at the earliest date that may be mutually determined.

It is desired to develop the matter and come to a conclusion at as early a date as possible.

In answer to this invitation a number of power companies—notably the Alabama Power Co.—explained why they could not make an offer to complete the dam and power development at Dam No. 2, and four power companies in a joint statement to the Chief of Engineers declared that the power development at Dam No. 2 was not feasible; that the secondary—or irregular and unreliable—power was so large a part of the total development as to prohibit investment in the same.

FORD OFFER HELD UP FOR SEVEN MONTHS—ALABAMA POWER CO. OFFER HELD SIX DAYS.

Among those invited to propose was Henry Ford, and his proposal was signed and sent to the War Department on July 8, 1921.

The Secretary of War held Mr. Ford's offer under consideration until February 1, 1922, when he transmitted Mr. Ford's offer to Congress—nearly seven months after its receipt by the Secretary.

On February 15, 1922, the Alabama Power Co. reversed its position, and in the face of that company's letter to the Chief of Engineers explaining that the company could not make an offer in response to his invitation, they submitted a proposal for Dam No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary promptly transmitted the Alabama Power Co.'s offer to Congress six days after its receipt—not six months, but six days after its receipt!

The partiality of the Secretary of War to the Alabama Power Co. is understood, but it is difficult to understand at all, Mr. Speaker, how the Secretary of War could withhold Mr. Ford's offer from Congress for seven months when Mr. Ford proposed in his offer to make 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen at nitrate plant No. 2 and send the Alabama Power Co.'s offer to Congress in six days when that company did not propose to produce any fertilizer at all. We feel all the more wonder and astonishment at the Secretary's delay in sending the Ford offer to Congress and his promptness in sending the Alabama Power Co.'s offer to Congress in six days, when the Secretary stated at a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs that he would favor the Ford offer if he thought Mr. Ford would produce fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. This Mr. Ford does agree to do, but the Alabama Power Co. made no offer at all to produce fertilizers, and its president stated to the Agricultural Committee of the Senate that his company was not prepared to go into the fertilizer business at Muscle Shoals.

TWO POLICIES OF CONGRESS AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

Congress definitely defined in section 124 of the national defense act of 1916 two policies with reference to the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals: First, that these plants should be built to provide a supply of nitrogen for explosives in time of war; and, second, to provide fertilizers for the farmers' needs in times of peace. Nearly five years have now passed since the armistice and still the Sixty-seventh Congress adjourns without voting on the Ford offer. Though it is over 18 months since Mr. Ford made his proposal, we adjourn, Mr. Speaker, without accepting or rejecting the offer which the Government invited Mr. Ford to make.

ADMINISTRATIVE AND LEGISLATIVE CHRONOLOGY.

The administrative and legislative steps taken with reference to Muscle Shoals since Mr. Ford's offer may be stated by dates as follows:

July 8, 1921. Proposal by Henry Ford delivered to Secretary of War and its terms made public.

February 1, 1922. Ford offer transmitted by Secretary of War to the Speaker of the House, nearly seven months after its receipt.

February 8, 1922. Hearings begun before Committee on Military Affairs of the House exactly seven months after Ford proposal was received by the Secretary of War.

February 15, 1922. Proposal of Alabama Power Co. made to Secretary of War.

February 16, 1922. Senate hearings begun on Norris bill and on Ford and other offers for Muscle Shoals, with no hearings in the Senate from February 17 to April 10.

February 21, 1922. Alabama Power Co.'s proposal sent to Speaker of the House—six days after its receipt.

June 9, 1922. House Committee on Military Affairs, after hearings, reported in favor of Ford offer.

June 20, 1922. Kearns minority report issued from House Committee on Military Affairs.

June 24, 1922. House adopts Senate amendment for appropriation of $7,500,000 to continue work on Dam No. 2 with James amendment to postpone use of appropriation until October 1, 1922.

July 20, 1922. Norris report from Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry issued on Muscle Shoals.

August 4, 1922. Ladd report from Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry issued on Ford offer for Muscle Shoals.

February 15, 1923. House Committee on Rules refuses to bring out rule to permit a vote on the Ford offer.

March 4, 1923. Adjournment of Sixty-seventh Congress without action on the Ford offer, without adopting any policy at Muscle Shoals.

NO POLICY YET ESTABLISHED AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

It is not denied that some of the Members of the House—some of its leaders—have contended that additional appropriations in the Army bill for Dam No. 2 of $6,998,000 for carrying on the work there, and the authorization of $10,501,000 additional for continuing contracts is sufficient as an administrative and congressional policy at the present time for protecting and promoting the Government's power and nitrate plant developments in the interest of the public. But, Mr. Speaker, these appropriations establish no policy at all; they establish neither a water-power policy nor a fertilizer policy at Muscle Shoals.

It is now timely to inquire, it is very practical and pertinent to ask, What has the failure of the administration and Congress to adopt a water-power and fertilizer policy at Muscle Shoals cost the taxpayers of the country? What have the taxpayers lost and what have the taxpayers gained, what have the farmers lost and what have they gained?

FAILURE TO ADOPT A POLICY HAS COST $5,000,000.

I measure my words, Mr. Speaker, and after careful consideration and deliberation I declare to the House that the failure of the administration and Congress to adopt a policy at Muscle Shoals, now nearly five years after the armistice, has cost the taxpayers of this country not less than $5,000,000. The farmers of the country have gained nothing, but have been denied by the Rules Committee and the leaders of the House that which the farmers of the country appealed to the House to give them—a vote on the Ford offer and its acceptance.

MAJORITY WISHED TO VOTE ON FORD OFFER.

That a majority of the Members of the House earnestly and righteously desired to vote on the Ford offer before adjournment, and to accept it or reject it, there are too many evidences in the RECORD to leave any doubt. The decisive majority of 37—144 yeas, 107 nays—in favor of the James amendment on June 24, 1922, postponing the availability of the appropriation of $7,500,000 for Dam No. 2, had no other purpose than to settle a policy at Muscle Shoals. There has been criticism of the action of the House in adopting the James amendment suspending this appropriation until October 1, 1922. Some good people in my own State, Mr. Speaker, have criticized the solid vote of the Members from Alabama in the House in favor of the postponement of the appropriation. But, Mr. Speaker, the vote of the Alabama delegation in the House in favor of the James amendment was sound, was logical, was constructive. Every Member of the House who voted for the James amendment voted for a policy and in fact voted for the Ford offer. To have voted against the James amendment was to have voted against the Ford offer and against adopting a policy at Muscle Shoals.

PURPOSE OF THE JAMES AMENDMENT.

The Alabama Members of the House in voting for the James amendment desired to have three policies settled: First, to assure the completion of both Dams Nos. 2 and 3 and complete the navigation improvement of the Muscle Shoals section of the Tennessee River; second, to adopt a permanent water-power policy at Muscle Shoals; and third, and above all, to secure the production of fertilizers at nitrate plant No. 2 by giving the House the chance and the time to vote on and to accept the Ford offer.

The vote of the Members of the House in favor of the James amendment was intelligent, was constructive, was creative, was economic. The Members from Alabama showed by their vote that they were above seeking and voting for a mere appropriation for continuing the work on the Wilson Dam without a policy; they were in favor of settling a national policy at Muscle Shoals. We Members from Alabama cleared ourselves by our vote on the James amendment of any suspicion or feeling on the part of any Member of the House that the Alabama Members considered Muscle Shoals, or desired Muscle Shoals to be considered, as a local question.

Mr. Speaker, some of the so-called arguments, some of the trumped-up reasons for delaying an established legislative policy at Muscle Shoals have been amusing, some have been subtle, some pathetic, and nearly all absurd.

NO SUBSIDY TO FORD AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

One of the objections proposed against the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is that to do so will grant him a subsidy. The supporters of the Ford offer emphatically deny that its acceptance by Congress would grant Mr. Ford a subsidy. There are no facts, nor policies, which Congress has ever adopted which will sustain the contention that Mr. Ford has asked for a subsidy or that there is any subsidy of any sort contained in a single provision of his offer.

However, we have heard much of subsidies of late, and the advocates of the Ford offer, denying that any subsidy will be granted Mr. Ford by the acceptance of his offer, nevertheless are willing to contrast the ship subsidy as passed by the House with the Ford offer as a subsidy, if by any pretext or legislative invention it can be considered as a subsidy.

The President in his address to Congress on February 28, 1923, urging the adoption of the ship subsidy, used this expression:

> But the nation-wide desire to restore our merchant marine has outlived all defeats and every costly failure.

The advocates of the Ford offer would paraphrase this sentence as follows:

> But the nation-wide desire to restore our soil fertility will outlive all defeats and every costly failure—because the Sixty-eighth Congress will accept the Ford offer. The acceptance of the Ford offer is delayed, not defeated. The ship subsidy, as proposed by its authors, was defeated, not delayed.

TWEEDLEDUM AND TWEEDLEDEE.

Private enterprise, American initiative as a rule, strenuously opposes subsidies, but not, it seems, in the case of the ship subsidy, for when private enterprise is invited to buy our war-built ships and run them, they ask for Government credit and a Government subsidy. So we find that subsidies are favored or opposed according to whose ox is gored, and when Henry Ford is invited to make a bid for the Government's power developments at Muscle Shoals and the nitrate plants there, and operate them in the production of fertilizers, and offers to do so, private interests howl that the acceptance of the Ford offer is to give him a subsidy.

Private interests do not object to the appropriation of $500,000 to help free the rubber trade of the country from British domination. Yet when Henry Ford offers to free the farmer from British control and price-fixing of Chilean nitrates, private interests protest and indeed defeat action by Congress on Henry Ford's offer and call it a subsidy.

COMPARISON OF SHIP SUBSIDY AND FORD OFFER.

In the case of the ship subsidy it was proposed to take the Government out of the shipping business; those who favor the acceptance of the Ford offer propose to take the Government out of the power and fertilizer business. The annual cost to the Government as provided in the shipping bill passed by the House would be over $40,000,000 for 10 years; but the annual cost to the Government if Mr. Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is accepted, will be approximately nothing. The ship subsidy bill passed by the House calls for an expenditure of $125,000,000 which the Government is to furnish as a loan to the ship operators at 2 per cent, and then the bill provides for at least $41,500,000 annually for 10 years and gives this amount to the ship operators as a subsidy to enable them to repay the loan. Mr. Ford, on the other hand, proposes to pay 4 per cent on the future cost of the dams whatever it may be, say $42,000,000, for example, and pays back in 100 years the total future investment of the Government in the dams and pays for the maintenance and operation of the dams and locks as well as the power houses and their equipment.

Shall the Nation's merchant marine be subsidized and agriculture and its fertilizer necessities be ignored and no policy adopted at Muscle Shoals to give aid?

GOVERNMENT AIDS TO TRANSPORTATION AND IRRIGATION.

The Federal Government has aided and supported with its credit a variety of enterprises and projects. The United States participated in aiding and financing the pioneer railroads of the country and has made land grants to aid in the construction of railroads, wagon roads, canal and river improvements. In the aid of wagon roads the Government has issued land grants of 3,245,431 acres. In the aid of construction of canals, Government land grants have been made to the extent of 4,597,668 acres, and in the aid of river improvements the Government has issued land grants amounting to 2,245,252 acres, while Government grants in aid of railroad construction have reached a total of 158,293,736 acres. The Government's reclamation of the arid West is both a paternal and an internal improvement, but essentially a cooperative arrangement between the Government and private interests. In our reclamation projects the Government has expended more than $200,000,000, and if Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals can be classed as a subsidy, then the reclamation of the arid lands of the West can be classed as a subsidy.

In the field of Government subsidies, either by direct appropriation or by extending of credit, transportation has been the pet of the Nation. In addition to Government credit and in addition to lavish donations of public lands by the National Government, large amounts of land have been given in aid of transportation improvements by counties, townships, cities, and villages. Besides these huge land grants to railroads, waterways, public roads, enormous both in area and in value, our railroads have received financial assistance from sources ranging from the National Treasury down through the States, counties, and cities to the donations of pioneers striving to carve out homes in the forests or to turn the prairies into farms. At one time the Pacific railways were indebted to the United States Government for bonds and unpaid interest to the extent of $130,000,000, which in due course was nearly all paid back.

$1,200,000,000 FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS WITH NO RETURN OF EITHER PRINCIPAL OR INTEREST.

To the "aids, gifts, grants, and donations," as a help to railway transportation, we may add our appropriations for rivers and harbors, aggregating since the beginning approximately $1,200,000,000, and also include the cost of the Panama Canal of approximately $400,000,000.

SHALL AGRICULTURE BE TURNED DOWN?

The basic industry of the country is agriculture. Shall it be aided? Shall Henry Ford be refused the opportunity at Muscle Shoals to aid it?

OBJECTORS TO FORD OFFER OBJECTED TO GOVERNMENT OPERATION ALSO.

The opposition to the acceptance of the Ford offer, constantly unreasonable and selfish, has failed at all times in consistency. Members of the House will remember that when the appropriation of $10,000,000 was proposed in the sundry civil bill, in March, 1921, we were flooded with propaganda against granting this appropriation. One example of this propaganda bore this title: "Arguments against the Construction of the Wilson Dam for the Operation of Nitrate Plant No. 2." The propaganda with this title was issued in a booklet by the ammonium-sulphate interests of the country. The same interests opposed both the building of the dam to operate nitrate plant No. 2 and the operation of that nitrate plant by the Government, insisting that if the Government operated the nitrate plant it would unfairly and destructively invade the field of private enterprise. But these same ammonium-sulphate interests oppose the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer, though he agrees to operate the nitrate plants of the Government at Muscle Shoals as a private enterprise.

GOVERNMENT RETAINS OWNERSHIP OF DAMS AND RIGHT TO USE NITRATE PLANTS.

In the ship subsidy as passed by the House the Government parts with its ships, but at Muscle Shoals under the Ford proposal the Government will not part with its ownership of the dams and their power developments, nor does the Government part with an assured supply to meet its needs of nitrogen for explosives in time of war. Mr. Ford guarantees all these for 100 years at his own expense and as a private enterprise. Yet, with all the guaranties and all of the assurances and all of the protection of the Government in the Ford offer, it has been declared by a Member of this House that—

The Ford offer unamended would represent one of the boldest and most brazen daylight robberies that has ever occurred in the history of this country.

FARMERS NOT FOOLED.

We are also warned that the farmers are being fooled by Henry Ford's offer. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], however, in his able address to the House answers as follows:

The farmers fooled! No; they have been buncoed by the majority leader of the House and the chairman of the Rules Committee.

The farmers and their friends in Congress challenge the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] and others who claim that the Ford offer is a "robbery" to tell the country why the leaders of the House, who are opposed to the acceptance of the Ford offer, refused to give the House an opportunity to vote on this proposed Ford "robbery." Why did they not vote on his offer and reject it if it is a "robbery"?

OPPOSITION WAS AFRAID TO LET FORD OFFER COME TO A VOTE.

The opposition to the Ford offer in the House, protected by its leaders, was afraid to let the Ford offer come to a vote; they knew it would be accepted. "For methods that are dark and tricks that are vain" the opposition to the Ford offer has shown skill and cunning in their distress.

COMMITTEE "TO DEFEND WATER POWER ACT" REALLY AN ORGANIZATION TO FIGHT FORD OFFER.

Take the case, if you please, Mr. Speaker, of the National Committee for the Defense of the Water Power Act. Here we find the Pinchot conservation lions lying down with the water-power company lambs. The ostensible purpose of the national defense committee, its personnel being composed of some of the most distinguished men in our country, was, as the committee announces, the defense of the Federal water power act, but the late activities and the recent influence of the members of this committee have all been directed against the acceptance of the Ford offer. In a daily paper in my State, Mr. Speaker, on November 1 we find as headlines to a Washington dispatch in regard to the national committee the following:

Strong body to fight Ford bid. Committee is formed at Capitol to take leading part in battle.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS BEING EXPLOITED.

Upon reading this and believing that members of the National Committee for the Defense of the Federal Water Power Act were being exploited by the power companies to defeat the acceptance of the Ford offer by Congress, I called on one of the most distinguished members of the national committee and explained the Ford offer to him. This member of the national committee, the Hon. John Barton Payne, sent in his resignation as a member of the committee and stated to me that he was not opposed to the Ford offer. I am informed that at least one other member of the committee has resigned, and I am not surprised. Indeed, I believe that a majority of the members of the national committee would resign if they knew that their names are being used in support of propaganda against the acceptance of the Ford offer and not really in defense of the Federal power act. I venture to suggest to the members of this House that Congress can defend the Federal water power act when it needs defense, for Congress passed the Federal power act.

MISLEADING PROPAGANDA AS TO LACK OF REGULATION OF MR. FORD.

One of the delusive arguments which the secretary of the national committee, Mr. Philip P. Wells, has sent in propaganda to Members of this House is that Mr. Ford, if he gets Muscle Shoals, will be able to use and sell the power without any regulation of rates. It is amazing that the distinguished gentlemen composing the national committee would permit such a statement to be sent to Congress by any of its members, or allow such a statement to be promulgated and published to the country by its secretary. There is not a justice of the peace in my State, there is not a lawyer in the country but knows that Henry Ford, if his offer is accepted, must abide by the laws of the State of Alabama in all of his operations at Muscle Shoals, and in distributing and selling power for utility purposes his rates for such power will be fixed and regulated by the Alabama Public Service Commission. Congress can not take away the right of the State of Alabama to regulate and control Henry Ford's power rates, and the power act provides that when any State has a regulatory body to fix and control power rates then the Federal Power Commission can have neither control nor regulation of the rates.

As for power used in his own operations, the Federal power Act does not undertake to place any definite limit on the profit that can be made from its use, but Mr. Ford goes further than the Power Act and voluntarily limits the profit on his principal product—fertilizer—to 8 per cent on the fair, actual, annual cost of production.

MISREPRESENTATIONS AS TO TAXATION.

The propaganda of the national committee also claims that Henry Ford will escape taxation at Muscle Shoals if his offer is accepted by Congress. When Henry Ford establishes any business whatever at Muscle Shoals that business can be taxed under the tax laws of the State of Alabama, and I trust the Members of this House will accept my assurance that the legislature of my State will see that Henry Ford pays taxes at Muscle Shoals if Congress accepts his offer.

It came with poor grace, Mr. Speaker, from the secretary of the national committee, Mr. Wells, when in his interview in the Wall Street Journal of November 13 he is quoted as saying:

Alabama Power Co.'s proposals comply fully with the water power act—

Said Mr. Wells—

and are much better than the Ford offer.

COMMITTEE SECRETARY AN ALLY OF ALABAMA POWER CO.

This statement by Secretary Wells, of the national committee, uncovers the nigger in the woodpile, and this statement also will justify the conclusion by the Members of this House that as Mr. Wells, its secretary, can be assumed to speak for the committee, it is not now engaged in an organized effort to defend the water power act, but is allied with and engaged by the Alabama Power Co. and its allies to defeat the Ford offer.

I insert the following letter sent out for the committee by its secretary, Mr. Wells, to power companies asking for financial aid to meet the "necessary expenses" of the committee:

Your cooperation is earnestly solicited for the defense of the Federal water power act of 1920. It is the best product to date of the conservation movement which was begun under the inspiration of President Roosevelt's leadership and has been continued under his successors. It prevents monopoly and safeguards public rights, yet the hydroelectric industry says of it through the Electrical World: "It is workable and just."

Nevertheless it is under attack in the courts and in Congress. For a time it must be defended, as the national forest laws had to be defended, until it becomes firmly established as an indispensable part of our economic system. Therefore this committee has been formed with the personnel and officers above named. Your participation in meeting the necessary expenses is earnestly solicited.

A subscription blank, addressed envelope, and detailed statement of the merits of the act and the doings of its enemies are inclosed. Please subscribe for such sum as you think proper, making your subscription payable to the Washington Loan & Trust Co., treasurer, and mail it in the addressed envelope to said company, which will make due acknowledgment of receipt.

Does the committee expect to employ lawyers to fight the suit of the State of New York against the power act now in the Supreme Court? Of course not.

COMMITTEE'S ACTIVITIES DO NOT FOOL THE FARMERS.

And do the members of the National Committee for the Defense of the Water Power Act think that the committee is fooling the farmers under the pretext of defending the national power act? No, indeed; the farmers are not fooled by such power interests and companies as the Electric Bond & Share Co. of New York, whose president, Mr. S. Z. Mitchell, is the dominant director of the Alabama Power Co. The farmers well understand that when Mr. Mitchell and his company contribute to the "necessary expenses" of the national committee, the Electric Bond & Share Co.'s contribution will be a part of the "necessary expenses" to defeat the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer by Congress.

WHAT THEY FAIL TO TELL.

The national committee, in sending out its propaganda against the Ford offer, fails to tell the public fairly that Mr. Ford has agreed in his offer to limit his profit to 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production of the fertilizers he produces at Muscle Shoals.

In placing this limitation on the profits he makes on his principal product, Henry Ford is going further to protect the interests of the public than any licensee under the Federal power act, for no such licensee is definitely limited as to his profits when he uses the power for his own private manufacturing purposes.

Mr. Speaker, where can we find another case of a manufacturer or any corporation proposing that the sale price of the products from his plant shall be regulated and limited to 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production?

WHY NOT SOME LEGISLATION TO BRING THE ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA UNDER FEDERAL POWER ACT?

Does the Aluminum Co. of America, on the Little Tennessee River, with its proposed water-power development of some 400,000 horsepower, propose to limit any part of its aluminum production to 8 per cent profit? And not only this, Mr. Speaker, when the national committee objects to Henry Ford's offer for a lease of 100 years of the water power at Muscle Shoals, does the committee ask Congress to bring the Aluminum Co. of America under the provisions, control, and regulations of the national water power act? No; the committee appears to be willing to have the Aluminum Co. of America on the Little Tennessee River in perpetuity—not for 50 years, not for a hundred years, but forever.

SOME THINGS THE COMMITTEE HAS OVERLOOKED.

The national committee insists that Mr. Ford in his offer should make his proposition under the terms of the Federal water power act, and the committee, along with others, complains that Mr. Ford will use nearly all the power at Muscle Shoals for his own manufacturing purposes and without any regulation. But, Mr. Speaker, wonderful to be told—and yet not so wonderful, either—the national committee enters no protest when the power commission awards Henry Ford a license for 50 years for the Government's dam at Troy, N. Y., on the Hudson River for his sole use, with the prices of none of the products of his plants regulated. And the national committee and its secretary, with offices in the Woodward Building in Washington, does not raise his voice and call the committee together when the power commission a few days since granted Henry Ford a license for 50 years for the Government's dam at St. Paul, on the Mississippi River. Mr. Ford is to use all of this power from the Twin City Dam for his own and sole manufacturing use, if Mr. Ford elects to do so, and for 50 years. Evidently, Mr. Speaker, there is no wrong—the public's welfare will be protected—when Mr. Ford uses the power at the St. Paul Dam for his own use for 50 years, but the national committee opposes the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals, where he will use the power in operating his plants in the very same way that he is to use the power from the St. Paul Dam in operating plants which he now proposes to build in the city of St. Paul.

NO APPREHENSION IN THE REGION AFFECTED.

The business and agricultural interests in Alabama, Tennessee, and adjoining States are not afraid to have the power at Muscle Shoals leased to Henry Ford; they know it will be subject to State regulation and supplied at reasonable rates. The water power and fertilizer companies, however, are manifesting great alarm, and it is not difficult to understand the reason why.

According to the national committee and its allies, the power companies, the Federal power act protects the people against Ford robberies at the St. Paul Dam for 50 years; but when Henry Ford proposes to lease Muscle Shoals for 100 years, then the House is told by one of the defenders of the Alabama Power Co., one of the allies of the national committee, that—

The Ford offer unamended would represent one of the boldest and most brazen daylight robberies that has ever occurred in the history of this country.

HOUSE LEADERS SOW THE WIND TO REAP THE WHIRLWIND.

Mr. Speaker, cheap inconsistency will not disguise the facts about the Ford offer, and the use of high-sounding phrases of denunciation of Mr. Ford and his proposal will never fool the farmers nor halt them in their determination to secure their own economic rights at Muscle Shoals through the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer. The leaders and the members of committees of this House who have obstructed the farmers at Muscle Shoals and delayed the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer before the adjournment of the Sixty-seventh Congress idly and foolishly sow the wind to reap the whirlwind.

Mr. Speaker, in making a review of the Muscle Shoals-Ford case I have felt—and I say it without criticism but with regret—that although Mr. Ford's offer is unusual and new, it has failed to receive the studious attention and consideration by the Members of the House that the offer deserves.

AMERICA HAS YET TO LEARN THE IMPORTANT LESSON THAT "NITROGEN IS BREAD."

I fear that we have not realized that "nitrogen is bread," and that we have delayed all too long in voting upon the Ford offer and accepting it. We have delayed too long in deciding upon a policy at Muscle Shoals which, in the next quarter of a century, I believe, will free the United States from depending upon Chile for our "nitrogen bread" and put an end to Chilean nitrate importations, for which we have paid Chile a billion dollars since our Civil War.

What nitrogen means to a country is illustrated in a news item from Berlin published in the New York Times of December 30, 1922, as follows:

[From the New York Times, December 20, 1922.]

SAYS NITROGEN EXPORT WOULD RUIN GERMANY—EXPERT OPPOSES FRENCH DEMAND FOR 60,000 TONS—COMPARES IT TO 1,500,000 TONS OF GRAIN.

BERLIN, December 29.—"Nitrogen is bread," asserts Dr. Nikodem Caro, well-known German agricultural expert, declaring that fulfillment of the French demand for the delivery of 60,000 tons of pure nitrogen would intensify Germany's food problem to the point of catastrophe.

The amount of nitrogen demanded by France, he adds, is equivalent to 300,000 tons of ammonium sulphate, and its loss to German agriculture would result in a harvest decrease amounting to 1,500,000 tons of grain or about 6,000,000 tons of vegetables. It would cost 200,000,000 gold marks to replace this grain, which sum he declares it impossible to obtain under present conditions.

Doctor Caro claims that through the partition of Upper Silesia Germany lost one of her largest nitrogen plants to Poland and was thus cut off from an annual supply of 30,000 tons. This meant a reduction of 750,000 tons in the grain yield yearly, which reverse could not be offset for at least two years.

Germany needs 340,000 tons of nitrogen for her own requirements annually, he says, disputing the charge recently made in the French press that Germany had a surplus and could meet the French demand if she desired.

Doctor Caro, one of Germany's leading authorities on nitrogen fixation, says "nitrogen is bread," and he protests against the demand of France for the delivery of 60,000 tons of pure nitrogen from Germany's air nitrogen fixation plants. He says to give France 60,000 tons annually of the pure nitrogen produced in Germany will result in a harvest decrease in Germany amounting to 1,500,000 tons of grain; and when we think of this we ought not to forget that Henry Ford has proposed to produce 40,000 tons of pure nitrogen annually at Muscle Shoals.

SHIPPING AWAY OUR SOIL FERTILITY.

Each crop year in the grain-growing States the nitrogen in the soil on the farms of these States is being consumed at home and shipped abroad. Already our exports of wheat are negligible and the production of wheat per acre, on account of diminished soil fertility, especially nitrogen fertility, is decreasing year by year.

It has very truly been said:

The United States in our time is undergoing profound and far-reaching changes. The first great chapter of the Nation's history is closing with the passing of the public lands. From the earliest years of our national existence almost until the present the main work of our people was to acquire and to occupy the public domain, continental in extent. The continent, however, is now practically occupied; there are no longer great stretches of free land rich with all manner of unowned, undeveloped resources. We have come, consequently, to new national bases of life, and are forming new national habits. Our country, in truth, has entered a period of fundamental readjustment—economic, social, and political.

WHEN AGRICULTURE SUFFERS SOCIETY WILL SUFFER ALSO.

In this fundamental readjustment agriculture must find the first place in our policies of government. No theories of government with "social panaceas," or "political poultices," will solve our national problems; only a realization of our agricultural problems and needs, with adequate and constructive legislation, will accomplish our successful economic, social, and political readjustment. We will be a vain people if we forget that the earth supports us; and we will fail as a nation if we embarrass and burden agriculture, the basic foundation of all our wealth. If we let agriculture suffer society will suffer, for whatever supports and advances the interests of agriculture supports and advances the happiness and prosperity of the American people.

WHY SUCH PROMPTNESS TO HELP IN RUBBER AND NO HELP AT ALL IN NITRATES?

These observations are made, Mr. Speaker, in order not only to remind the House but to emphasize the fact that the fertilizer-using farmers of this country will ask: "How is it that we promptly appropriate $500,000 to investigate and determine how the rubber trade of this country can be relieved from British domination and price fixing, when over one hundred millions of dollars have been invested at Muscle Shoals in nitrate plants and water power, and yet the Sixty-seventh Congress adjourns and goes home and refuses to accept the offer of Henry Ford to relieve the farmers of this country from the British control and price fixing of nitrates, though Mr. Ford, at the invitation of the Government, made his offer 18 months ago?"

FARMERS NOT SATISFIED WITH ARGUMENTS OF OPPOSITION.

The farmers will fairly insist that the denunciation and defamation of Henry Ford's offer by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS], found in the extension of his remarks in the RECORD of March 5, 1923, do not answer the clear, clean-cut, and convincing business statement on Muscle Shoals by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. MADDEN, to be found in the RECORD of February 3, 1923.

Likewise the farmers will not accept the eulogy and defense of the Alabama Power Co. by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] in his extension of remarks in the RECORD of March 2, 1923, as a reply to the speech of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], entitled "Is the fertilizer provision of the Ford proposal a 'joker'? No! It is a positive guaranty," found in the RECORD of January 16, 1923.

The farmers will ask why the Alabama Power Co. and its allies did not reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] on Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals, though Mr. MCKENZIE's remarks were published in the RECORD of December 22, 1922.

GOVERNMENT-OWNERSHIP SCHEME NO MATCH FOR FORD OFFER.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers will have a question to ask of those who endorse the statement of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. NORRIS], when he says of the Ford offer, "It is the greatest gift ever bestowed upon mortal man since salvation was made free to the human race."

In the able views submitted by Senator LADD, from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, for himself and his colleagues, a comparison is made between Ford operation and Government ownership and operation at Muscle Shoals.

The farmers will ask, I say, of all those who chorus the fine phraseology of Senator NORRIS, to answer, if they can, this deadly and conclusive parallel.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the time to-day will not permit me to review the record of this Congress, but in connection with the little that I can say I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The Sixty-seventh Congress came into being at a critical time after the World War. It was a time of deflation, discontent, and even distress. From all sides came the clamor for relief.

Following the Great War we had entered on a period of speculation and expansion. The first armistice day had been celebrated in an orgy of victory. The necessities of war had exaggerated both prices of products and the wages of labor. Staggering inflation followed. In my own State land that had been worth around $200 an acre was bought and sold in a wild scramble for from $300 to $500. Banks loaned liberally and the people spent extravagantly. The borrowing of money was encouraged by even the Federal reserve banks.

But the illusion soon became a delusion. Deflation followed inflation as the night follows the day. Those who had sown the wind reaped the whirlwind. In alarm the Federal reserve banks increased their discount rates. The local banks, many of them heavily overloaned, were forced to curtail credits or to stop them entirely. Those who had borrowed were told they must pay. In the liquidation that followed prices fell rapidly. On the farms they sank below the lowest records. In the cities factories were closed and industries disarranged. It is estimated that between four and five million people were thrown out of work.

This disastrous reaction began early in the autumn of 1920. The political party then in power, and which had been in power during the war, made every effort to minimize the political effect of the reaction, but it was in vain. In December of that year the outgoing Secretary of Agriculture wrote in his report that the crops of that year were worth $3,000,000,000 less than the smaller crops of the year before. "God forbid," later exclaimed a Democratic Senator [Mr. HEFLIN], "that another distressing time like that shall come upon our people."

It was under such conditions and in the face of such disasters that President Harding called the Sixty-seventh Congress to meet in extraordinary session on the 11th of April, 1921. In history we must go back to the time when James Buchanan turned a disrupted country over to Abraham Lincoln to find a comparison for the situation that confronted the Congress and the administration in the spring of 1921. The whole land was a seething mass of clamorous discontent, out of which many theorists emerged with dangerous cure-alls for a sick nation.

So serious was the predicament and so urgent was the relief demanded that three great emergency acts were passed immediately in the hope of averting the impending panic.

One was an emergency tariff act to displace the low-revenue tariff which had been enacted in 1913 with the incoming of the Wilson administration. Farm products were especially considered in this hasty legislation. The hope was to conserve what was left of the buying powers of the American people for American products.

The second was an emergency act to restrict immigration. This was complementary to the emergency tariff act. The one supplemented the other. The war weary and the war wrecked were then turning their eyes westward. Without restrictions they might have flooded America, only to add to the number of the unemployed.

The third emergency act, which followed in due time, was intended to restore credits for the rural districts, where the borrowers could not pay their debts and where the banks, filled with "frozen credits," could no longer function. For this purpose what was known as the War Finance Corporation, with left-over assets of half a billion or more, was revived. Under a splendid administration of this organization, sound in business and sympathetic in purpose, there followed an immediate revival of confidence and a resulting advance in the prices of farm products.

Having with these three measures arrested the threatened panic, the Congress proceeded to consider and to formulate more permanent remedial legislation.

At the outset it was realized that there must be curtailment in public expenditures lest the people already in distress should be taxed to death. During the war, and even after it, expenditures had been multiplied to the point of waste and extravagance. Efforts to curtail them had been unavailing. A budget act passed by the Sixty-sixth Congress had been vetoed by the President for specific reasons.

The creation of a budget system was deemed the one greatest need, involving a businesslike supervision of estimates, appropriations, and expenditures. With 39 committees proposing appropriations and ten times as many executives spending them, no economies were possible. I am proud to say that the Budget bill that was passed was largely the work of my predecessor in Congress, the Hon. James W. Good, then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in cooperation with President Harding, who approved it. After a trial of two years this Budget system has proved its worth. It is an outstanding act in the legislation of the Nation.

The Budget system that made it possible to reduce expenditures also made it potentially possible to reduce taxes. The expenditures of the Government, which had been $5,116,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, were brought down to $3,372,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1922. The tax revisions and reductions that were made effected a saving of $1,515,000,000 for the taxpayers, a relief that gave a new impetus to business and a new hope to all men. The taxes on transportation, which had added $350,000,000 a year to the burdens of travelers and shippers, were repealed in toto. Excessive profits taxes, which had been multiplied many times before they reached the ultimate payers, were abrogated. All the petty trade taxes that had annoyed the people were swept away as nuisances. The surtaxes were readjusted, but still leaving them at 50 per cent on the higher incomes, and the normal income taxes were reduced by increasing the exemptions so that the man of average family paid none on the first $3,700 of income, virtually relieving all those of moderate incomes.

With all these tax reductions, so carefully were the resources of the Government used that at the end of the first fiscal year under the new administration there was a surplus of $300,000,000, which was applied to the reduction of the national debt. It is a record of unparalleled efficiency in government. In the four years during which the Republican Party has been in control of Congress, which means in control of taxes and appropriations, the national debt has been reduced an amount greater than the reductions from the close of the Civil War to the commencement of the World War. Where is there a record that is a parallel to this? And yet it has been said that this has been a do-nothing Congress.

In the making of the emergency tariff special attention had been given to the agricultural schedules. But it was all the time apparent that the tariff alone could not solve the problems of the farms. The whole basic industry of agriculture was disrupted. The necessities of the war had deranged all its processes. High prices had stimulated expansions and speculations. Falling prices had left it prostrated. New methods for marketing and financing had to be formulated. A joint commission of inquiry was created to study the whole subject. The reports of this commission are monumental, and on them much of the new legislation has been based. President Harding dignified the whole situation by calling a national conference on agriculture, a conference that for a time divided public honors with the historic disarmament conference.

A tentative "farm program" of legislation was outlined, and most of it has been enacted. No such work for a great industry was ever before attempted or accomplished by a Congress. The Sixty-seventh Congress will stand in history as one that was "agriculturally minded." But the legislation enacted was not sectional nor occupational. It was truly national. It was based not on special privileges but on the greatest good for the greatest number.

I can not here enumerate all the enactments on this subject. We have on the statute books to-day an act for enlarging and safeguarding cooperative marketing, an act to supervise the packing of meats, an act to curtail the manipulation of grain prices through speculations in futures, an act to exclude filled milk from interstate commerce, and many other acts of like import and importance.

But the most important of this legislation may be the rural credits act, one of the last achievements of the Sixty-seventh Congress. This is a comprehensive measure, including permissible loans up to $25,000 by the Federal farm loan banks and the creation of a system of regional banks for the making of short-time commodity and live-stock loans. It is hoped that this legislation will do away with burdensome interest rates and enable the farmers to sell their products in the more favorable markets instead of being driven to sell them in inopportune ones to meet maturing obligations. It is not too much to say that agriculture has been placed on a new basis in both commerce and finance.

In due time the emergency tariff and immigration provisions were remade into more permanent laws. These two acts are closely allied, the one involving foreign labor and the other the products of such labor. The restrictions on immigration have been extended to June 30, 1924. We are now admitting each year 3 per cent of the nationals in the census of 1900. This means that each year 360,000 immigrants can enter the United States. This number still seems ample. It takes into account not only the needs of the industries of the country but the processes of possible assimilation and what is called Americanization. This legislation is based largely on the belief that a harmonious American Nation is quite as important as big American business. Citizenship may be as important as factories.

What is known as the Fordney-McCumber tariff has already proved both its efficiency and its worth. Its enactment was so bitterly opposed that the bill was halted in the Senate for more than a year. It was put into effect in the face of the last congressional elections. It was said against this tariff that it would hamper imports and hinder exports. We were told that Europe would not buy from us if we did not buy from them. This became the slogan of the opposition to the new act, and it was so persistently used that it became something feared.

The new tariff has been in effect less than half a year. But the time has been long enough to prove that the new rates have neither hampered imports nor hindered exports. For December last American imports exceeded by $60,000,000 those of December, 1921. The only thing to be feared is that imports may become too large, displacing the products of our own labor. For the calendar year of 1922 imports exceeded those of 1921 by over $600,000,000. The custom receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30 next may reach $530,000,000, although they had been estimated at only $350,000,000, a further proof that imports have not been checked. The American markets are so favorable that foreign producers and manufacturers are willing to pay for the privilege of participating in them. It is only just that they should pay for this privilege in tariff rates what American producers and manufacturers pay in taxes. The American ought at least to be on an equality with the foreigner in the American markets.

As to exports, the decline of which was feared, or at least proclaimed, they have kept pace with imports. We are selling more abroad than we did before the World War. In 1913 we exported 99,000,000 bushels of wheat; last year, 165,000,000 bushels. Of corn we exported then only 45,000,000 bushels; last year, 166,000,000. Of meat products we exported then 1,300,000,000 pounds; last year, 1,840,000,000. The balance of trade is still running strongly in our favor.

The war left its own more direct chaos for the Sixty-seventh Congress to deal with. Domestic debts were unpaid and foreign debts unfunded. One of the first acts of the new Congress was to conclude a definite peace with both Germany and Austria and Hungary—a peace honorable to all concerned, safeguarding not only all national rights but the claims of private citizens who had sustained war losses.

During the war we loaned $10,000,000,000 to the nations associated with us in that undertaking. The evidences of these debts were somewhat indefinite, often hardly more than scraps of paper. A debt funding commission was created by act of Congress. The British debt, amounting to $4,600,000,000, has been funded on a basis satisfactory to both nations, and other debts are now in process of similar funding. Order is being worked out of chaos. The entangled mass in the hands of the Custodian of Alien Property has also been partly straightened out and provision made for the return of 93 per cent of such properties, the rest being held in abeyance pending the settlement of claims held by Americans against the German Government, but all of it will be returned ultimately.

When the Sixty-seventh Congress came upon the scene, the Government's care for the diseased and disabled and otherwise incapacitated of the World War was vested in many bureaus, often operated at cross-purposes and without adequate results. This Congress created the Veterans' Bureau, in which all such activities were centered. The law under which this was done has recently been amended and perfected. It is now the greatest of all the bureaus of the Government, disbursing one-seventh of all taxes. In the history of the world there is no like bureau, nor an instance of like munificence in caring for those who suffered in war. Compensation, hospitalization, and vocational training are alike provided for. That there has been confusion and even waste in these manifold administrations is true, but the work had to be organized in haste and amid the clamor of those in need.

Material prosperity, however, has not been the only concern of the Sixty-seventh Congress. The Porter resolution, dealing with narcotic drugs, may exceed in moral results the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in the United States.

The use of such drugs was accelerated by the World War. It has become a form of world slavery to evil in which the United States has shared increasingly. We are using 700,000 pounds of these drugs, where the requirements of medicine and science are only 25,000 pounds. All laws to regulate the transportation and the sale of these goods have been largely failures, for they are easily concealed. The resolution which this Congress has passed authorizes and directs the President to enter into negotiations with foreign governments for the suppression and prohibition of the production of the poppy and the coca plant out of which opium and cocaine and their deleterious derivatives are made. The assurances already received from foreign nations directly concerned hold out the greatest hopes of success. If this great evil can be conquered it will mean more accomplished for the welfare and happiness of mankind than would be represented in the abolition of all wars, for wars are only intermittent evils while these drugs are incessant ones. By taking this initiative America has reemphasized its moral leadership in the world, the one leadership that matters most.

To prepare America for its new duties in a war reconstructed world, and to secure for itself the advantages to which it is justly entitled, both of influence and trade, the whole foreign service of the Government is now being reorganized under an act of this Congress. Hereafter there will be coordinated efforts, diplomatic and consular, simplifying procedure and multiplying results. It is one of the most constructive pieces of recent legislation and it will be of far-reaching effect.

In foreign affairs as in domestic, the Harding administration and the Sixty-seventh Congress have been alert and not aloof. There has been no opportunity that has been neglected and no duty that has been disregarded. To advance American interests and to promote the welfare of all peoples has been the end constantly in view.

The transactions of the disarmament conference which met in the city of Washington on Armistice Day, 1921, will stand recorded in world history as of almost supersignificance. In calling and conducting that conference America held out a new hope to an afflicted world. Nine separate treaties were negotiated by the nine nations participating. All of them are important, but two of them supremely so. The first placed a limitation on naval construction, doing away with destructive competition between the five great sea-power nations—America, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy. The second established a basis for perpetual peace in the Pacific. We have to go back to the proclamation of the Monroe doctrine for a like international conception on the part of America.

More recent developments in Europe, and also in western Asia, have halted and hampered like proposals and negotiations on the part of the American Government in such vital matters as international finance and trade and the limitation of land armaments. But it is not yet too late to hope that the Harding administration may complete the contemplated triology of international achievements.

These activities and accomplishments disprove the oft-repeated allegations that America has abandoned its proper place in world affairs and that it has withdrawn from the performance of its duties and obligations in the comity of nations. Not aloofness but alertness in foreign affairs has marked the course of the Nation during the two years under consideration. The welfare of the whole world is still America's concern. It wants to help solve every problem that afflicts the nations. But in so helping and in so doing, it is not yet minded to abrogate its own national integrity and sovereignty. These it will continue to cherish and to maintain. It shall gain nothing for itself or for the world by becoming a petty contender in a hodgepodge of nationalities. But it may do much more by standing a distinct entity among the nations of the world, adhering consistently to its own ideals and exemplifying them in such a manner that they shall seem attractive and things to be desired by all nations. That is the leadership, political, but more moral, that America seeks. America covets the lands of none and it seeks to exercise no dictatorship over any.

If the Sixty-seventh Congress and the administration with which it has been associated have not solved all the problems of the world or even of America, I submit that they have wrought much and well. They have put under way the needed reconstruction that had to come after the destruction of the Great War. What was chaos has assumed the form of order. Hope has come out of seeming hopelessness. The future, I believe, has promise of being more golden than any past.

Expressed in mere material terms, we have the millions who were idle now employed and that at wages that were never before known in peace times. The factories are busy, short of laborers, and behind their orders in output. On the farms the improvements may be measured in terms of a basic cereal, corn, which has been advanced from 20 to 60 cents a bushel.

A portending financial and industrial panic in two short years has been changed into an era of industrial and financial prosperity. Compared with March, 1921, we are living in an altered land. Who shall say that the Congress and the Executive administration have not fulfilled and realized the pledges and hopes on which the great victory was won in the historic elections of 1920?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, within two hours the Sixty-seventh Congress will adjourn sine die. To me and mine part of its history has become of momentous importance. In the House of Representatives two unprecedented attacks, which few men in public life could survive, were made upon me. Through the grace of Almighty God neither injured me more than temporarily, for subsequent events have fully vindicated me. I harbor no malice against anyone. I seek no vengeance. I am ever guided by the admonition "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord; I will repay." But defending one's good name is always permissible and excusable. Robbed of that, many of us would have nothing left. To present my side of these controversies I have secured this permission to extend my remarks. Embracing the attacks, the RECORD of the Sixty-seventh Congress would be unjust and incomplete did it not also contain my vindication.

THE SITUATION THEN EXISTING.

Let me briefly review the situation preceding these attacks. For several years I had made an uncompromising fight against autocratic domination of Government by labor unions and their leaders' notorious disregard of law and growing tendency toward complete anarchy. I made these fights not as their enemy but as the faithful friend of all men who labor. Just as Attorney General Daugherty asserted before the Chicago court, when obtaining an injunction against lawless strikes, that whenever it became apparent that labor unions were threatening the life of this great Nation, the Government would destroy such labor unions, I realized that if they would continue their existence labor unions must purge themselves of anarchy. I took the position that class legislation dictated by labor unions was just as harmful and pernicious as class legislation dictated by capital. I strenuously fought both, because together they ground the public between the upper and nether millstone. When the demands of labor unions were just I ardently supported them. But when I deemed their commands unjust I dared to disobey them, and opposed them vigorously.

HEADED THE UNION BLACKLIST.

Mr. Samuel Gompers and his affiliated leaders placed me at the head of their blacklist and demanded my political destruction. His unions exhausted every means possible to defeat me in the 1920 campaign, reliable citizens computing and asserting that approximately $100,000 was spent in my district in efforts to put me out of Congress, but without success. Many stalwart law and order members of labor unions loyally supported me.

Then some union publications asserted that even if they could not defeat me at the polls, they would yet find some means of getting rid of me.

HAD OPPOSED HOUSE LEADERS.

The Democratic and Republican Parties are composed of our trusting constituents back home, and we Representatives in Congress are merely their servants here to carry out their will, not here to blindly obey a few floor leaders, regardless. When I have differed with them on fundamental questions I have unhesitatingly refused to follow House leaders. This made some sore. I sometimes fought their plans, though without exception I always obeyed the Democratic caucus rules relative to binding caucus instructions. I have unflinchingly carried out the will of my constituents, even when it conflicted with the desires of my colleagues. I came here to serve the people, not my colleagues. Yet I gladly serve my colleagues when it does not conflict with the duty I owe my constituents.

ROLL CALLS FOR RECORD VOTES.

The RECORD shows that on February 10, 1922, I protested from the floor that only 10 Congressmen were present, though we were then debating a bill which would take $295,622,112 of the people's money out of the Treasury.

In order to demonstrate the continual absence of a quorum required by the Constitution, and that a mere handful of leaders framed and passed the various supply bills, and to preserve a record vote on important issues, I forced many roll calls, thus requiring Members to come to the Capitol. This led the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] in indignation to exclaim:

> I recall that in the Sixty-sixth Congress on 126 occasions he [Mr. BLANTON] compelled a roll call, * * * so filching from me and every other Member 10 days of life. But he kept within the limits of the Constitution. I remember how time and again he has given us occasion for annoyance by his methods of obstructing the processes of legislation, but I must confess he usually has kept within the four corners of the rules of the House.

Thus certain colleagues fostered secret grievances against me because I forced them to attend some sessions occasionally, something they had impliedly promised their constituents to do when they took the oath of office. And why should not I resort to the rules of the House to obstruct and block bad legislation? What are the rules for? I deem it a great honor that in his editorial published in the Washington Star on February 18, 1923, headed—the distinguished press representative, Mr. Will P. Kennedy, saw fit to include my name as one of the five picked by him as the leading Democratic parliamentarians in the next House, in which article he said:

REPUBLICANS IN HOUSE TO FACE BIG HANDICAP—WILL LACK PARLIAMENTARIANS—

"There is Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, generally referred to as 'obstreperous,' but BLANTON has learned the rules and the exceptions and the reasons therefor probably better than any of the younger Members of the House and has a peculiar quality of persistence and irrepressibility which even in this Congress has caused endless trouble for the Republican leaders."

AGAINST WASTE AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

After several years careful investigation I have about completed a personal survey of all the bureaus of this Government, checking up appropriations, finding out exactly where all the money goes and what benefit the people derive from same; and armed with such facts I have fought all waste and extravagance, big and little. But such fights made enemies.

POINTS OF ORDER.

The records will show that during the past six years many attempts have been made in the House to place in supply bills numerous wasteful legislative items involving millions of dollars, and that I have caused many of same to be eliminated by making timely points of order. And again I made enemies.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The records will show that during the past six years there have been many unmeritorious private bills, aggregating millions of dollars, on the calendar. Who, other than Mr. STAFFORD and myself, ever opposed them? On the days set apart for their consideration, with few exceptions, there would be no other Members on the floor except those having bills to pass, and they dared not oppose another's bill if they expected passage of their own. Thus, to keep bad bills from passing, I made a close study of these measures, and when I deemed them unmeritorious I unhesitatingly used every parliamentary procedure possible to block them. But in thus doing my duty I caused some colleagues to dislike me.

PERQUISITES OF CONGRESSMEN.

Believing that our Government should first be placed back on a sound financial footing, and that taxes and living expenses of the people should first be reduced, I have consistently fought and opposed the following: Raising our own salaries; excess mileage; junketing trips; furnishing annually cedar, oak, pine, or rosewood chests to Members at Government expense; paying Government salaries to barbers, chiropodists, manicurists, and bath attendants; paying the losses of the House restaurants out of the Treasury; selling merchandise other than needed office supplies on stationery accounts; and the annual $360,000 free garden seed waste. These fights have caused me to lose the friendship of several colleagues. But I carried out the pledges made to the people I represent.

THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

In May, 1921, certain of the 4,440 Government employees in our Printing Office appealed to me for protection, asserting that the typographical union controlled the plant and forced all employees to join, pay monthly dues and assessments, and comply with union rules guiding them in their work, or resign.

I exhaustively investigated the plant and had the Public Printer declare that union affiliation was not mandatory. But the union dominated there just the same. Conditions were simply awful. When later on Millard French and John W. Powers claimed that, having families to support, they were not able to pay their regular union dues and assessments, and in addition pay the required extra 10 per cent of their salaries to the union to carry on the nation-wide typographical strike, and they withdrew from the union, they were shamefully abused by union leaders and kicked out into the gutter. Millard French filed with the Public Printer his affidavit, sworn to on September 5, 1921, showing that without any provocation whatever, Levi Huber, a union foreman, cursed and abused him unmercifully, calling him a black-hearted scab, and cursing the Public Printer and myself for interfering. The Public Printer suspended Huber for one day, and wrote three different letters to French, urging him to come back to work, but the intimidation caused French to be afraid and he did not return.

Under leave theretofore granted I had my report of this whole investigation printed in the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Saturday, October 22, 1921, it appearing on pages 7417, 7418, 7419, 7420, 7421, 7422, 7423, 7424, and 7425. It embraced evidence from witnesses showing that in other departments unions required Government employees to affiliate and pay union dues in order to continue in their jobs. With the exception of the Millard French affidavit, which covered only a part of page 7420, there was not one improper word in my entire report. And in the French affidavit, I deleted all improper language with dashes, identical with court reports. Most fortunately for me, nearly 40,000 copies of this daily RECORD containing my report were mailed to leading men and women in the 48 States on the morning of October 23, 1921. For as soon as it was read in Washington, labor unions rose up in arms, as their leaders knew that if the facts became generally known throughout the United States they would not much longer be permitted to force monthly dues and assessments from Government employees.

MONDELL EXPUNGES REPORT.

At 12 o'clock noon when the House met on October 24, 1921, the majority leader, Mr. MONDELL, without notice, moved that my entire report be stricken from the permanent RECORD. I asked him in all justice to give me 10 minutes to explain to Members what they were to vote on, but he refused. He admitted that the brief affidavit on page 7420 was the only part of my report that contained anything which could be urged as objectionable, yet instead of asking merely that the affidavit be stricken out he insisted that my entire 9-paged report be expunged. It had not occurred to him then that I should be expelled. That was an afterthought. But it was well known that labor unions were clamoring for my destruction, and that anyone who would help to destroy me would gain their lasting favor.

NATION-WIDE RAILROAD STRIKE.

I had been fighting to help avert the general strike already called, realizing that it meant ruin and disaster. On the preceding Friday I had addressed a gathering of business men in New York on the scope of this danger. On the night of October 24, 1921, I left Washington for Wheeling, W. Va., to address another big meeting of leading business men on the subject. I was seeking to benefit the 110,000,000 people of the whole United States.

MONDELL BREAKS ALL PRECEDENTS.

When the House met at noon on Tuesday, October 25, 1921—my forty-ninth birthday—the majority leader, Mr. MONDELL, presented his resolution to expel me. Learning my absence, he had my office officially notified that it would be acted on Thursday, October 27, 1921.

Under the precedents, in all cases where the right of a Member's seat has been in question, the matter has been referred to a committee for report and such Member given ample time for preparation and allowed to face and cross-examine witnesses and to offer testimony and be heard in his own behalf. Even VICTOR BERGER was allowed counsel at Government expense and given months to be heard before a committee in his own behalf. But in my case all precedents were disregarded. The issue was not referred to a committee for examination and report. No witness appeared against me. Not one scintilla of evidence was offered against me. I was given no time to make preparation. I was not allowed to offer any testimony. I was up all night in my hurried return from Wheeling to Washington.

In the House of Representatives then were 302 Republicans. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was their leader. These 302 Republicans were presumed to follow him whenever he called on them to vote. He thus was in control of a clear majority of 170 votes. I was reliably informed that he summoned many Republican Members to his office and demanded that they vote for his resolution to expel me. Thus was my jury "fixed" beforehand.

ONLY 204 MEMBERS VOTE TO EXPEL.

After the House met on October 27, 1921, the majority leader, Mr. MONDELL, moved the adoption of his resolution to expel me. He offered no witness or evidence against me. He rested the whole case upon his bare unsworn statement that I had "placed words in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that were unspeakable, vile, foul, filthy, profane, blasphemous, and obscene." He knew that the public would assume that I had used such language. When, as a matter of fact, the purpose and object of my whole report was to stop the use of such language in Government buildings. But the laws protect any Member for any statement made on the floor.

I had no redress against him in the courts. Because being a Member, his remarks were privileged, and the law prevented me from holding him accountable for same. And however unjust, the law permitted the press to repeat what he said, without fear of prosecution for libel. The RECORD shows that he did not know whether all Members who were to vote had read my report or not, but he "presumed that they had." I requested that in all fairness, excluding the affidavit objected to, that the balance of my nine-paged report, which contained not one improper word, should be printed in the RECORD in justification of my good intent and purpose, but the majority leader objected and would not permit it to go into the RECORD.

The vote on the resolution to expel appears on page 7676 of the RECORD. Only 204 Members voted to expel me. Two hundred and four Members out of a total membership of 435. Everything considered, this is most remarkable, for with 302 Republican Members in the House, to whom the majority leader could appeal, he was thus in control of a clear majority of 170 votes, if he could have had them present and controlled them all. He was their leader and could make it unpleasant for those who refused to follow him. The following letter and clipping from the Columbus Dispatch shows that he did influence some Members against their will:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 2, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: Inclosed is clipping from the Dispatch. I wanted you to know the tide had turned and you were vindicated. The goody-goody Congressmen will find that they are not sustained in their persecution. Continue your work for the people in stopping extravagance.

[From the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.]

"The influence which Republican Leader MONDELL is supposed to have over Ohio Members of Congress has been subjected to severe strain as a result of the leader's drastic efforts to force the expulsion of Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON from the House. A number are saying they are through with Mr. MONDELL'S leadership.

"The dissatisfied ones assert that Mr. MONDELL'S course in the Blanton expulsion affair was punitive in the extreme and was inspired by a desire to get the Texan out of Congress, where he always has been a disturbing factor.

"It is but natural that after Leader MONDELL had gone to such lengths to oust the Texan and had failed there should be a weakening of his leadership, and the reaction is plainly noticeable in the Ohio delegation. The Ohioans say it was pressure that governed their votes in favor of expulsion and that they regret having yielded to the pressure.

"Representative CHARLES J. THOMPSON, of the Defiance district, is one of those who finally yielded to importunities to cast his vote to put BLANTON out of Congress, and now he is sorry he did. He says that his conscience is hurting him.

"'If I could recall my vote, I would do so,' he said. 'I am very glad the resolution providing for expulsion did not pass.'

"Representative JAMES T. BEGG, of the Sandusky district, is said to feel the same way about it. As assistant whip of the House, he was hardly in a position to resist pressure from above, but it is understood he has taken the position that never again will he be controlled in a similar way against his inclinations.

"Representatives SPEAKS and RICKETTS were the only two Ohio Members who broke with the House leader at the time the vote was taken. General SPEAKS has stated that he would have voted against expelling BLANTON if he had been the only one of the 435 Members to do it. General SPEAKS believes there is no Member of Congress who leads a cleaner life than BLANTON and that his personal conduct is above reproach."

The majority leader expunged my nine-page report from the permanent RECORD, but he could not destroy it. Like Banquo's ghost it has arisen many times to confront him. I purchased 100 copies from the Public Printer to show citizens. He was not able to destroy the 40,000 copies of the original RECORD of October 22, 1921, containing my report, which had already been mailed into the 48 States. His action merely enhanced interest in it and caused the addressees not only to read it themselves but each to show it to scores of others. And from over the United States I have received several thousand letters from eminent ministers, lawyers, doctors, teachers, judges, editors, farmers, merchants, bankers, and good women, who, after giving careful study to this report, state that I should have been commended rather than condemned. In illustration, I will quote just a few typical of them all:

[From Little Rock Daily News.]

NOVEMBER 8, 1921.

BLANTON employed initial letters and dashes to indicate the vile words. Had BLANTON not in some way brought the language out in his speech, he would not have made out his case.

The News wants even one Member of Congress, who so violently opposed BLANTON'S use of the initial letters and dashes, to tell us just how BLANTON would have gotten the facts before the Congress if he had not used them.

Be it said to BLANTON'S credit that if he fights hard he also fights fair, and that he fights for what he conscientiously believes is right.

BLANTON did not indorse such language; he was condemning it. No little child and no woman would understand the letters and dashes.

BLANTON believed that the people should know about it. And why shouldn't they? Does not the Government Printing Office belong to the people? Are they not entitled to know the conditions there?

The tempest in the teapot would have been not so riotous if BLANTON'S exposé had not somewhat unsettled ancient customs at Washington and thrown the searchlight of public disapproval on some Government secrets that had been hidden in the closets these many years.

Right and justice are American qualities, and by holding BLANTON up to public scorn Congress can not cover up the fact that the Government Printing Office at Washington is the most disgracefully conducted department in the whole American Government. BLANTON may be able to come back.

KANSAS CITY, MO., October 28, 1921.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I am still your friend and unshaken by any of the events of the last few days. Don't let this "tempest in a teapot" crush your spirit.

The whole episode appears half ludicrous. Who would have thought that a "pious front" by the most saintly gentlemen who have been seeking to "oust" you is of more importance than the actual facts affecting our country and Government? I wonder if the medical books and the Holy Bible will yet have to be ruled out of the mails.

Rev. CHARLES T. ALEXANDER.

[From Herbert George, president Business Men's Association.]

DENVER, COLO., January 4, 1922.

MONDELL'S attack on BLANTON fools nobody. The courageous Texan will recover and return to Congress to torment enemies of good government.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., November 8, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: You were censured, according to the feudal custom of slaying the bearer of bad news. Yet the real offender, who originated the objectionable language, retains his position in the Government Printing Office, encouraged to again abuse and villify any nonunion employee.

Mrs. ALICE WHITNEY BURTON.

[From a distinguished minister, pastor First Congregational Church.]

LEBANON, Mo., October 29, 1921.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: The country needs you more than it does the whole bunch against you. Do not be discouraged. Your record is a noble one for service. May God bless you. I am not a Democrat. That does not matter. I am an American. I rejoice in your abilities and sterling qualities.

Sincerely, V. H. RUBING.

LEWISVILLE, ARK., October 28, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for October 22 every word of your report which caused your reprimand. I can not find anything objectionable in it. Our court records contain much more obscenity. I commend your course and hope you will never cease your bold and honorable fight. I think that you deserve a medal instead of a reprimand.

FRANK BRAME.

[From a distinguished minister.]

APPOMATTOX, VA., October 28, 1921.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: As a reader of the CONGRESIONAL RECORD, I am familiar with its contents.

I deeply regret that the rules of the House are such as not to permit a public record of facts. Such things are awful to repeat, but somehow I have a lingering conviction that under such circumstances a "verbatim" account best serves the ends of justice.

Be assured, dear Congressman, that "truth crushed to the earth will rise again," and long after this is forgotten you will be wafted high on the wings of your noble struggle for justice. Be assured of my sincere prayers, sympathy, and respect.

W. W. PIPPIN, Jr.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., November 25, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: The people of this country are solidly behind you, "twenty to one," as against the gang who are trying to put you out of business. You will be in Congress many long years after the MONDELL element shall have been utterly forgotten.

F. H. EBELING.

[From Salem (Oreg.) Journal.]

Representative BLANTON has been consistently the champion of the open shop and American plan in Government bureaus, and hence has been a marked man. All the pressure of organized labor has been exerted against him, and the effort at expulsion was due to pressure of labor lobbyists upon Congress to get rid of a man courageous enough to expose their methods.

ORVILLE, CALIF.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: You are my ideal. You are not a four-flusher. The people are with you. The politicians in Congress can't hurt you. Next year we will have an election, and then see who is right in the eyes of the world, you or the ones who tried to destroy you.

HARRY GRANT.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA., February 1, 1922.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I have read your expurgated report. It does you credit and condemns the action of Leader MONDELL and the House.

C. A. GRAVES, M. D.

SHERIDAN, WYO., October 28, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: Mr. MONDELL is a candidate for the Senate, and in this union ridden State he expects to make political capital out of the incident. Would that we had more men in the House that had the courage of their convictions.

With best wishes for your success.

DR. FRANK CARLL.

REAL USER OF BAD LANGUAGE UNMOLESTED.

The man who used the bad language was Levi Huber, a union foreman in the Government Printing Office, who when using it bragged that he and his union had enough influence in the Capitol to keep him from harm. Why did the majority leader take no action against Huber? I was merely quoting the deleted language Huber had used in abusing another Government employee. Huber was the culprit. Yet he went unscathed.

On October 28, 1921, the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] introduced House Resolution 217, which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Rules. It provided:

Resolution.

"Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker and authorized and directed to investigate the conditions in the office of the Public Printer, at Washington, D. C., its personnel, efficiency, and conditions affecting employment therein, and to report to the House its findings and recommendations; and said committee shall have power to send for persons, books, and papers, administer oaths, and the right to report at any time."

Neither the majority leader nor the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], chairman of the Rules Committee, took any action whatever on said resolution, but are letting it die with this Congress, unacted upon.

On March 13, 1922, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] stated that it was in his mind to say something that he had very frequently thought of; that he had never even made an inquiry privately about the matter, but he would like to know, and he wondered if any gentleman could tell him, whether Levi Huber was still in the employment of the Government; that if I deserved censure for inserting an affidavit containing Huber's language, surely the man who used the language ought not to be permitted to remain in the Government service. In reply the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] first stated that he was informed that Huber had not been in the Government Printing Office for some time; but after telephoning to the Public Printer he later informed the House that Huber had not been discharged, but was still employed by the Government.

HERBERT GEORGE WAS RIGHT.

The attack fooled nobody. And many good people, Republicans and Democrats alike, resented it at the polls. The Republicans in Wyoming repudiated Mr. MONDELL. The Republicans in Kansas repudiated Mr. CAMPBELL. Of the 204 Members who voted to expel me, 78 of them will not be in the next House of Representatives when the Sixty-eighth Congress meets. Most of the remaining 126 are my good personal friends, for whom I have sincere affection and for whom I wish abundant success in all their undertakings.

THE VOTE IN WYOMING.

The population of the entire State of Wyoming is only 194,402, while the population of my district is 314,314. The State of Wyoming therefore has never had more than one Congressman. For 26 years Mr. MONDELL has represented the entire State of Wyoming in Congress. In the recent election he ran for the United States Senate against Mr. KENDRICK, a Democrat. For the position of Representative, now held by Mr. MONDELL, Mr. CHARLES E. WINTER, a Republican, ran against Mr. Robert R. Rose, a Democrat. While the State of Wyoming went for the Republican candidate for Representative it went against Mr. MONDELL for the Senate. Hon William Tyler Page, Clerk of the House, certifies the Wyoming vote as follows:

WYOMING.

For United States Senator.

John B. Kendrick	35,734
Frank W. Mondell	26,627

For Represenative at Large.

Charles E. Winter	30,885
Robert B. Rose	27,017

Thus the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], despite his prestige of being majority leader and in Congress 26 years, was repudiated by his own party Republicans in his home State. When his treatment of me became an issue in his campaign, he had circulated a vicious statement indicating that I was an irresponsible blackguard without standing. But it did not fool the people. Some of them knew that for years I have been a consistent Shriner in good standing in Hella Temple, a 32-degree Scottish Rite Mason in Consistory No. 2, Dallas, Tex.; a Knight Templar in Abilene Commandery, No. 27; a Royal Arch Mason in Abilene Chapter, No. 159; a Master Mason in Abilene Lodge, No. 559, A. F. and A. M.; a Knight of Pythias in Abilene Lodge, No. 42; a Woodman of the World, in Abilene Camp, No. 136; and a consistent member in good standing in the following bodies of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows: Abilene Lodge, No. 274; Abilene Encampment, No. 117; Abilene Canton, No. 119; and Abilene Rebekah Lodge, No. 89, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. When certain citizens of Wyoming wrote me asking about my past history I sent them copies of the following from my most treasured indorsements:

[From Dr. C. C. Coleman, then pastor First Baptist Church.]

ABILENE, TEX., January 16, 1911.

Judge THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Abilene, Tex.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I wish to say that your course on the bench has given me a world of fresh hope for our institutions. You have demonstrated that a fearless, patriotic judge can do wonders in spite of cumbersome precedents and methods of procedure and a prevailing laxity of public opinion. I have often thanked God that we have you on this bench. I have lived in sections of the State where the judge had a very different spirit from yours, and all who stood for law and order keenly felt the difference. Wishing you increasing influence and usefulness.

Heartily yours, C. C. COLEMAN.

[From the Western Evangel (the Baptist family newspaper), Abilene, Tex., March 13, 1912.]

Mr. BLANTON, although the youngest district judge in Texas at present, has been in active practice of law for 15 years. His public record and private life are very commendable. It is in order to say that Judge BLANTON is a stanch prohibitionist, and is one of the wisest, most earnest, conscientious supporters of the cause. He is always on the right side of every moral question, he being a true Christian gentleman.

[From a Christian magazine of Texas.]

THE HOME AND STATE.

Judge BLANTON, of Abilene, was triumphantly reelected district judge of that district. He has been one of the most faithful officials, administering the laws fairly and justly to all alike, and the people have again rewarded him for faithful service. When men like Judge BLANTON are on the bench the law and order of the community are in safe hands.

[Following indorsement in 1916 was signed by leading citizens of the five counties in the forty-second judicial district.]

"We, the undersigned, heartily indorse Judge THOMAS L. BLANTON for Congress. During his eight years as district judge he has faithfully kept every promise made to the people, has impartially enforced the laws without fear or favor, has kept strict order, has dispatched business and cleared the dockets, has forced all citizens alike to do service as jurors and witnesses, and has economically conducted the courts.

"His honesty, integrity, ability, and unsurpassed energy are such as would make him an ideal Congressman. We know him to be fair and impartial in passing upon all questions. We have had every occasion to observe his manly worth and sterling qualities. Judge BLANTON made a wonderful success in the practice of law, and his conduct on the bench has been of the highest type. In his private life he has advocated that which was pure and right, always fighting openly all kinds of vice, and he has given his time and money in the defense of all moral issues that have come before the people of his State."

The press reported Mr. MONDELL carried only one county in the State of Wyoming. The returns for the following counties, as reported by the press, indicate how it went:

Wyoming general election, November 7, 1922.

THE GARNER ATTACK.

The attack made upon me on April 6, 1922, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was an impulsive mistake. Ordinarily he is an affable, splendid, good fellow. He acted largely through misunderstanding and misinformation. In attacking perquisites I never once had him in mind. Never at any time had I criticized any Member for employing relatives in his office. On account of there being a State law in Texas against allowing officers there to employ relatives, on June 23, 1919, I offered the following amendment:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: At the end of the resolution, on page 3, after the word "cause," on line 7, as a new paragraph insert the following new section, to wit:

"SEC. 2. That after June 30, 1919, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners in the Congress of the United States shall not appoint to any position, the salary for which is paid by the Government, any person related within the third degree by consanguinity or affinity to the Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointment, and all existing appointments violative of the intent and purpose of this provision shall terminate before July 1, 1919."

I failed to pass the above amendment, and I then realized that it would be impossible to pass such a provision, for a majority of the most prominent men in Congress employed their relatives, and I learned that it really accrued to the benefit of the Government. The office business of a Congressman is arduous, hard work if it receives proper attention. It is frequently necessary to finish work after hours, at night, on Sundays, and on holidays. Few outsiders will do the work. It is a problem to get competent help for the pay. To be successfully performed the secretary and clerk must put their hearts in the work and be personally interested in the people they serve. Then, too, the business is frequently of a most confidential nature. Many constituents with sons court-martialed or in serious other trouble write you in strict confidence. Facts concerning important business relations and interests are confided to your care. Valuable checks for ex-service men must sometimes pass through your office. Private checks from constituents concerning their business affairs sometimes must be handled. It is necessary for your help to handle your own money sometimes. One must have absolute confidence in his office help. Your secretary must not only have executive ability but also must have initiative and business tact in handling important transactions with departments.

I have been blessed with faithful and efficient office help. My first secretary, Mrs. Curran S. Benton, who remained with me until she married Major Benton in April, 1919, served my district faithfully. No help in Washington was more loyal, efficient, painstaking, and dependable. Since her marriage I have had a perfect treasure in my brother, who came to me with 10 years' experience in the railroad express business and 9 years' business experience with the big printing establishment of Clarke & Courts, of Galveston, Tex. He has worked after hours, at night, on Sundays, and holidays, and has done more work than I believe any three outside men would have done in my office. In collecting and preparing data for me to fight unmeritorious measures he has saved, in my judgment, several hundred thousand dollars for the people. Without his help it would be a hard problem for me to keep up with the work of my office.

From time to time I have had one of my boys, first one and then another but never more than one at the same time, work in my office, but none of them have ever received more than $3.30 per day. They could have earned twice that amount at any ordinary labor here. I have had them work through necessity, because outsiders would not do the work required for this pay. Since the first of last month I have had one of my boys working for me. And never at any time or place have I ever criticized any Congressman for employing relatives.

But on April 6, 1922, because I then renewed my fight against certain perquisites of Congressmen, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] made his unwarranted attack upon me. I had no recourse against him in court, because however unwarranted and unjust his attack was, the law and rules of the House protected him and made his remarks from the floor privileged, which prevented action from being taken against him in court. Newspapers exercised their privilege allowed by law in repeating his attacks upon me, as they, too, were protected by law from libel suits. I had but one way to vindicate myself, and that was through an investigation by Congress. So two days thereafter, on April 8, 1922, I introduced in the House Resolution No. 322, asking for an investigation, which resolution was ordered to be printed and was referred to the Committee on Rules. I will now quote the resolution in full, to wit:

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 8, 1922.

Mr. BLANTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 322.

Whereas on January 4, 1922, Representative BLANTON opposed the Ireland resolution to pay all losses of the restaurants operated by the House of Representatives out of the Treasury, and on January 12, 1922, from the House floor, said Representative BLANTON again spoke against the perquisites of Congressmen, asserting: That the Members of the Texas delegation, four of whom were bachelors, received a mileage check of $700 three times in each Congress of three sessions; that the barbers in the House barber shop had furnished to them free by the Government their shop without rent, their furniture, fixtures, light, heat, hot and cold water, electricity, linen towels, etc., and besides were paid $70 each per month out of the Treasury; that the chiropodist, William Richardson, and the body rubber, Bruce, in the House bathrooms each were paid $95 per month out of the Treasury, and the assistant body rubber, Tompkins, in said bathrooms, was paid $78 per month out of the Treasury; that each Congressman was furnished with a secretary and a clerk at a cost to the Government of $3,200 per annum, plus bonuses; that each Congressman had a splendid office with the finest furniture and carpets, and the Government also furnished him with two typewriting machines, comb and brush, clothes brush, soap, hot and cold water, electric fans, telephone, and clean towels; that there was credited to each Congressman in the stationery room $125 per session, or $375 for each Congress of three sessions, ostensibly for stationery, but which $375 any Congressman so desiring could draw out in cash or use to buy from the House stationery room any of the articles kept there for sale and sold to Congressman at cost, among which articles were ladies' fancy stationery, carving knives, forks, and steels, leather-bound poker set, playing cards by the dozen, ladies' fine fancy manicure set with all pieces pearl handled, pocket pint whisky flask covered with ostrich-skin leather, ladies' fine ostrich-skin handbags, ladies' toilet set with brush, comb, and big fine mirror, electric chafing dishes worth wholesale $15, all of which articles were exhibited on the floor of the House, the speaker at the time stating:

"Now you know they had so much demand for this little pocket pint whisky flask, covered with ostrich-skin leather, during Christmas time that they sold out," and illustrating the loss that could accrue to the Government on wastage of food, in case the House should unexpectedly adjourn soon after convening, the items of food contained on the Senate menu for January 10, 1922, were given, the said Representative IRELAND when passing his restaurant resolution having asserted that he intended to bring the House restaurants up to the standard of the Senate, and that the main reason for having the Government pay the losses was that no private enterprise could stand the loss occurring through wastage of food when the House adjourned unexpectedly; and

Whereas on April 6, 1922, from the House floor said Representative BLANTON again spoke against the said perquisites of Congressmen, repeating all of his former assertions, and showing that the rugs and carpets for one committee suite, the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, cost the Government $1,124.80, the carpet for the House floor cost $10,078, and that the rugs for ordinary offices last cost the Government $191.75 each wholesale, and asserting that the mileage paid to the Members of the Texas delegation averaged $730.48 each per session, or the sum of $2,191.44 average per Texas Member per Congress, then giving the amount exactly each Member received, respectively, and again asserting that Members were allowed to draw all or any part of their $375 stationery allowance per Congress out in cash, or to spend the same for anything they desired; and

Whereas immediately following said speech Representative GARNER asserted that Representative BLANTON was not an individual, but a creature, and was a common, base liar, and would do anything in order to accumulate wealth, that he would charge Members with nepotism and at the same time have two children on the pay roll of the Government, and that the Texas delegation deems him a liability and injury to their party; and

Whereas the following occurred during such debate:

"Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman has referred to whisky flasks, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has referred to that subject. In order that the record may be clear, I desire to state that on the 5th day of January of this year the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] went to the stationery room and asked for a whisky flask. They did not have it.

"Mr. MONDELL. Certainly not.

"Mr. BARKLEY. And they advised him that they did not keep them for sale. He then requested the stationery room to order him one. The stationery room ordered him one from Charles M. Griskey Sons, Philadelphia, Pa. The order is No. 1815 on the records of the stationery room. The flask was ordered under No. 573-3-3 Ost. It was a pint flask, covered with ostrich hide, for which Mr. BLANTON paid in cash at the time he got it, the price being $6. [Laughter and applause.]

"Mr. MONDELL. I assume that that was all done for the purpose of being able to make the statement that whisky flasks could be obtained in the stationery room"; and

Whereas in truth and in fact the said House stationery room did have on sale there during the last Christmas holidays just such pocket pint whisky flasks covered with ostrich-hide leather as was exhibited on the floor of the House, and certain employees in said stationery room if placed on oath will testify that same were sold in said House stationery room during the holidays, and that when Representative BLANTON ordered the exhibited one on January 5, 1922, he ordered an exact duplicate of the ones which had been sold there during said holidays, and other credible witnesses who saw them, if called upon and put under oath will testify that they saw such flasks on sale in said House stationery room during said holidays; and

Whereas as a matter of fact said Representative BLANTON is not doing anything to accumulate wealth, but for five years has been in Congress, preceding which for eight years he was judge of the forty-second judicial district of Texas, and prior to entering such public service he owned real and personal property worth over $25,000, but to-day if he sold everything he possesses he could not raise over $3,000, he having devoted most of his possessions to public service; and

Whereas the public press asserts that during the speech of said Representative GARNER, Representative SUMNERS also said that Representative BLANTON had lied in his speech on the perquisites of Congressmen; and

Whereas in truth and in fact the annual report of the House Clerk for 1920 shows, on page 226, that Representative BLANTON on December 4, 1919, drew his entire stationery allowance of $125 in cash; on page 258, that both Representative SUMNERS and Representative GARNER each drew their entire stationery allowance of $125 in cash; on page 297, that Representative SUMNERS again drew out his entire stationery allowance of $125 in cash; and said Clerk's annual report for 1921 shows, on page 247, that Representative GARNER again drew out his entire stationery allowance in cash; on page 298, that Representative GARNER again drew out his entire stationery allowance of $125 in cash; and on page 328, that Representative SUMNERS again drew out his entire stationery allowance in cash; and on page 346, shows that Representative MONDELL drew $9.45 in stationery and the balance of $115.55 in cash; and said reports show many other Congressmen drawing entire stationery allowances out in cash; and

Whereas the books of the Sergeant at Arms show that the amount of the mileage check issued to the Texas Members for each one of the three sessions of Congress are: Hatton W. Sumners, $707.20; Marvin Jones, $736; Clay Briggs, $702.80; Sam Rayburn, $673.20; Harry Wurzbach, $783.60; John N. Garner, $851.20; Eugene Black, $514; Daniel E. Garrett, $602.40; C. B. Hudspeth, $934; J. J. Mansfield, $840; John C. Box, $646.40; Tom Connally, $740.80; Rufus Hardy, $729.20; Thomas L. Blanton, $717.20; Morgan G. Sanders, $700; James P. Buchanan, $840; Lucian Parrish, $733.48; Fritz Lanham, $697.20; total, $13,148.68; which averages per Member $730.48 per session, or $2,191.44 per each Congress of three sessions, and shows that Leader Mondell receives $766 per session, or $2,298 per Congress, and that Representative Raker receives $1,453.20 per session, or $4,359.60 mileage per Congress; and

Whereas neither in Congress or out has said Representative BLANTON ever charged Congressmen with nepotism, there being no such offense under Federal law affecting Congressmen; and

Whereas said Representative BLANTON now has no son on the Government pay roll, although his brother, 44 years old, is his secretary, though he has had sons on the pay roll, as other Congressmen have, though from July, 1919, to September, 1920, his oldest son was employed as a clerk in his office at $98.34 per month, during which time no other son was on the Government pay roll; and from October, 1920, to September, 1921, he had one son working in his office at $98.34 per month, during which time he had no other son on the Government pay roll, and during October and November, 1921, he had one son, and only one, working for $98.30 per month, and the following will show his office force now:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1922.

"I certify that since May 1, 1919, continuously, I have been secretary to my brother, Congressman BLANTON, at a salary of $208.34 per month; that I succeeded Mrs. Curran S. Benton, who up to that time had been his secretary from the beginning of his congressional career; I am 44 years old, have a family, and prior to coming here was receiving $200 per month from Clarke & Courts of Galveston, as assistant to the manager.

"W. W. BLANTON.

"I certify that since December 1, 1921, I have been employed as clerk in Congressman BLANTON's office at a salary of $98.34 per month, and prior to December Mr. BLANTON employed me for some time and paid my salary out of his own pocket. I am not related to him.

"ELIZABETH JOHNSON."

"I certify that for the past six months I have been employed in Congressman BLANTON's office, and that he has paid my salary out of his own pocket. I am not related to him.

"Mrs. A. M. CLEMENTS."

Whereas when said Representative GARNER charged that Representative BLANTON has two sons on the Government pay roll, he then knew that he has his wife, Mrs. E. R. Garner, employed in his office, receiving from the Government each month $266.66, which is the entire $3,200 allotted Members for both secretary and clerk, and that the annual report of the Clerk of the House for 1920, on pages 98, 109, 120, 131, 142, 153, 164, 175, 185, 196, 207, and 218, it is shown that said Clerk paid to the said Mrs. E. R. Garner 12 checks for $266.66 each, and in the annual report of said Clerk of the House for 1921, on pages 97, 107, 118, 129, 140, 150, 162, 172, 186, 198, 209, and 220, it is shown that said Clerk paid to Mrs. E. R. Garner 12 checks for $266.66 each, covering said entire $3,200, which facts said Representative GARNER did not disclose when attacking his colleague with vicious abuse; and

Whereas, in speaking against the perquisites of Congressmen, the said BLANTON did not accuse any Members of dishonesty, but was merely fighting matters which for years have been generally denominated petty graft, and was hoping thereby to stop such practices which tend to bring Congressmen into disrepute, and such facts as he disclosed could not be destroyed through personal attack and abuse; and

Whereas on page 281 of the Clerk's report for 1921 is shown the purchase of numerous carving sets, ranging in price from $5 to $10 each, wholesale; and on page 285 shows purchase of one toilet set, $33; one toilet set, $40; one manicure set, $28; one manicure set, $25; and one manicure set, $20; and on pages 286 and 287 shows purchase of 22 carving sets, ranging in price from $20 down, and numerous razors, 192 knives, 20 toilet sets, ranging in price from $25 down; 47 manicure sets, ranging in price from $23 down, and numerous sewing sets; on page 295 shows purchase of 144 knives; on pages 334 and 335 shows purchase of numerous ladies' bags, ranging in price from $31.25 down, and toilet sets as high as $52.50 each; pages 338, 339, and 340 shows an order from one party amounting to $1,907.84, covering pocketknives, vacuum bottles, jugs at $9.50 each, razors, razor strops, carving sets as high as $20 each, toilet sets as high as $33 each, and manicure sets as high as $45 each, all for sale in the stationery room, and any of which Members could buy and have charged against their stationery account; and said reports containing page after page of things not used in a congressional office too numerous to mention; and

Whereas it is highly important to Congressmen and to the general public that if the excess mileage which many Members render as unused in their income-tax reports each year, and the manner of running said stationery room is calculated to bring Congressmen into disrepute, inasmuch as Congressmen are required to render in their income-tax reports the unused portion of their stationery allowance each year, steps should be taken by Congress to stop same; and

Whereas if keeping barbers in the House barber shop on the Government pay roll at $70 per month, and body rubbers in the House bathrooms at $95 per month, and paying the losses of the House restaurants out of the Treasury is calculated or may tend to bring Members of Congress into disrepute, steps should be taken by Congress to stop same, and the existence of such facts and the efforts made by a Congressman to stop same is no occasion or warrant for personal attack or abuse: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a select committee of 11 Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate, hold hearings, and procure all of the facts relative to said herein alleged abuses, and ascertain whether the same or any of them should be stopped.

That said committee may select its own chairman, may administer oaths, may summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and hear all evidence thereon.

That said committee shall report its findings to the House at the earliest date possible, together with such recommendations as to any change in the manner of handling the matters herein mentioned as it may deem pertinent and advisable.

DID NOT WANT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE.

That Resolution No. 322 went to the Committee on Rules on April 8, 1921. Every alleged fact therein was easily provable or disprovable by the records in the stationery room and the offices of the Clerk and Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives. Such resolution contained every charge I had made in my speeches against perquisites. If such charges were false, as asserted by Mr. GARNER, I deserved to be kicked out of office. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has served 20 years in Congress, is at the head of the most powerful committee of the House, has in charge the dispensing of assignments of Members to committees, had many times served as acting minority floor leader. He and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who were in absolute control of affairs, owed it to the House of Representatives and to the country to disprove such charges if they could. They had the power to amend this resolution in any manner they desired, and to take such action upon it as they desired, and to have the Speaker appoint on the special committee of investigation just such Members as they desired, and not a day has passed since said Resolution No. 322 was referred to the Committee on Rules on April 8, 1921, to this 4th day of March, 1923, but what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] had the privileged right under the rules of the House at any time to have reported such resolution and had the House appoint the committee of investigation. But no action whatever was taken. Such resolution is to die with this Congress. But the facts will not die.

CLERK'S LATE PRINTED REPORT CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.

There has recently been printed the Annual Report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. Its printed pages conclusively vindicate me. On January 12, 1922, I made my speech in the House against perquisites and exhibited some of the numerous articles purchasable by us in the stationery room. I quote now from the RECORD what I then said concerning the poker set and flask:

[From the RECORD, January 12, 1922.]

Now, this came from the stationery room. This is a leather-bound poker set with four decks of cards and full of red and white and blue poker chips. It is a leather-covered box and would cost about $25 in the stores in Washington. It is kept there for us Congressmen to buy with Government money. And they furnish you with a dozen extra decks of cards to go with it. [Exhibiting them.]

What else do they furnish? Things of this kind [exhibiting]: Notice the color of the lining, fancy lavender, lady's manicure set; all these pieces, every one of them with pearl handles, that in the stores of Washington would sell for about $40.

Now, you know they had so much demand for this little article [exhibiting], a pocket pint whisky flask covered with ostrich-skin leather, during Christmas time that they sold out.

If I was not telling the truth, why did not Mr. GARNER and Mr. MONDELL attack me on that day—January 12, 1922? Or why did not they attack me on some later day in January or during the month of February or during the month of March, 1922? Why did they wait until after my second speech against perquisites on April 6, 1922?

And I made my position very plain on April 6, 1922, when I then said:

[From the RECORD of April 6, 1922.]

I did not say that the Government supplies each Congressman with a whisky flask, a poker set, pocketknives, etc. What I said was that in the Sixty-fifth Congress each Member had credited to his account in the stationery room $375, and in the Sixty-sixth Congress each Member had credited to him $375, and in the present Congress each Member has had credited to him already, since April 1 last year, $250, and will have another $125 credited to him there on December 1, ostensibly to buy stationery, and that we are permitted to draw this out in cash if we want to, or we are permitted to buy anything kept in the House stationery room and have it charged against our stationery accounts. I said that these employees in the House stationery room are paid out of the Treasury to wait on us. I said that there is kept there for sale, and I exhibited on this floor the articles I procured for the purpose from said stationery room—whisky flasks covered with ostrich-skin leather; ladies' fine bags covered with ostrich-skin leather, worth, wholesale, $22.40; fine leather-covered poker sets, playing cards by the dozen; ladies' fine manicure sets, all pearl covered.

The whisky flasks only seemed to grate on the nerves of the House leaders, for no one made any attempt to deny that the many other articles I had exhibited were kept for sale in the stationery room. They could not wipe the facts out of existence, so they made an attempt to wipe me out. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asserted that I had lied, but he failed to prove wherein any statement made by me was false. Then two other leaders left the impression that no such whisky flask was ever sold in the stationery room, until on January 5, 1922, I ordered one for the express purpose of making such charge. Let me quote what they said:

[From the RECORD of April 6, 1922.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman has referred to whisky flasks; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has referred to that subject. In order that the record may be clear, I desire to state that on the 5th day of January of this year the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] went to the stationery room and asked for a whisky flask. They did not have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly not.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they advised him that they did not keep them for sale. He then requested the stationery room to order him one. The stationery room ordered him one from Charles M. Griskey Sons, of Philadelphia, Pa. The order is No. 1815, on the records of the stationery room. The flask was ordered under No. 573–3–3 Ost. It was a pint flask, covered with ostrich hide, for which Mr. BLANTON paid in cash at the time he got it, the price being $6. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that that was all done for the purpose of being able to make the statement that whisky flasks could be obtained in the stationery room.

Now, you will note their assertion that I ordered the flask on January 5, 1922. The annual report of the clerk, on page 252, shows that on November 9, 1921, payment was made for an ostrich-hide flask identical with the one purchased by me in January. I have the sales slip issued me by the House stationery room for the flask I purchased, which is dated January 11, 1922. So this is proof conclusive that such ostrich-hide flasks were sold in the stationery room in November, 1921, before I purchased mine in January, 1922. On this same page, 252, of the Clerk's annual report is shown payment on November 9, 1921, of $492 for pocketknives; one ostrich-hide ladies' toilet set, $27; one ostrich-hide ladies' toilet set, $36; one ostrich-hide ladies' bag, $35; one ostrich-hide ladies' jewel case, $24; one ostrich-hide traveling case, $50; ostrich-hide letter cases, $22; two ostrich-hide cigar cases, $24; and two ostrich-hide cigarette cases, $14. The exhibits used in my speech were all procured in January, 1922.

I have the sales slips issued to me by the House stationery room for all the articles I purchased, showing date of purchase. Let me now show the large variety of merchandise sold through the stationery room, as printed in the latest annual report of the Clerk, to wit: On page 240 is one trunk, at $22.50; and one trunk, at $36. On page 245 is one trunk, at $60.75; and one trunk and bag, at $77. On page 294 are a number of trunks, bags, and suit cases. On page 264 is 18 dozen golf balls, $134.20; one game set, $16; two electric irons, $13; two toasters, $16; one toaster, $6.75; one waffle iron, $16; one chaffing dish, $20; one grill, $15; one urn, $19.50; one percolater, $17.50; one curling iron, $6.25. On page 243 is 100 poker chips. On page 335 is 300 poker chips and playing cards. On page 317 is 18 dozen Bicycle playing cards, $81; and 12 dozen Congress playing cards, $72. On page 278 is 12 dozen Bicycle playing cards, $50.88; with playing cards also on pages 275, 276, and other pages of report. On pages 252, 253, 254, 272, 324, and 328 are 75 sets of carving sets, $419.30. On page 277 is 30 purses, $127.25. On four pages are 354 pocketknives, $591.50. On pages 341, 342 are 40 cigarette cases, $226.40. On page 290 is a tourist case, $22. On page 326 is a kodak and case, $27. On page 242 is wedding invitations, $46.75; at-home cards, $18.70. On page 300 are party and dinner invitations. On page 322 is engraved plate for wedding announcements, $17.50; wedding announcements, $8.50. On page 324 is one auto trunk, $26.50; one cord casing, one inner tube. On pages 312, 315, and 324 are numerous orders for golf bags, brassies, mashies, drivers, jiggers, niblicks, and other golf accessories. On page 408 are one dozen Bromo Seltzer, $3.60; 1,200 aspirin tablets, $14.28; three dozen Seidlitz powders, $1.50; six Bromo Seltzer, $1.80; six bottles soda mint tablets, 90 cents; two bottles 5-grain lithia tablets, $1; and six 1-ounce aromatic spirits of ammonia, $1.50. On page 483 are four dozen Seidlitz powders, $2; 1,300 aspirin tablets, $15.47; aspirin tablets, $1.75; one hundred 3-grain capsules quinine, $2; 1-ounce essence peppermint, 35 cents; twelve 1-ounce tincture iodine, $2.40; six boxes laxative bromo quinine, $1.80; six one-half pints spirits turpentine, $1.20; 1,200 aspirin tablets, $14.28; six 1-ounce essence peppermint, $2.10; six bottles Bromo Seltzer, $1.50; 400 aspirin tablets, $4.76; twelve 1-ounce castor oil, $1.20; four 2-ounce cotton, 60 cents; six bottles Sal Hepatica, $1.80; 12 bottles Bromo Seltzer, $3.

On a number of pages are expensive ladies' bags, ladies' toilet sets, ladies' manicure sets, ladies' sewing sets, and other ladies' articles having no connection with office supplies. On page 272 are one electric curling iron, $4.69; one electric pad, $10.75; one coffee urn, $18.08; one electric grill, $15; and one electric iron, $6.50. On page 312 are one electric waffle iron, $16.50; one electric iron, $6.75. Without taking up further space, the above prove conclusively that numerous articles of merchandise other than needed office supplies are sold in the stationery room of the House.

PRACTICE AT LAST STOPPED.

On January 20, 1923, the following occurred:

"Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to go in between lines 22 and 23, on page 22.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"'Page 22, after line 22, insert a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"'"No part of the sums herein appropriated shall be used for the purpose of purchasing by or through the stationery rooms other articles than stationery and office supplies essential and necessary for the conduct of public business, nor shall such funds be expended for the maintenance, storage, or care of private vehicles.'"

"Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the language is very clear. It provides that they can not use the public funds for the purchase or procuring through the stationery room of articles other than stationery and office supplies. In every campaign you have to go through the nauseating experience of having a detailed statement of the ridiculous things that are procured through the stationery rooms of the respective Houses. It is not necessary for Members, and I think we ought to stop the practice. Another thing, we are being criticized for maintaining garages for private use. If that is being done, it ought to be stopped. That is all the amendment does.

"The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

"The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were—ayes 42, noes 60.

"So the amendment was rejected.

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter, and I think we ought to have tellers. I ask for tellers.

"The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Ten Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the Clerk will read."

And then the bill went over until Monday, January 22, 1923, where, as soon as the House met, it then being possible to force a record vote on the proposition, it was again proposed in the following motion to recommit:

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. WINGO moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment: At the end of the bill add a new paragraph, to read as follows: 'No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used for the purpose of purchasing by or through the stationery room articles other than stationery and office supplies essential to and necessary for the conduct of public business, nor shall any part of such funds be expended for the maintenance, storage, or care of private vehicles.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 3.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

And the House then passed the bill embracing that amendment, which after July 1, 1923, prevents anything being sold in the House stationery room other than essential and necessary office supplies. Thus the House vindicated me in stopping this practice, my fights against which had caused me such severe criticism. Thus good came out of it after all.

EXCESS MILEAGE.

The records of the Sergeant at Arms' office show that during this Sixty-seventh Congress each Member has drawn three mileage checks in the amounts set forth in my said resolution No. 322, and just as I had charged in my speeches; likewise in the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-fifth Congresses.

STATIONERY ALLOWANCE.

The records of the Clerk's office show that during this Sixty-seventh Congress each Member has been granted three stationery allowance checks of $125 each, aggregating $375 to each Member for stationery for this Sixty-seventh Congress. Likewise that each Member drew $375 in the Sixty-sixth Congress and $375 each in the Sixty-fifth Congress for stationery, just as I had stated. And just as they had done formerly, this latest report of the Clerk of the House on page 260 shows that Mr. GARNER drew all of his allowance in cash, and on page 261 that Mr. SUMNERS drew all of his allowance in cash. And since Mr. GARNER saw fit to assert that my sons had worked for me, without disclosing his own office affairs, it is only just to state that this latest report from the Clerk of the House on pages 98, 109, 120, 131, 142, 153, 164, 175, 186, 196, 207, and 218 shows that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, his wife, Mrs. E. R. Garner, was paid the entire $3,200 allowed him for both a secretary and clerk, just as she had drawn the entire $3,200 for the two preceding fiscal years.

RESTAURANT COSTS PEOPLE $36,000 ANNUALLY.

During the proceedings on January 20, 1923, I called attention to the fact that on page 14 of the hearings Chairman ANDERSON had developed the information from the Clerk of the House that the actual loss above receipts that the people are paying on our House restaurant amounts to $36,000 annually. I then read from such hearings the Government salaries paid to restaurant employees, to wit:

The main chef gets $200 a month; the baker gets $120 per month; the second cook gets $110 per month; the fry cook, $80; the assistant fry cook, $60; the butcher, $80; ice-plant man, $90; helper, $40; another helper, $40; oysterman, $50; pot washer, $50; helper, $40; dishwasher, $40; another dishwasher, $40; fireman, $60; coffee boy, $60; steam-table man, $80; sandwich man, $60; helper, $40; manager storeroom, $100; checker, $90; telautograph, $40; assistant manager, $150; manager, $150; second cook, $125; checker, $90; three waiters, one at $20 and two at $40 each; buss man, $35; silver man, $40; waiter, $40; half-time buss man, $24; waiter, $20; another buss man, $35; 17 waiters at amounts varying from $20 to $40; head waiter, $100; another waiter, $20; cashier, $80; 5 waitresses at from $20 to $50; checker, $75; another buss boy, $40; another waitress, $40; another silver man, $40; another waiter, $60; second cook, $60; dishwasher, $40; another chef, $100; runner, $40; another coffee boy, $40; head waiter, $75; head waiter, $40; with the names of each of these employees in this restaurant given in the hearing.

Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND], who had charge of the management of the restaurant, after admitting that the figures given by me were correct, proceeded to explain some of the losses, as follows:

"Mr. IRELAND. * * * Out of the profits we might have made in the House management of the restaurant we have been compelled to make a great many purchases of materials, linen, china, glassware, and silverware that have been carried away by souvenir hunters or been borrowed in the House Office Building by clerks of Members and through carelessness not returned. A few items may interest the House. It has been necessary to purchase 150 dozen napkins. They cost $7 a dozen at least. They have disappeared, and it is impossible, without hiring a force of detectives that would cost more than the restaurant, to stop it. Ten dozen table cloths, at least $50 a month for dishes, not entirely due to breakage, although some were destroyed in handling. Three hundred dollars goes for broken glassware. The repairs we have kept up out of the profits have been over $300 a year on items like repairing the oven, and so forth. The rent of the telautograph, which we can not get along without and give any sort of service to Members, requires the expenditure of approximately $300 a year. The laundry runs from $300 a month up.

"Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

"Mr. GARNER. I did not quite catch the number of napkins the gentleman said it was necessary to replace.

"Mr. IRELAND. One hundred and fifty dozen.

"Mr. GARNER. Was that number of napkins worn out during the period of one year?

"Mr. IRELAND. I do not think many of them were worn out.

"Mr. GARNER. Who stole 150 dozen napkins?

"Mr. IRELAND. Now, the gentleman is giving me too big a job. All we know is they disappeared or were worn out.

"Mr. GARNER. It seems to me the management ought to have a better checking system than to let 150 dozen napkins get away in one year.

"Mr. IRELAND. Does not the gentleman understand that the manager is in a menial capacity serving the House of Representatives, and it is impossible to question the employees of the Members of the House without creating a sensation or a situation that would be worse than losing the entire property?

"Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman mean to say that in case my clerk should take a dozen napkins and fail to return them that he would have sufficient timidity not to ask him to bring them back?

"Mr. IRELAND. I do not imagine the gentleman's clerk would do that.

"Mr. GARNER. Well, somebody's clerks have taken 150 dozen napkins."

For new equipment for this House restaurant, page 493 of the Clerk's latest report shows one bill for $536.78, another for $1,747.44, and on page 494 another bill for $14,789.22. My objecting to this restaurant loss may seem a small matter, unworthy of notice to some of my colleagues, but to the people back home, who have to pay these bills, it may be of importance.

IT IS THE PEOPLE'S APPROVAL WE SEEK.

All of us crave the affection and approval of our colleagues. Despite past friction, I have affection for them all and will go the limit to assist and favor them where it does not cost the public anything, but it is the approval of our people that is of first importance. When we lose the approval of our constituents our service ends. Of course, when we do not do to suit our colleagues and make them angry, they have the power to arbitrarily kick us out, but even then they must go back to the people for approval; and if we have done right, we may depend upon the people to approve our action, and we have left at least the approval of our own conscience.

OWE MUCH TO THE PEOPLE.

I owe much to my constituents. In 1908 they elected me judge of the forty-second judicial district, embracing the counties of Taylor, Callahan, Eastland, Stephens, and Shackelford, defeating three splendid men, Judge J. H. Calhoun, Judge D. G. Hill, and Judge J. H. Hammond. In 1912 Hon. Dallas Scarborough, of Abilene, entered the race. After we had a joint debate at Ranger, he withdrew, and I again defeated Judge D. G. Hill. In 1916 Judge J. M. Wagstaff and myself announced for Congress in the old sixteenth (Jumbo) district, which embraced 59 counties, running 556 miles from Mineral Wells to El Paso. We both lived in Abilene. Judge Wagstaff was then a member of the legislature from Taylor County, where he had lived 35 years. We let a preferential primary in our home county decide. We had 21 joint debates, one in every precinct, and he was defeated February 5, 1916. In the Democratic primary July, 1916, I defeated Congressman W. R. Smith, of El Paso (later appointed Federal judge), and Hon. R. N. Grisham. I left the circuit bench to come to Congress. After being placed in the new seventeenth district, I was again elected in 1918, the vote in the Democratic primary July 27, 1918, being: THOMAS L. BLANTON, 32,034; Oscar Callaway, 3,355; William G. Blackmon, 3,641; and Joe Adkins, 9,816. In the Democratic primary of July 24, 1920, heading union labor's black list and weathering the bitterest campaign imaginable, I again defeated Hon. R. N. Grisham by a majority of 11,176 votes and was reelected in November, defeating Hon. W. D. Cowan, of San Saba, by a majority of 18,804 votes, leading the State Democratic ticket in my district by 1,518 votes.

PEOPLE'S CONTINUED SUPPORT MOST VALUABLE INDORSEMENT.

These attacks upon me in Congress naturally incited increased opposition in the 1922 campaign. There was an organized concerted move to break me down, if possible. Hon. W. J. Cunningham, of Abilene, who has resided in Taylor County many years longer than I have, and the then prosecuting attorney of my old judicial district, entered the race. It was hoped that he could take Taylor County from me. There were five other formidable candidates—Hon. Ernest G. Allbright, of Brown County, who was secretary of the Brownwood Chamber of Commerce; Prof. N. S. Holland, of Jones County, principal of the Stamford schools; Judge Joseph B. Dibrell, a prominent attorney of Coleman County; and former Congressman Oscar Callaway, of Comanche County. Under the Texas laws where no candidate receives a majority of all votes in the first primary, then all candidates except the two highest are dropped, and they run in a second primary. The intention was to combine all forces against me in a second primary.

I made 54 speeches over the district without mentioning any opponent. Then culminated their mud slinging. After making 40 speeches Mr. Allbright withdrew. Professor Holland failed to pay his assessments and withdrew. Mr. Callaway filled his newspaper, the Comanche Chief, with vicious attacks upon me. He reproduced all the attacks made upon me in Congress in circulars and flooded the district with them. He and others for him spoke in practically every precinct. Judge Wagstaff and Mayor Dallas Scarborough organized against me in Taylor County and had 50,000 big circulars embracing all kinds of ridiculous charges, as well as all the attacks made upon me in Congress, and circulated them in all counties. Under their guidance Attorneys Robert Wagstaff and W. E. Martin practically lived in an auto, speaking through all the counties against me. Organized labor exhausted every means possible to defeat me. But my friends remained true and loyal and I carried 18 out of the 19 counties.

"I hereby certify the following as the official returns:

Democratic primary July 22, 1922—Certified official returns, congressional race.

County.	Thomas L. Blanton.	Oscar Callaway.	W. J. Cunningham.	Joseph B. Dibrell, jr.

"THOMAS L. BLANTON received 14,448 more votes than Oscar Callaway, but lacks 85 votes of having a majority over his three opponents. N. S. Holland's scattering vote not counted, as he withdrew and did not pay assessments. Certified this August 4, 1922.

"FRED COCKRELL,
"Democratic Chairman,
"Seventeenth Congressional District of Texas."

Notwithstanding that it was also Judge Cunningham's home county, you will note that I carried Taylor County by a substantial majority over all opponents. Also note that I carried his home county of Coleman against Judge Joe B. Dibrell. Also note that I carried Jones County, where lives Professor Holland, by a majority of 639 votes over all opponents. Also that in Shackleford County, where Professor Holland and myself formerly lived and where we both married, I carried it by a majority of 393 votes over all opponents.

On July 28, 1922, Oscar Callaway sent a circular letter to citizens in every school community in every county stating that he would force me into the run-off primary, in which letter he said:

> I think with the combined opposition backing Mr. Cunningham, Mr. Dibrell, Mr. Holland, and myself we can almost completely break down BLANTON'S support. I have been assured by Mr. Dibrell and Mr. Cunningham and their supporters that they will vigorously oppose Mr. BLANTON in the run-off and support me, and we are going to make one of the most determined fights in this congressional district. * * * Please at once get together all the opposition to BLANTON in a meeting, not only in your immediate vicinity but have the opposition hold meetings in each school community and organize a determined fight. * * * We are going to win this fight. We have got to win it. * * *
> Sincerely your friend,
> OSCAR CALLAWAY.

Then Mr. Callaway and his numerous speakers for him covered the district by speaking in practically every precinct. He had former Congressman James L. Slayden campaign the district for him. As I had spent the limit allowed by law in the first primary, I made no campaign in the second. I placed my whole confidence and trust in the people, and the following official returns of the second primary will show how the people stood by me:

Seventeenth district of Texas—Certified official returns of the vote for Congressman in the second Democratic primary election held August 26, 1922.

The above tabulation was certified as correct by the Democratic executive committee to the Democratic district convention at Abilene, Tex., September 2, 1922.

Again I carried 18 out of the 19 counties. And the following vote of Taylor County by voting precincts shows how my loyal home people stood behind me, despite the active, prominent, local opposition in Abilene:

And when the Democratic convention met they passed the following:

"At the Democratic district convention for the seventeenth congressional district of Texas, which met in Abilene, Tex., September 2, 1922, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

RESOLUTION.

"Whereas Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON defeated four opponents in the recent July primary by a plurality of 14,448 votes, and also defeated Oscar Callaway in the late run-off election by a majority of 12,620 votes, each time carrying 18 out of the 19 counties in his district; and

"Whereas among the people who know him best, and where he practiced law and served eight years on the district bench, his old home county of Shackleford gave BLANTON 684 votes and Callaway only 205 votes, and his home county of Taylor gave BLANTON a majority of 1,850 votes, he carrying every voting precinct of both counties and the Rock Hill box by a unanimous vote; while Congressman JOHN N. GARNER, who made an unjust attack upon him in Congress, lost his home county of Uvalde by the vote of 760 for GARNER and 1,123 for his opponent Briscoe, said GARNER losing 12 out of the 14 voting precincts in his home county of Uvalde; and

"Whereas the Democrats of his district have again indorsed Congressman BLANTON and his work in Congress, and have thus fully vindicated him not only upon the unjust attempt of Leader MONDELL to expel but also upon the unjust attempts made in and out of Congress to discredit him and his work: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Democrats of the seventeenth congressional district of Texas in convention assembled:

"First, that Congressman BLANTON should be commended rather than censured for the earnest efforts he made to clean up the Government Printing Office and to stop waste, extravagance, and graft;

"Second, that posted citizens who read the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD know that the attacks made upon him in and out of Congress were not deserved but were unjustly made in a jealous attempt to discredit him; and

"Third, that Congressman BLANTON has ever proven himself to be the true friend of the masses, and has the confidence, esteem, and commendation of the great majority of his constituents, who, with other good citizens throughout Texas and the Nation, will continue to stand behind him in his efforts to improve existing conditions.

"Adopted unanimously.

"E. N. KIRBY,
"Secretary Democratic Convention."

Some of my colleagues frequently ask me why I work so hard day and night, and why I remain on the floor of the House so constantly, watching legislation. I have placed all this data in the RECORD to let them know why. I owe it to my loyal, faithful constituents who have confidence in me. I am trying to merit that wonderful support they give me. The Clerk of the House of Representatives has kindly given me the following certificate:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Clerk's Office.

I hereby certify that the original official tally sheets used in recording yea and nay votes, and on calls of the House during the third and fourth sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress, November 20, 1922, to March 3, 1923, show that Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON and Hon. EDWIN D. RICKETTS are recorded as present and voting on each and every call, being the only Members of the House who are so recorded.

WM. TYLER PAGE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

LIABILITY TO THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

In his attack on me the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], asserting that he spoke for the Democratic Party, said that I was a liability to the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party is our people back home. We Members here are merely their servants. I am willing to match my standing with his among our respective Democrats back home. He has lived in Uvalde County, Tex., for years. There the people know the worth of their neighbors. In the last Democratic primary, July 22, 1922, he was opposed by Mr. John T. Briscoe, of Medina County, who was practically unknown politically. Yet note the returns from such election in his Uvalde County by precincts:

Official returns from Democratic primary election held July 22, 1922, in Uvalde County, Tex., for Congress, fifteenth district.

Election precinct.	John N. Garner.	John T. Briscoe.
1. Uvalde	233	298
2. Sabinal	76	146
3. Utopia	46	90
4. Con Can	14	16
5. Aldine	7	23
6. Montel	30	39
7. Laguna	9	12
8. Cline	11	5
9. Bear Creek	9	19
10. Leona	4	12
11. Knippa	56	42
12. Uvalde	143	228
13. Sabinal	119	165
14. Reagan Wells	3	28
Total	760	1,123

Thus the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] lost both voting boxes in his home city of Uvalde and carried only two out of the 14 voting boxes of his home county, the two boxes carried by him being small, that of Cline, where the vote was Garner, 11, and Briscoe, 5, and Knippa, where the vote was Garner, 56, to Briscoe, 42. Whereas in the final contest with Mr. Callaway I carried all 26 voting boxes in my home county by an overwhelming majority in each, when, according to Mr. Callaway's own assertion, he had the combined help, influence, and support of Mr. Cunningham, Mr. Dibrell, and Mr. Holland, and this in addition to the active opposition of organized labor, Judge Wagstaff, and Mayor Dallas Scarborough.

IS IT GARNER OR BLANTON OUT OF LINE WITH DEMOCRATS?

From the statistics of the congressional election of November 7, 1922, just compiled and printed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, I quote the vote received by each of the other Texas Congressmen in the general election last November, to wit: Eugene Black, 15,697; John C. Box, 21,216; Morgan G. Sanders, 16,323; Sam Rayburn, 21,327; Hatton W. Sumners, 23,051; Luther A. Johnson, 18,934; Clay Stone Briggs, 12,171; Daniel E. Garrett, 20,058; Joseph J. Mansfield, 17,479; James P. Buchanan, 18,590; Tom Connally, 16,092; Fritz G. Lanham, 20,014; Guinn Williams, 17,905; Harry M. Wurzbach, 19,083; John N. Garner, 14,366; C. B. Hudspeth, 17,970; Marvin Jones, 24,515.

The complete corrected returns from my district show that in this general election I received 24,986 votes, my opponent being from my home city of Abilene, Hon. W. D. Girand, Federal commissioner for years in the United States court there, carrying Taylor County against him by the vote of 2,139 to 143, as shown by the following:

"THOMAS L. BLANTON led the Democratic ticket in his district by 648 votes over the Democratic nominee for governor and by 6,851 votes over the Democratic nominee for United States Senator."

Does the above indicate that Texas Democrats deem me a liability? Has any Member, under fire or otherwise, ever been accorded by his constituents greater confidence or more loyal support? In an editorial published April 27, 1922, among other things, the Houston (Tex.) Daily Post said:

THE SEVENTEENTH DISTRICT ANSWERS.

"The dispatches recorded a few days ago, when Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON arrived at Abilene, his home town, that his neighbors accorded him an ovation.

"Apart from Mr. BLANTON's personality, the circumstance is noteworthy, considered in connection with the tongue-lashing administered to the Abilene Representative by his colleague, Mr. GARNER. Abilene responded with an ovation, which must be considered somewhat as an answer to Mr. GARNER.

"One paper in South Carolina, the Columbia State, reflected on the quality of the citizenry of the seventeenth district, but it can be stated without offense, we hope, that no South Carolina district can compare with the seventeenth Texas district in point of wealth, population, or intelligence.

"It is the whitest district in Texas, color considered. The illiteracy there is the lowest of any district in Texas and confined almost exclusively to the less than 5,000 Mexican population. It contains 110,000 more people than Mr. GARNER's district, which contains 65,000 Mexicans in a population of 222,000.

"Now, what do the Texas Representatives make of it?

"The voters of the seventeenth district are not uninformed as to the abuses Mr. BLANTON exposed. Mr. BLANTON misrepresented nothing by having the whisky flask ordered. The flasks had been kept on sale, and by ordering the flask BLANTON merely showed how the stationery account could be diverted.

"Since the official report of the Clerk shows that it is a common thing, and has been always, to draw the stationery account in cash and devote it to personal use without accounting, the ordering of the flask wasn't needed to establish the charge of petty graft.

"The more the quarrel between BLANTON and his colleagues is aired, the more it appears that the charge of petty graft is not what has given offense, but the BLANTON campaign against appropriations not authorized by law. On the very day Mr. GARNER stationed himself behind his constitutional immunity and broadsided BLANTON the Abilene man came back and raised points of order against numerous appropriations and sent them to the discard.

"BLANTON declared that his colleagues were honest and would prefer that the petty graft system were not in existence, but that it was unpopular to raise the question. A generous estimate of the conscientious scruples of Members, but all the same the system could not stand if 20 Members were to fight it.

"As unpopular as Mr. BLANTON has become among his colleagues, he has reached the understanding of thousands of people in Texas who live beyond the confines of his district. The issue he has raised is not going to die, because it involves the integrity of the public service."

The Kansas Official is the official magazine published by the County Clerks' Association, the County Commissioners' Association, the Registers of Deeds' Association, the District Clerks' Association, the County Treasurers' Association, the Probate Judges' Association, the County Engineers' Association, the State Peace Officers' Association, and the Probation Officers' Association of the State of Kansas, and edited by Mr. O. K. Swayze, at Topeka, Kans. I quote the following excerpts from an editorial from the Kansas Official, issue of September, 1922:

ALL THE PEOPLE CAN NOT BE FOOLED—SMART PRACTICES MAY DECEIVE A FEW POLITICIANS EASILY INFLUENCED, BUT THE TEXAS VOTERS ARE CONVINCED THAT CONGRESSMAN THOMAS L. BLANTON'S CAUSE IS JUST.

* * * "This indorsement of Mr. BLANTON by the voters of his district is a signal victory over the unjust attempts repeatedly undertaken to discredit him, and the Democrats and Republicans of his district have by their vote commended his course in his efforts to clean up the rotten conditions that existed in the Government Printing Office, where he showed conclusively there was waste, extravagance, and graft, under the sanction and connivance of unions. His courageous fight for freedom from the yoke of the Typographical Union in the Government Printery brought all sorts of threats and underhand efforts to break him financially, socially, and as a Member of Congress, and caused him to spend his fortune in combating, singlehanded, their despicable plans. Undaunted, he stuck to his text, proved his claims, and was vindicated by the people at home.

"THOMAS L. BLANTON will go back to Congress a victor over the MONDELL faction that tried to undo him, and will have the solid support of a district at home as well as the country at large.

"The damnable history of the fight on BLANTON is a matter of public record and is no credit to the Mondells in the House nor to those who control the Government Printery."

I quote the following excerpts from an editorial by Hon. Roy G. Watson of date September 5, 1922, in the Houston (Tex.) Daily Post:

THE SEVENTEENTH DISTRICT.

* * * "They had all the facts before them, and they decided that BLANTON was a man to retain in office.

"And why not? The petty abuses and extravagances of Capitol Hill in Washington ought to be decried.

"Points of order against unlawful items in appropriation bills ought to be raised.

"Unanimous consent ought not to be easy to obtain when raids upon the badly depleted National Treasury are pending.

"The little vices of the alleged stationery account ought to be beneath the dignity of Congress.

"The mileage allowance ought to be reduced to an honest basis.

"Such conditions as existed in the Government Printing Office were disgraceful, and somebody ought to have denounced them.

"BLANTON'S voice rang out against these things, and, of course, the wrath of the whole body rose against him.

"But there ought to be a voice courageous enough to stand for common propriety in Congress, and if BLANTON'S must be the voice, his constituents say they are responsible, and they accept the consequences.

"But BLANTON will behold scores of new faces in the Sixty-eighth Congress, when he stands at the bar of the House to take the oath of office."

The foregoing are illustrative of scores of such editorials and commendations I have received from patriotic Americans, Democrats and Republicans, from varied portions of the United States. I forgive my colleague, Mr. GARNER. He was angry. After all, he is a splendid, good fellow, and we shall yet be good friends. And I also forgive Mr. MONDELL. I joined my colleagues in giving him a parting gift, and I am really glad that he has been given an appointment, though I did strenuously oppose his being made a Cabinet officer and placed in charge of the great Department of the Interior, to which he so ardently aspired. I could not forget that in the Autobiography of Theodore Roosevelt (1919), on page 431, this great President of our Nation said that—

Mr. MONDELL consistently fought for local and private interests as against the interests of the people as a whole.

And again, on page 395, President Roosevelt said:

Mr. MONDELL is a Congressman who took the lead in every measure to prevent the conservation of our natural resources and the preservation of the national domain for the use of home seekers.

Many prominent Republicans scattered over the United States seem to have the same opinion, for I have received numerous copies of letters they wrote to Republican leaders here and to the President protesting against appointing Mr. MONDELL as Secretary of the Interior. The following letter written by Hon. Francis Ralston Welsh, a prominent Republican of Philadelphia, is a typical sample of same, to wit:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 11, 1923.

Hon. JAMES E. WATSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WATSON: I understand that the friends of Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL are endeavoring to have President Harding appoint him, etc. * * * I write to you as one of those closest to the President to suggest that such an appointment of a man who has become so malodorous as Mr. MONDELL would do the party an immense amount of harm. * * *

MONDELL'S attack on Congressman BLANTON in the House was * * * as was ever committed. That attack has already done the party a great deal of harm and has been directly responsible for the alienation of support in the last election of many Republicans, including one friend of the President who is very influential in Ohio politics. This gentleman has given the action of MONDELL as one of his reasons for refusing to contribute to the Republican campaign fund, and it was a large item in making me take the same position. It did much to alienate the support of one Republican newspaper and to cause lukewarmness on the part of others, and many prominent men have reported to me that it has had a similar effect among their friends. * * * The chief cause of MONDELL'S opposition to BLANTON was the fact that BLANTON tried to save the United States Government and citizens from the blight of criminal labor unionism and raised points of order against appropriation sneakers which had no business to be where they were, or they could not have been knocked out on points of order. MONDELL therefore is thoroughly malodorous to many people and was very thoroughly rejected in the recent election by his own State, and correspondence shows that his attack on BLANTON is a stench in the nostrils of some decent Republicans.

It is gratifying to see that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is at last to use power presses instead of hand presses.

Sincerely,

F. R. WELSH.

It is recorded in Holy Writ that "they hanged Haman upon the scaffold which he had prepared for Mordecai."

EFFORT PAYS, AFTER ALL.

I feel that I have been vindicated absolutely. When my colleagues who have differed with me reflect they will realize that my purposes and intentions are good, that I have no ill will toward them, but that in all I have done and am doing I am earnestly, conscientiously striving to do my duty and keep my pledges to my constituents and be of some service to the American people. I hope to make friends with them all. Points of order are efficacious. They help to stop many wasteful appropriations. Let me cite pages 1204 and 1205 of the RECORD for January 3, 1923, showing that when a motion to recommit was made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to appropriate the usual $360,000 for free garden seeds for the next fiscal year the following occurred:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion to recommit.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion to recommit on the ground that the amendment is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill and it is a change of existing law. Especially I call the attention of the Chair to that part of the amendment embraced in the motion to recommit which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make seed contracts for a period as long as five years, extending the contracts through the life of more than two Congresses. It is unauthorized, and it should not be permitted on an appropriation bill.

And after debate the following is the Speaker's ruling, sustaining my point of order:

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers to rule. The Chair has heard the gentleman. The Chair thinks he ought to suggest that preserving the authority and binding force of parliamentary law is as much the duty of each Member of the House as it is the duty of the Chair, that the rights of every one of us here depend upon it, and that each Member ought to vote on such a question, not as his interest or desires in respect to the particular subject may sway him but as he thinks is really the law. It is unquestionably true that several times the Committee of the Whole House has overruled the decision of the Chairman of that committee and has held that an amendment like this is in order. That, however, has never been done in the House. If the House should take that action, of course the Chair would bow to the opinion of the House and follow it; but until then the Chair thinks that he is bound to follow the rules of parliamentary law, and the Chair thinks the same duty rests upon every individual Member of the House. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, much as I respect the Speaker's judgment and fairness, I must respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

And upon a roll call record test the membership of the House sustained the Speaker's ruling by a vote of 173 to 85. And thus for the first time in our lifetime Congressmen and Senators will not distribute under their franks next fiscal year the usual $360,000 worth of free garden seeds.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, we are all tired and pretty well worn to-night and perhaps are growing just a trifle petulant under the strain, beyond our usual urbanity of mien, and I can not bring myself, even in these closing hours, to break my record and long impose upon your good nature and patience. So only for a brief moment do I purpose to test your forbearance.

I think it safe to assume that this is the last resolution I shall ever offer to the House of Representatives. In four years' rather constant work as chairman of the Committee on Accounts—during the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses—not a single resolution that I have presented to the House has been defeated. We have had some pretty close calls on a few and two or three have been withdrawn on points of order sustained, but during the period mentioned none have been rejected by a vote of the House or failed of passage. This record, I presume, may not be unusual and the Committee on Accounts takes to itself no credit for wisdom or judgment in the character or nature of the resolutions offered other than that such as we possess of these attributes has been employed conscientiously. Rather do we usurp this opportunity to thank the House—both majority and minority—for their tolerance of our offering, their kindly consideration and apparent appreciation of the troublesome, vexatious, and aggravating nature of the matters, even though relatively unimportant, with which we were forced to deal. Whether it existed or not there has at least been an implied confidence, evidenced by the record, which the House has placed in this committee, and for this implied confidence we are deeply grateful and keenly appreciative. You might have made our lot much more uncomfortable than you have—especially the Democrats. The glaring occasional exceptions have been quite forgotten.

Perhaps no resolution presented from the Committee on Accounts fails to offer just ground for criticism; the very nature of the work of the committee in this regard almost at once admits it. And this grievous condition will continue to obtain just so long as the present lack of systematic coordination, cooperation, and relative equities of both salaries and duties of the various employees of the House is allowed to exist.

The Committee on Accounts, if not officially charged, is constantly importuned by a vast majority of the Members of the House to create some new position, or to raise the salary of some favored employee, or to grant specific additional compensation for extra services. Always an additional expense created, never a retrenchment. Often these cases are quite too meritorious to be denied. The Committee on Accounts inherits the job of correcting the situation and bringing about some equitable relationship of salaries and duties of employees of the House. But under the present antiquated and unbusinesslike system of doing this "piecemeal," as it were, such efforts will never avail anything or correct the evil, or abolish the abuse complained of, which both parties have employed with equal avarice as control of the House changes. It is quite amusing to see the strongest proponents of such resolutions become the greatest economists and "conscientious objectors" with each change of political complexion of the House. This "piecemeal" effort through the Committee on Accounts only provokes attack and will never eradicate the evil. Nothing but a complete reorganization of the House system of employment on a modern business basis of efficiency and the elimination of the patronage system will effect the desired end.

The consistency of the Committee on Accounts in this endeavor to humbly assist in such a movement is evidenced by the fact that for four years a bill contemplating such needed reform in our organization has been before this House. Also, that we employed the Bureau of Efficiency to make a survey of the House organization, and that report is on file and available. All these efforts have not met with the favor we had anticipated. This will all be turned over to the new joint committee just appointed to deal with this situation.

Now to turn to the business in hand. So long as you insist on adhering to this antiquated system of dealing with the inequalities growing out of it you must abide by the method you have yourselves provided. This little, and admittedly unimportant, committee seems to be able to arouse more unsolicited attention than it really deserves. Ofttimes I have thought that a comparatively insignificant resolution from the Committee on Accounts involving a trifling sum to be expended from the contingent fund attracts greater interest and attention than an appropriation dealing with millions of the public moneys. Why is this? What is the use? The membership of this House does certainly not admit a caliber of "penny wise and pound foolish" economy. As before cited, these resolutions usually pass; and each Member who vociferously objects has expressed his views on similar occasions on similar resolutions for the benefit of the "dear people," and such expressions are of record. It is simply a matter of reiteration, and why not refer to a former printed record and save some of the oft-defended people's money.

As a case in point: A few days ago we offered a resolution raising the basic salary of the chief janitor of the House $300. It was a very meritorious case. He deserved it. It was sponsored by one of the most conscientious Members of the House. It was the only request he had ever made before the committee so long as I have been in charge. The corresponding position in the Senate paid $500 more. I cite this as a splendid case deserving advancement, yet it provoked heated debate when the House should have devoted its attention to much more important matters. A roll call was demanded, and sufficient Members responded to have it ordered. The resolution passed with a comfortable majority, as usual. Several men of better ability consumed time, and little else, delaying the more important business of the House by reiteration of former speeches. The actual time consumed and the delay accomplished by filibuster cost the Government three times the amount involved in the resolution, and more. No great consistency of economic effort is shown in such a performance.

So long as you condone a custom, can you reconcile the practice as resulting in an economic good? I have never presumed to lecture the House and feel it would be quite presumptuous to do so now. These remarks are born of a jealousy of the good name of this House and of the economic efficiency of its membership. I shall be quite as jealous of its performance in my withdrawal therefrom as I have in participation in its proceedings. I can never hope or wish to be associated with a finer body of men whose energy and splendid, unusual ability is more conscientiously directed than those with whom it has been my privilege to serve for the last six years. I do not like to see them held up to derision by the public as wasting their time over such trifling matters as cited when the ultimate result is never changed. It is time wasted where their efforts and ability deserve much better.

I can add nothing to the question involved, the resolution under consideration, than the observations I have already made in general. I feel confident that the resolution will pass.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, every day in every way it is confirmed that "there is nothing new under the sun." In a couple of days we will probably see in the public press the usual statements that the present Congress has been the worst in the history of the Republic. Do not take it too seriously. I would not be surprised, because every day in every way the people are forgetting the advice of good old Ben Franklin, "God helps them that help themselves." It would seem that the clamor grows louder and more insistent, but perhaps not. I note that Daniel Webster in 1833 made a speech in the Senate of the United States in which he said:

> There are persons who constantly clamor. They complain of oppression, speculation, and pernicious influence of accumulated wealth. They cry out loudly against all banks and corporations and all means by which small capitalists become united in order to produce important and beneficial results. They carry on mad hostility against all established institutions. They would choke the fountains of industry and dry all streams. In a country of unbounded liberty they clamor against oppression. In a country of perfect equality they would move heaven and earth against privilege and monopoly. In a country where property is more evenly divided than anywhere else they rend the air, shouting agrarian doctrines. In a country where wages of labor are high beyond parallel they would teach the laborer that he is but an oppressed slave.

Amid all the clamors the present Congress has fulfilled its functions in a manner that bespeaks its high character. It has succeeded in materially reducing the burden of taxation. It has considered those things that are of vital interest to the people. It has been truly human and representative of the people to some extent in their fallacies, but mainly hewing to the line of correct action.

We are living in a wonderful age. New problems and new relations confront us. The world disturbances have taken us out of the rut and brought us face to face with altered ideas and changed conditions. It is remarkable that amid the turmoil and with these new conditions Congress has been able to function in such a common-sense way. It is a demonstration of the wonderful strength of the United States. It is an index of the intelligence and capacity of the American people for self-government.

The Sixty-seventh Congress will be assailed and called bad names, but the Members need not be downcast because it is a repetition of the usual.

A few days ago a presumably intelligent chaplain of the Massachusetts Senate called God's attention to our delinquencies for fear God might not know it already:

The New England spirit is not dead. * * * At the present time it views with sadness the record of the National Congress, soon to end. It is alarmed at its evident lack of earnest purpose, undignified proceedings, and blindness to the public welfare. Statesmanship has been lost sight of in personal prejudice and bickering. Domestic and world-wide problems have been left unsolved and the people's reasonable hopes and eager anticipations dashed aside.

This is old stuff. The Fortieth Congress, in which sat Roscoe Conkling, Samuel Randall, Rutherford B. Hayes, James A. Garfield, Schuyler Colfax, and other men of great capacity, was complimented by the Atlantic Monthly of 1869, as follows:

Congress has rather a bad name. The effect produced upon the country some weeks ago by certain tirades in the Senate shows how general is the feeling that the Congress of the United States is sliding down toward the bottomless pit of infamy, where the aldermen, councilmen, and supervisors of the city of New York are more than content to dwell.

* * * * * * *

The reputation of Congress is, to use the words of Henry Clay, "part of the moral property" of the Nation. It is a precious right of the people to think as well of Congress as the truth respecting it allows.

The Twenty-eighth Congress, in which sat Henry Clay, Franklin Pierce, Millard Fillmore, Thomas Benton, Silas Wright, John C. Calhoun and many others whose names stand high upon the roll of our country's statesmen, was commented upon by the American Review in March, 1845, as follows:

The last sands of the present Congress run low and soon, amid the deafening huzzas of the exulting, scheming, struggling thousands who have assembled in Washington to dignify and grace by their presence the inauguration of a new President, it will noiselessly dissolve into its original nothingness. Undeserving as it may be of a mausoleum, or even a monument, it may not clearly be denied an epitaph.

The Forty-third Congress was the subject of comment by the editor of the Nation, July 2, 1874. The Nation at that time stood very high among the magazines of the country, being edited by Mr. Godkin, who was one of the country's most able political writers. His choice and scathing comments are as follows:

THE WORK AND CHARACTER OF CONGRESS.

The daily press has classified the work of the present Congress with remarkable unanimity in holding that the things which ought not to be done Congress has very properly left undone, and the things which ought to be done it has left undone likewise. In other words, the judgment of the country is that the sins of Congress are those of omission rather than of commission; and that we have not had a very bad Congress because we have had nearly as possible no Congress at all.

* * * * * * *

A House of Representatives, which could only be held together by speeches that produced laughter and that allowed itself to be bullied and led by the buffoonery of Butler, is not one from which much can be hoped; and the general expression of the country is not far from the right when everybody thanks heaven that we have got off so well. The present House of Representatives is the most unwieldy legislative body that the country ever had—for which, however, it is not responsible—and it is made up largely of ignorant men of a lower average of intellectual ability than is usually found there.

* * * * * * *

Our financial troubles, our paralyzed industries, our wrecked railway and manufacturing enterprises are largely due to the constant presence of this cheap and worthless material in Congress.

I have completed my second term in Congress. I have devoted every minute of my time for four years to the service of the people of my district and of the country. To render proper service, in accordance with my lights, it was necessary to do so. During these four years I have been brought into intimate relations with most of the Members of the House of Representatives. During all of that time I never came into contact with any Member whom I thought was not keen and anxious to do those things that were for the best interests of the people whom he represented and the country at large. I am impressed with the high character of the Members of Congress. They are not supermen; they are not all paragons of wisdom, but they are truly representative of the intelligence of the American people.

The Sixty-seventh Congress has performed its difficult tasks well, and its Members have cause to rejoice in its accomplishments.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, it is most gratifying to observe a complete change of sentiment in the Congress of the United States with reference to flood-control legislation. Within the past few years this question has changed from a partisan and sectional one to a recognized national problem of vast proportions. This is the first time in the history of the Government that gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber are coming to the support of legislation to control the Mississippi River and its tributaries, coming whole-heartedly and without reservation, believing that the industrial and economic conditions of all sections of the country will be greatly benefited by this legislation.

The flood control act of 1917 was bitterly opposed on the floor of this House, but the results of that act have amply justified its passage. Enough has been done in controlling the floods of the great river and its tributaries to reveal the possibilities of the great valley when the Government assumes full and complete control of its flood waters. Confidence is being rapidly reestablished in the rising value of this the most fertile and productive area in the world. It is now happily recognized that these lands places on the tax rolls, when their real values are revealed, will return to the Government in taxes alone all the moneys that will necessarily be appropriated for their complete protection.

The whole country is vitally interested, and those of us who live in that region and who have worked earnestly and constantly for the passage of this measure are gratified to-day beyond expression. With genuine delight we hear the voices of Members of Congress from the East, from the North, and from the West joining with Members from the South, all recognizing that this is a real national problem, all rejoicing in the promise to-day of greatly increasing the wealth of the Nation through controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries. This attitude expressed by you, gentlemen of the House, brings us of the South renewed faith in the justice of our Government and pride in the patriotic and broad-visioned Members of this Congress, because you are doing this thing earnestly sought and eagerly worked for during many years of struggle and sacrifice by those who live in the valley. We have been looking forward in confidence to the day when this legislation would give security and thus bring immeasurable wealth not only to the valley region but to the whole country. All of us rejoice to see this great measure supported by this Congress practically without a dissenting voice.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, just two years have now elapsed since the Republican Party came into control of the National Government. In view of the approaching recess of Congress, it is fitting that a brief review should be made of its achievements within that short space of time. Much was expected of the party and much has been accomplished, although, as always, much remains to be done.

The magnitude of the task and the extent of the accomplishment can not be fully appreciated without at least a brief résumé of the conditions that prevailed at the time the present administration came into power.

No one will deny that our international affairs were then in a deplorable condition. Although hostilities had been terminated for more than two years, we were still technically at war with the central powers of Europe. Our relations with many other countries were strained. The principal nations of the world were engaged in a mad competition for the upbuilding of navies and naval armaments for the next world conflict that was freely predicted.

Chaos and confusion reigned in our domestic affairs.

Our national interest-bearing indebtedness had grown from less than $1,000,000,000 to the staggering sum of $24,000,000,000, a considerable portion of which has been shown to have been due to recklessness, extravagance, and incompetence. The interest charge had grown from less than $23,000,000 to more than $1,000,000,000. Eleven billion dollars had been loaned to foreign countries, and no provision had been made for the funding of that enormous indebtedness.

A vast merchant fleet had been built, but many of the ships were worthless. Many of these ships had been built after the armistice because there was no cancellation clause in the contracts for their construction. The cost of our shipping program amounted to over $3,000,000,000 and we had to show for it assets then conservatively estimated at worth less than $500,000,000, with claims against the Government amounting to $200,000,000 growing out of our shipbuilding venture.

The railroads of the country were thoroughly demoralized under their extravagant management and operation by the last administration, which alone cost the country in taxes the sum of $2,950,000,000.

The farmers of the country were face to face with financial disaster as a result of the sudden fall in the prices of agricultural products.

The manufacturing and commercial interests of the country were suffering from an unparalleled depression resulting in widespread unemployment. Numerous estimates made by the Department of Labor, then under Democratic control, and by the American Federation of Labor, placed the number of persons then out of employment at 5,000,000 and more. This condition was largely brought about and greatly intensified by the actual and threatened influx of foreign-made cheap goods.

Such was the heritage the Republican party received from the last Democratic administration.

Since assuming control of the Government, the Republican party has solved many of the pressing problems that confronted the country and has made substantial progress toward the solution of the remaining problems.

Among the outstanding achievements of the present Republican Congress and national administration the following may be mentioned:

It has established peace with Germany and Austria, restored commerce and intercourse with those nations, and preserved for the United States all of our rights under the Versailles treaty, without involving us in the meshes of European entanglements.

It has provided a means for funding our loans to the Allies and has actually consummated an agreement with our greatest debtor, which financiers and statesmen of all political affiliations agree is wise and sound, and which, in the opinion of such men, will do much toward restoring certainty and stability to the financial world.

It has maintained friendly relations with all foreign nations.

Through the mediation of this country, it has provided a means for the settlement of a dispute between Chile and Peru, thus avoiding a possible war in South America.

It has taken steps to restore friendly relations with Mexico and to secure the treaty rights of American citizens in that country.

By the Conference for the Limitation of Armament, it has made the greatest advance in history toward universal peace and the abolition of war.

It has greatly reduced naval and military appropriations without the impairment of our national security.

It has established a Budget system which, by placing our finances on a business basis, has already resulted in great economies and assures greater economies in the future.

It has reduced the operating expenses of the Government from practically $5,500,000,000 during the last year of the Democratic administration to an expenditure for the present fiscal year of approximately $3,500,000,000.

It has reduced the national debt by more than a billion dollars.

By the revision of the revenue laws it has relieved the people of a burden of over $800,000,000 in Federal taxes.

By its wise fiscal policy and the skillful refunding operations of the Treasury Department it has restored liberty bonds to par.

It has reformed the tangled mass of legislation relative to World War service men by consolidating all bureaus charged with responsibility on this subject in the Veterans' Bureau, thereby making possible a more prompt and equitable settlement of claims on behalf of disabled veterans.

It has enacted a protective tariff measure to meet the conditions growing out of the World War. The need for protection to American labor and industries was never greater than at the beginning of the present administration, when an influx of foreign goods was being encouraged not only by low labor costs abroad, but by a depreciated and constantly depreciating exchange, which gave to the countries with such depreciated currency a great advantage in shipping goods to this market, which is always far more important to us than our foreign market.

Owing to the rapid changes constantly taking place in the economic conditions of European countries, the provisions of the new tariff law were made flexible, and the President was invested with discretionary power, within prescribed limits, to meet such changing conditions. While fully protecting our home market, more than 60 per cent of all imports now come in free under the provisions of the new tariff law and the average rates on dutiable articles are lower than in any previous Republican tariff law.

The only persons who have been displeased by the operation of the new tariff law are the Democratic spellbinders and campaign-literature writers, who have been shown up so effectively as false prophets. They prophesied freely that the tariff rates were so high that imports would be restricted to such an extent that our income from duties would not reach $300,000,000 and that our exports would necessarily be greatly reduced. Republican proponents of the law claimed that it would produce $450,000,000 revenue and that our exports would not be reduced. The figures for the period during which the law has been in operation are more favorable than the most sanguine Republicans predicted. Revenue from the tariff duties are now coming into the Treasury at a rate greater than $500,000,000 per year, while exports are actually increasing. No tariff law in our history has in so short a time produced results so satisfactory.

In short, the joint work of Congress and the administration has placed the country once more on the high road of orderly progress and assured prosperity.

This summary of the achievements of the national administration and the outgoing Republican Congress is submitted to the candid and unprejudiced judgment of the American people. It is a record of achievement never before equaled by any national administration within so short a period of time, and one which the Republican Party is pleased to submit to the calm, dispassionate consideration of the people during the recess of Congress.

It is fortunate for the country that the Republican Party is to continue in control of national legislation during the next two years, and, although the margin of control is somewhat narrow, it is still possible to go on with the orderly development of the policies of the party, to which the country expressed its adherence by an overwhelming vote at the last presidential election. Not to do so would mean to halt in the middle of a national administration, stop progress, and delay the return toward normal conditions. The country can not afford to halt in its forward march even to await the momentous result of the next presidential election. The Republican Party has always stood for orderly progress along safe and sane lines of constructive legislation and administration. The next two years will prove no exception to the rule already so well established.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the recent approval by Congress of the settlement between the United States and Great Britain of the debt of Great Britain to our country, totaling approximately $4,600,000,000, stands as a notable example of nonpartisan statesmanship, as the plan was almost unanimously adopted.

A further far-reaching result is that the settlement will stand as a model for the negotiations with the other nations of the world, not only in the obligations due the United States but also in all settlements between nations.

The debts between nations have stood as a black cloud on the horizon of international relations, a menace to the peace of the world. They have stood as the nightmare of instability and unhappy, chaotic uncertainty.

The statements made by great leaders on both sides of the Atlantic as to the significance of the settlement already reached is not an exaggeration. It stands as a high example of Anglo-Saxon unity. It gives a basis for the establishment of the ties of amity, comity, and fraternity. It makes possible a standardization of the settlements of the obligations of nations that will insure the tranquillity of the world.

BOTH BORN IN GEORGIA.

It is with peculiar pride that as a Representative of Georgia I can point to the initiation of this monumental program of profound significance to all the earth on the part of an organization that had its birth in my State in 1837 and to a man who has been the directing executive of that organization for more than a decade who is a son of Georgia. I refer to the Southern Commercial Congress and to Clarence J. Owens, president of that organization, both born in the city of Augusta.

Doctor Owens, as director general of the Southern Commercial Congress, organized the American commission in 1913 that made the exhaustive investigation of agricultural organization in 18 countries of Europe. It was his genius that organized and directed this epochal work that resulted in the Federal farm loan act, under which approximately $1,000,000,000 has been loaned to American farmers. Every acre of land in America is now a basis of credit for a long-time loan at a low rate of interest and on the amortization plan. The record of this work may be found in Senate Document No. 214 of the Sixty-third Congress. When the Congress of the United States passed the law in 1916, with refreshing magnanimity, published in Senate Document No. 500 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, containing the law, it gave to the Southern Commercial Congress the credit for the initiation of this constructive, statesmanlike achievement.

Now, in 1922 the same organization, under the presidency of the same Georgian, directed the International Trade Commission in a further investigation in Europe. In fact, the congress has to its credit eight foreign missions, each of which has rendered a conspicuous service to the country. But in 1922 Doctor Owens was able to stir the imagination of European statesmen and business leaders by reporting the result of the work of the American commission in 1913 through the application of the principle of amortization to farm finance in America. He then boldly announced, at a time when no definite, concrete plan was before the public and when the nations were staggering in economic uncertainty—he announced two words as containing the key to the solution of the problem of the settlement of the debts of nations, namely, moratorium and amortization. From Berlin it flashed over Europe and throughout America. The plan was submitted to statesmen, business organizations, and debt-funding commissions in Europe and the United States. The report of the International Trade Commission was submitted to the fifteenth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress in Chicago November 20 and was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of January 25.

The principle of amortization is no new scheme of finance in the world, but it was left for the inventive genius of Clarence J. Owens to apply it in actual tables of amortization to the program of the settlement of the debts of nations due the United States. These tables were declared authentic through a certificate issued by the department of mathematics of the University of Chicago. They were placed in the hands of Secretary Mellon, the chairman of the United States commission, and also in the hands of Hon. Stanley Baldwin, chairman of the British commission. Secretary Mellon, Secretary Hughes, and Chancellor of Exchequer Baldwin in their letters to Owens had the following to say:

(Letter from Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury.)

NOVEMBER 4, 1922.

CLARENCE J. OWENS, Esq.,
President the Southern Commercial Congress,
Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of October 31 inclosing copy of the preliminary report of the International Trade Commission which was assembled by the Southern Commercial Congress.

I note that a copy of the final report will be sent immediately after November 20, when it is to be released.

I also note your offer to send a complete report as to a plan of amortization, and beg to say that I should be glad to receive the same.

Thanking you, believe me, yours very truly,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

(Letter from Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.)

NOVEMBER 14, 1922.

Mr. CLARENCE J. OWENS,
President the Southern Commercial Congress,
Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. OWENS: I regret that on account of the pressure of work in the department I have been unable before this to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 31, inclosing a copy of the preliminary report of the International Trade Commission assembled by the Southern Commercial Congress. I am deeply interested in the important subjects to which this report refers, and I appreciate your courtesy in sending me a copy.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

(Letter from the Hon. Stanley Baldwin, chancellor of the exchequer and chairman of the British mission of Great Britain to the United States.)

SHOREHAM HOTEL,
Washington, January 15, 1923.

Mr. CLARENCE J. OWENS.

DEAR MR. OWENS: I am very grateful to you for being so good as to furnish me with a copy of the preliminary report of the International Trade Commission of the Southern Commercial Congress, together with amortization tables for the payment of the debts of nations, including German reparations.

I should like at once to express my admiration of the careful research and mature thought which have been brought to bear upon questions of great intricacy and difficulty.

It was a great pleasure to me to have the honor of a conference with you and the advantage of being favored with the impressions you have derived as a result of your extended tour on the Continent of Europe.

Yours sincerely,

STANLEY BALDWIN.

I gladly gave my vote for the approval of the settlement of Great Britain's debt to our country. I am proud that the mother country was the first among the troubled nations to negotiate and arrange for the payment of her debt. We may rejoice in the act that brings a new sense of appreciation of the blood of our fathers that runs true to the highest standards of ethics and international justice. We are living in the day when the statue of George Washington stands on a pedestal the equal of that of Nelson, in Trafalgar Square, at the capital of the British Empire. The settlement between America and England now becomes the model, and a new feeling of security is felt around the world and a new hope is born that peace may prevail and righteousness exalt the nations of the earth. Blind men may fume and fret about a rate of interest or a "pound of flesh," but statesmen who see our international needs have found a reasonable basis on which to build the security of the future. For the great present, at least, a preventive method has been applied as a protection against another "selective draft," another mobilization of millions of men and billions of wealth to be fed to the god of war.

Never mind about the differential in interest. If England's sturdy arm and bleeding heart had not suffered first and most for civilization, the cost to America would have been many billions more of money and perhaps a full million of the flower of our country's manhood. England and America need each other, and this mighty handclasp of Anglo-Saxon fellowship will help to steady the feverish pulse of the restless world.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the city of Harrisburg, Pa., on October 19, 1922, there was dedicated a splendid statue in memory of the services of Andrew Gregg Curtin, Pennsylvania's governor during the Civil War. It was my honor to deliver the address at the dedication ceremonies when the memorial statue had been unveiled by William W. Curtin, son of the war governor. At the request of many posts of the Grand Army of the Republic I am placing in the RECORD my address on that occasion.

"GOVERNOR CURTIN—CAPTAIN COURAGEOUS."

Mr. Chairman, men and women, boys and girls of Pennsylvania, a great man is not only born but made. Andrew Gregg Curtin was born of the stuff from which come men of fiber and force and fire, and his time made him a captain of liberty who left his impress upon American history. His ancestors were pioneers from old Emerald Isle who faced hardships and dangers unafraid and made the Pennsylvania wilderness to blossom as the rose. Inevitably his mother was one of God's noble women, for Curtin, like every other great man, was what his mother made him. From her he received inspiration for service to America through public life. Her father, Andrew Gregg, had served in the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate and made a record for red-blooded patriotism excelled by none of the statesmen of those formative times.

At his mother's knee Andrew Curtin learned of the glory of a people's nation where every citizen is an uncrowned king, a sovereign in a government founded to give and guarantee simple justice to each and all.

That was the keynote of his life. When there came the times that tried men's souls Andrew Curtin was prepared for leadership by a mother whose devotion to the righteousness of democracy had made his infant sinews strong as steel. He had a chart for action; the compass of his soul pointed straight to the star of people's rule. Out of his faith in America and her people came that invincible force which mastered opposition, developed power as it proceeded, and compelled victory.

Even as a boy he swept valiantly into the thick of the battle for equal rights and equal opportunities. The bitterest political struggles in Pennsylvania before 1860 were over the question of public schools. In this day of universal recognition of the common school as America's greatest institution it is almost incredible that there was a time when it spelled the doom of a candidate for public office if he declared in favor of the education of all children at the expense of the community.

The plan of education followed was that of pauper schools. Only the children whose parents declared they were too poor to furnish means of education were permitted to attend the State schools. This shameful badge of pauperism prevented many parents from applying for the permission, and ignorance and illiteracy were the natural results.

In the battle to change this odious provision into a program for the public education of every child, rich and poor, Andrew Curtin had a leading part. His first public office was superintendent of public instruction. His dynamic energy helped to transfer a jellyfish system of schools into a vertebrate organization, strong and robust. He founded the normal schools and made them training stations for the teachers who should guide the young generation along the path of efficient citizenship. He insisted upon increasing appropriations for the schools, and in spite of all opposition he had his way.

His philosophy was clear. The people must rule; therefore the people must be enlightened. Without evasion or mental reservation he believed in democracy, equal rights for all. With level-eyed vision he saw that the equality of the Declaration of Independence is a mockery and delusion unless every child has a fair start in the race of life. There must be light for every mind, knowledge for every child. He proposed to see that all those upon whom the duties of citizenship should rest secured at the expense of the State the fundamentals of an education.

How important was this task! The Pennsylvania lads who answered Curtin's call to rally to the defense of their threatened country were trained in Curtin's common schools. His schoolhouses had proved fortresses of liberty. His arguments were vindicated in the sight of all men. The young men of Pennsylvania, in the schoolhouses of the State, came to know the truth and the truth made them free. When the test came they helped Curtin make Pennsylvania, in graver perils than all the other northern Commonwealths, the barrier against which the fury of rebellion dashed to its own destruction.

Andrew Curtin was born and lived his early manhood years in an atmosphere of cowardice and compromise. Slavery cast its baleful shadow over the entire Nation. The slave-holding autocracy was in the saddle in Washington, demanding that its "peculiar institution" be recognized as sacred everywhere. Great leaders made efforts, vigorous though vain, to serve God and mammon. Statesmanship was the art of neutrality, and political parties juggled with every issue save this fundamental one, upon whose solution life and death depended.

Impossible to make Andrew Curtin a neutral in such a time. He could not stand halting between two opinions. Like the prophet of old he shouted, "If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, follow him!" His brain found fuel in his blood, and his mind held converse with his heart.

He saw that underneath the issues of slavery and State's rights was a vaster issue still—whether a Government conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal was to endure or perish.

Keep silent? He felt it to be the supreme sin. Here was the mightiest problem that could face the Nation. Upon it he concentrated all his powers and stood by his convictions with virility. In the midst of cold neutrality he was like the lens which can catch up a sunbeam even on a winter day and burn a hole through an oak plank. He refused to stand without opinions when the greatest need was courageous, constructive thinking and speaking. Had others been like him perhaps war could have been avoided. Perhaps legislation would not have been enacted through bloody war, with columns of troops as voters, and bullets, bayonets, and cannon as votes. In any case it was eminently appropriate that Pennsylvania, the keystone in the temple of the Republic, should furnish the great champion of unity in the hour of division and disunion. William Penn had founded his Commonwealth as a monument to fraternity and equality. He came to America "to prove to the world that there is in human nature virtue sufficient for self-government." The separate and sacred mission of Pennsylvania among the Colonies was to proclaim the power of justice and neighborliness in dealing with the Indians, the negroes, and white men. It was a son of Pennsylvania, James Wilson, who wrought most forcefully in the United States Constitutional Convention to make the new charter a bulwark of democracy.

There was a still more compelling reason why Pennsylvania should furnish a great champion of the sovereignty of the American people. President James Buchanan was a Pennsylvanian. Swayed by advisers whose whole political philosophy was founded on State sovereignty, though Chief Magistrate of the Nation, he was an ally of disunion.

While secession threatened destruction and anarchy was proclaimed by political leaders in 1860, Buchanan wavered in doubt and uncertainty. Then in his annual message, December 4, 1860, he gave only counsel of despair.

You may be called upon—

The President said to Congress—to decide the momentous question whether you possess the power by force of arms to compel a State to remain in the Union. Has the Constitution delegated to Congress the power to coerce a State into submission, which is attempting to withdraw or has actually withdrawn from the Confederacy? After much serious reflection I have arrived at the conclusion that no such power has been delegated to Congress or to any other department of the Federal Government.

The South was jubilant over the official pronouncement of its own false doctrines. The lovers of the old Union were filled with forebodings and torn with anxiety. Abraham Lincoln, their choice for President, would not take his office for three months, and there seemed in all the Nation no man in commanding position who could voice the convictions of those who believed in Union and liberty as one and inseparable, and that the only sovereign is the power of the whole people.

In that pivotal hour Andrew Curtin delivered his inaugural address. He had been elected Governor of Pennsylvania in October and his victory made possible the election of Lincoln. He had carried the flag of his cause from Lake Erie to the Delaware in a campaign of matchless brilliance. A. K. McClure, chairman of the State committee in charge of that campaign, has said that the triumph of Curtin in the election proclaimed to the world that the Keystone State was ready for any sacrifice in the cause of a "Government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

Thus it was that out of the darkness caused by a Pennsylvanian in the White House there rose the morning star of hope in the person of the new occupant of the executive mansion at Harrisburg. Fearlessly and with matchless force he met Buchanan's challenge.

Ours is a National Government. He declared in his inaugural message, January 15, 1861—

No part of the people, no State, or combination of States can voluntarily secede from the Union, nor absolve themselves from the obligations to it. To permit a State to withdraw at pleasure from the Union, without the consent of the rest, is to confess that our Government is a failure. Pennsylvania can never acquiesce in such a conspiracy or consent to a doctrine which involves the destruction of the Government. It is the first duty of the national authorities to stay the progress of anarchy and enforce the laws; and Pennsylvania, with a united people, will give them an honest, faithful, and active support. The people mean to preserve the integrity of the National Union at every hazard.

Two men from Pennsylvania had set the battle in array. The same Keystone State had nurtured the men who placed State sovereignty against people's sovereignty and an ocean of blood was to flow before the issue was decided—

One ship drives east and the other drives west,
While the selfsame breezes blow,
'Tis the set of the sails and not the gales
That bids them where to go.

Governor Curtin knew exactly where he was going, and that is the first requirement for any man who is to steer the ship of State.

Thank God in that hour of gathering storm the sails of Pennsylvania were set by Andrew Curtin toward the goal of one Nation, one people, and one flag.

Less than two months after this vibrant message Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated President of the United States. His masterful inaugural showed the effect of Governor Curtin's faith—

"Why should there not be patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people?" said Lincoln. "Is there any better or equal hope in the world?"

But his kindly counsel could not prevail. Mobbism, sectionalism, and fanaticism were bent on the ruin of the Republic. Soon came the firing on Fort Sumter and the dire need of self-defense. Lincoln issued a call to the governors for 75,000 men to preserve the Union. Liberty drew the sword for a death grapple with disunion.

It was another decisive hour. Many supporters of Lincoln drew back in dread at the thought of a fraternal war. From many States came a blazing opposition. The Governor of Maryland called for troops to serve only within the State and then suggested to Lincoln that the dispute could be settled by the British ambassador. The Governor of North Carolina declared he would not be a party to—this war upon the liberties of a free people.

The Governors of Tennessee and Arkansas flayed Lincoln for his proclamation, and the Governor of Missouri replied:

Your requisition is illegal, unconstitutional, inhuman, and diabolical and can not be complied with.

Grandly, in the midst of this roar of opposition, rose the reply of Pennsylvania's governor. Instantly the entire resources of the Keystone State were tendered to the President. Immediately he issued a call for volunteers. Within 12 hours 500 laborers, miners, and mechanics from the mines and mills of Pennsylvania had laid down their tools and in their everyday clothes were on their way to Harrisburg to be mustered into the service of their country.

The State of Pennsylvania had neither arms, uniforms, nor munitions for them, but Governor Curtin took them into the service and sped them toward Washington to defend the Capital.

Galusha A. Grow, Congressman from Pennsylvania, who was Speaker of the House under Lincoln, was on his way to Washington on the 18th of April. He describes how the Keystone volunteers, clothed in the begrimed and blackened suit of the mines and workshops, filled the cars.

This little heroic band of laborers from the interior of Pennsylvania—

says Speaker Grow—

to whom Congress subsequently awarded medals and votes of thanks as first defenders, were the vanguard in the mightiest conflict of arms in the history of the race.

Splendidly was Curtin's faith in the common people vindicated. Patriotism does not grow in the soil of idleness and luxury. It thrives among the industrious citizens of a nation. It was the workers of Pennsylvania who saved Washington from rebel capture in the spring of 1861 and the workers of America who saved the Union.

Great throngs of Pennsylvania men crowded into Harrisburg in answer to the governor's call. Camp Curtin was established on April 18, and through this great training center went hundreds of thousands of fighting men.

The officials at Washington forebade further enlistments, because the men were not needed. Curtin, with far-sighted wisdom, mustered them into the Pennsylvania reserves and held them. Came a time when anguished calls for help rose from Washington, and these Pennsylvania reserves stopped the rout of Bull Run and saved the Capital City on the Potomac.

Curtin's work in organizing the soldiers is a story of inconceivable energy. In the beginning there was a situation which caused William Tecumseh Sherman, on his way to Washington with his famous Light Artillery, to exclaim, "How defenseless! A small body of organized men could ravage your mighty State." Pennsylvania was unprepared. Its borders were unguarded, its weapons rusty and broken. But Pennsylvania had Curtin and a loyal people.

In the end 454,842 men had answered the governor's call—a force great enough to have held back the armies of the world.

To every one of these soldiers of freedom Governor Curtin was a comrade indeed. His proudest name, "The Soldiers' Friend," was no claptrap title, no cunning invention of the politician; it was the creation of the mess, the hospital, the field.

Every Pennsylvania regiment carried the colors of the Keystone State, placed in its hands by Governor Curtin. The first presentation was made at Tennallytown, Md., on the 10th of September, 1861.

I present to you to-day as the representative of the people of Pennsylvania these beautiful colors—

Said the governor—

Thousands of your fellow citizens at home look to you to vindicate the honor of your State. They follow you with their prayers. They look to you to vindicate a great Government. May God, in His wisdom, protect your lives, and may right, truth, and justice prevail.

Those war-torn banners and all the others were returned in 1866 and were presented to the State by Maj. Gen. George Meade, victor of Gettysburg. They were riddled with shot and shell, blood stained and cannon scorched, but they blazed in imperishable glory. They had been carried through a thousand battles by Pennsylvania veterans, who nobly "vindicated a great Government, sustained legitimate power, and crushed out rebellion."

Governor Curtin accepted the flags he had given the regiments.

If there be men—

He said—

more distinguished than others, more entitled to our highest veneration, it is the private soldier of the Republic. If we follow him through all the suffering and privations of the service, his long, weary months, his perils on the outposts, his wounds and sickness, even in the hour of death, we trail him back to that sentiment of devotion to his country that led him to separate from home ties and to offer even his life as sacrifice to the Government his fathers gave him and his children.

Then, after recounting the deeds of the soldiers in the field, he expressed again that heartfelt conviction which molded his life as he paid tribute to the "great body of the people of Pennsylvania for their loyal support in storm and stress in the noble task of placing the American Government upon the enduring basis of justice and liberty."

One day I stood in the State museum beside the cases containing these battle-torn flags which Curtin gave to Pennsylvania's fighting men and which were brought back to him in victory.

Two girls of the type known to-day as "flappers" were inspecting the museum. When they came to the wall cases they turned away. "Let's go on; there's nothing but old flags here," said one to the other, and they passed, giggling, out of sight.

"Nothing but old flags," but, great God of hosts, they were baptized in the blood of Pennsylvania's bravest and best. Those flags had led the way for the Nation's life in a thousand charges and assaults. Ringed with battle smoke, they had waved defiance in countless death stands. Those who have eyes to see can vision in those old flags the symbols of the temple of the Republic, every stone cemented with the blood of brave men. Pity, indeed, the blind ones who see in them "nothing but old flags."

Governor Curtin was the incomparable leader of war activities. He was like that mighty Prometheus who brought fire from heaven that men of skill and industry might begin their long journey toward truth and power.

Around the balcony of the Congressional Library is the illuminated legend, "To the souls of fire I give more fire, and to those who are manful a might more than man's." The great heart of this man glowed with religious fire for the people's sovereignty. He cared not to be great but as he saved or served his State and Nation.

That fire never dimmed when darkness came. In the autumn of 1862 reverses to the Union armies plunged the North into depression. A violent campaign was waged against Lincoln. The slogan was, "End the war and make peace with the Confederacy." Copperheads wound their slimy way through every community. Men were discouraged from enlisting, and soldiers were encouraged to desert.

Like a storm shaking the mountains was the feeling of disaffection which swept the elections of 1862. New York defeated loyal Governor Morgan and elected Horatio Seymour, who opposed the war. New Jersey gave a copperhead candidate a majority of 15,000. Ohio defeated Lincoln's friends and gave practical indorsement to Vallandingham. Indiana cast 10,000 majority against the administration. Illinois sent nine antiwar Congressmen to Washington against four loyal supporters of her most illustrious son. The 10 great loyal States which had sent 78 Members to Congress to uphold Lincoln against 37 who opposed him now reversed their action and sent 67 to Washington to oppose Lincoln with only 57 to uphold his hands.

Armed foes had never dealt such blows to Honest Abe. It seemed the utter wreck and ruin of the Union in a cowardly suicide.

In this hour Governor Curtin stood like a lion at bay. With audacious courage he called a conference of loyal governors at Altoona. He knew the need of the Nation was morale more than matériel, cooperation more than cannon.

That conference at Altoona was one of the turning points of the war. Long years afterwards Curtin was denounced in Congress by a former rebel official as the man who turned the tide against the Confederacy by the results of the Altoona conference.

The address of the governors to Abraham Lincoln fired the hearts of every loyalist. They called for the summoning of another army of 100,000 men.

No matter what consequences are involved in our fidelity, this work of restoring the Republic, preserving the institutions of democratic liberty, and justifying the hopes and toils of our fathers shall not fail to be performed.

In ringing declarations these governors pledged themselves and their States to the Union—until its cause shall conquer, until final victory shall perch upon its standard, or the rebel force shall yield a dutiful, rightful, and unconditional submission.

The results were epochal. The North was welded into a more perfect union; the opposition was silenced; the South was shown that it dealt with a united North, and that Abraham Lincoln spoke truly for the American people. The Altoona conference was an inestimable service performed by the fearless and undaunted war governor of Pennsylvania.

Shortly after this event came the gubernatorial campaign. Curtin, broken in health through his unending labors, refused to be a candidate. But the people would not permit the retirement of their champion. He was renominated by acclamation, accepted the task, and began a contest which was the gravest, most earnest, and intense in the history of the Keystone State.

Red fire and blaring bands and cheering marchers were not in evidence. Curtin talked to the people heart to heart. The vast army of Pennsylvania men fighting under the flag were disfranchised and that almost unanimous vote lost to Curtin. But these soldiers poured back their entreaties to every relative left behind. In the end Curtin was triumphantly reelected, and Pennsylvania once more declared her faith in her governor and her Government.

Curtin's triumph brought joy to Abraham Lincoln in the White House. He asked that Curtin go to New York to assist in the election of a loyal governor. A great mass meeting was held at Elmira and thousands of people crowded to hear the war governor of Pennsylvania. Curtin rose to his full height, and with face and heart aglow, thundered out:

I have lashed the Keystone to this rebel craft and by the Eternal I will fight her while I have a man or a dollar left.

The people heard and gloried in this one man's undaunted purpose. The Empire State was saved to the Union cause.

When the Confederate Army under Lee broke over the borders of Pennsylvania, destroying with fire and sword, Curtin traversed the State like a Peter the Hermit, preaching a new crusade.

Five counties of our State are invaded and in the hands of rebels—

He shouted to great crowds in the cities—

Five counties are overrun, and the soil of Pennsylvania is poisoned by the tread of rebel hordes. My God! can Pennsylvanians sleep when Pennsylvanians are driven from their homes? Let us sleep no more until not a rebel foot shall poison the soil of Pennsylvania.

It was his Herculean efforts which threw great numbers of new levies into Gettysburg and helped to win victory in the deciding battle of the war. And it was Curtin who shortly after the battle originated the movement for the preservation of that battle field as a sacred spot for all future time.

From 1860 to 1865 Governor Curtin was regarded by Abraham Lincoln as his surest and truest helper. Once in the midst of his loneliness and darkness he wistfully wrote, "I wish I could see Governor Curtin."

He had been in closest touch with Curtin during the pivotal campaign of 1860. On February 22, on his way to his inaugural at Washington, he stopped at Harrisburg and was introduced to the legislature.

On the outbreak of hostilities he had summoned Curtin to Washington, and all through the war there were telegrams, letters, and interviews between these two great leaders.

Once in 1864 Lincoln sent this letter to Curtin:

Herewith is the manuscript letter for the gentleman who sent me a cane through your hands. For the life of me I can not make out his name, and therefore I cut it from his letter and pasted it on, as you see. I suppose you will remember who he is, and I will thank you to forward him this letter. * * *

A. LINCOLN.

Through it all Curtin was putting Pennsylvania in the vanguard of war relief as well as war. Pennsylvania was the first State to send her humane representatives to every camp where her soldiers were to be found. She was the first to give them her own flag and charge them with the honor of the State. Pennsylvania was the first to furnish systematic aid to the sick and wounded. She was the first to send her agent to Washington as the advocate of the soldier in need. She was the first to enable every mourner to bring the dead back to Pennsylvania for burial, and she was the first to build institutions for the care of the orphaned ones whose natural protectors had died for the Old Flag.

It was on the bleak Thanksgiving Day of 1863 that Governor Curtin met on the street of Harrisburg two ill-clad children begging for bread. As they stretched out their little hands in entreaty they said, "Father was killed in the war." Curtin's hand went to his pocket, not his handkerchief to his eyes. Nor was he satisfied with that; he registered a vow that the orphans of Pennsylvania should be protected and cherished by the State. That very night he addressed a great gathering and asked, "Can the people of Pennsylvania feast this day when the children of her soldier dead beg bread from door to door?"

He began a battle for State appropriations for soldiers' orphan schools. There was opposition, and Curtin brought 345 little orphaned children before the legislature to plead their own cause. In the end he triumphed, and the sharpness of sorrow was eased for many thousands of mothers, while their little ones were given the training prohibited by poverty. The fathers had power to die that the truth might live. Governor Curtin made sure that their devotion did not mean misery and blight for their loved but helpless little ones.

All these great welfare and relief programs were Curtin's, but he never failed to give credit to the people who made them possible.

At a great banquet in his honor in Philadelphia after his second term expired he said:

When others doubted or hesitated Pennsylvania's faithful people were unfaltering in their fidelity. She was first in her offering as she was most heroic in her suffering.

Such a people must of necessity have had a great leader, and such a leader would have created a great people.

Finally the fratricidal strife ended and the conquered soldiers of Lee laid down their arms at Appomattox. The tumult and the shouting died, the captains and the soldiers departed, but Andrew Curtin did not forget those who brought the victory.

"Let us have peace," was his desire as it was of the great Union commander. He sought to bind up the hearts of war and restore North and South to union and fellowship. He was ready to—

Fold up the banners, smelt the guns,
Love rules, her gentler purpose runs;
A mighty mother turns in tears
The pages of her battle years,
Lamenting all her fallen sons.

Yet first in his heart always were the sons of Pennsylvania. Years after the war had ended Curtin was sent to Congress, elected as a Democrat by the people of the Center County district. The first bill he introduced was a grant of pension to Susan Bayard, widow of a Pennsylvania soldier. His second measure was to grant medals to Pennsylvania soldiers. Another was to establish a general policy of pensions to the widows and orphans of Union soldiers.

In the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress Curtin introduced 34 bills, and 32 of them dealt with the soldiers who saved the Union. Truly that old title of "The soldiers' friend" was well deserved!

As a Member of Congress Curtin was just what he had been as private citizen and as governor—a believer in equal rights for all and special privileges for none.

He feared nothing save that he might be unjust. On March 29, 1886, he introduced in Congress a resolution asking that a study be made into corporate activities and the relations between capital and labor.

In speaking on it in the House, he said:

My resolution proposes to investigate the cause of the present unrest among the people of this country. If corporations have violated the right of property or liberty belonging to the humblest man in this country, he has a right to redress which this august assembly should not deny. If the workingmen have been wronged let us understand it, and let us lay the strong hand of this Government upon those who have wronged them. Let us redress their wrongs and insure to them life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

To him the welfare of the people was ever the supreme law, and in that cause he wielded as brave a blade as ever flashed defiance in the face of wrong. This brave spirit battled for the rights of man against greed and injustice, mourning with those who wept, scorning the bribes of mammon, and the threats of power. His was the joy of steering true toward that star he saw in his youth—the brotherhood of man.

Others wrote their creeds on parchment, Curtin wrote his in living hearts. Constitutions and charters and bills of rights are important but vastly more important are heroic men like Curtin who make their lives the embodiment of justice and service.

In every place he occupied—superintendent of public instruction, Governor of Pennsylvania, minister to Russia, member of the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention, Congressman of the United States—Andrew Curtin stood four square for the freedom and justice symbolized by the Old Flag he loved so well. He never wore a party collar and never surrendered his own independence. Higher than office he put manhood and higher than political allegiance he put right and truth.

To the day of his death he kept the faith. Some cynic put into the mouth of one of his creations of fiction the saying, "Youth is a blunder, manhood a struggle, and old age is a regret."

It is a falsehood. By the life of Andrew Curtin we may know that youth is opportunity, manhood is achievement, and old age is a holy memory of deeds well done.

And when America can no longer produce men of the mold of Andrew Curtin she must die. There is in every State and nation varying strands. Base and unworthy are some of them, but there are also those of heroism and devotion to ideals.

Out of this dedication ceremony, through which Pennsylvania pays tribute to the memory of the man whose name is inseparably associated with her noblest records, comes a challenge to us all.

We must help break through the base Pennsylvania into the heroic Pennsylvania. Our fathers of the sixties, under the leadership of Andrew Curtin, were able to do it. In our own days it has again been accomplished in the iron test of war. Facing the threat of the Prussian power, which sought to conquer democracy by despotism. Pennsylvania proved her ability to recover heroism as her own.

The Keystone State furnished one-tenth of the mighty armies numbered against the Imperial German Government. She registered a total of 2,067,827 fighting men ready for service. She subscribed a total of $2,709,000,000 for Liberty and Victory bonds, which was $88,000,000 more than the total cost of the North of financing the entire four years of the Civil War.

In taxes Pennsylvania provided $500,000,000 more during 1917 and 1918 than the entire North paid in taxes during the Civil War.

Right nobly did the State of Curtin respond to the new test and trial. Over there the Twenty-eighth Division of Pennsylvania was chosen to meet the spearhead of the German attack upon Paris. So well did they meet the test that Pershing exclaimed, "These are not soldiers; these are iron men." The fame of the Iron Division of Pennsylvania will forever have a place in American history. But let us not forget that without Gettysburg and Antietam and Appomattox there would have been no Belleau Wood and Chateau Thierry and Argonne Forest.

Nor can we fold our hands in the victories won. Democracy is not an achievement, but an opportunity. The victory at Appomattox did not free men from greed, from hatred of one another, from injustice, from cruelty. To-day, as in Curtin's time, comes the all-important question, "Where shall be lodged the sovereign power in American Government?"

The idea of the South was that the States were sovereign rather than the Nation; that secession was a more important right than unity; that human slavery was more sacred than human liberty.

That heresy was shot to death in the stress and storm of civil strife. Still, in new guise and in new form, it comes again to menace the Republic. Disunion rises from the tomb; the slave whip echoes again in the land.

Great combinations of capital, working through political machines, are making desperate efforts to usurp sovereign power. They manipulate the ballot and rob the ballot box. They seat their creatures in places of power. They pour unholy privileges into the laps of the preying few.

The battle to-day, which, pray God, may be settled in peaceful revolution by honest ballots, is to make sure that governmental power shall reside directly in the great body of the American people. The people must be made masters of constitutions, Congress, and courts.

Our instrument is forged. It is welded in the fires of 1776. It was tempered in the sixties and on Flanders fields. No call to war now, but a higher, better conflict to overcome social injustice and unholy greed for gain. Give us Curtin's hope and faith and burning endeavors for liberty and justice for every man and woman and little child and we shall throw off hate and disunion and base desire and build the Republic into the temple of justice. He and his generation made a political union. Ours is the more difficult task—to make a vital union out of men from every tribe and tongue and nation. Working in comradeship, we must organize the American community and overcome the divisions which threaten our Union.

Then Curtin's State will belong to the sons and daughters who have wrought out her character in the molding of their faithful hands. Her wealth will belong to those who have given her riches and greatness by steadfast service. Her flag will belong to those who count no sacrifice too great to make its trinity of color stand for truth, justice, and humanity.

This monument which we dedicate to-day to the name and fame of one of Pennsylvania's greatest sons marks a great upward movement of American people. It commemorates a milestone in our history. It is a finger upon the great dial of American civilization. The spirit and character of the man we honor will be cherished in the hearts of Americans until patriotism is dead.

We do well to erect this monument to the great war governor. Charles Sumner proposed in the United States Senate to strike from the battle flags of the Union all mementoes of our Civil War. He declared that if we could forget the conflict and erase all its remembrances, passion would be lessened and harmony restored to embittered sections.

But Sumner was wrong. Curtin was wiser in the wisdom of the heart. He knew the hallowing effect of great trials and sorrows upon a free people. He believed that harmony is based upon understanding and that it is the truth which makes us free, even the truth about "the old, unhappy, far-off things and battles long ago."

Never did he forget the crisis time and its lessons, and as he lay in his casket in his Bellefonte home October 7, 1894, there reposed upon the breast of the dead chieftain the shield of the Loyal Legion, and engraved upon it the motto, "Laws rule; arms defend."

It was the guiding star for his service spirit.

Laws rule! Obedience to the laws is the acid test of every citizen's patriotism. Arms defend! Only recreants will refuse to pledge life, fortune, and sacred honor to the declaration that men shall be free and equal in this new holy land.

Gathered here to pay tribute to the man more influential in the preservation of the Republic than any other, save Abraham Lincoln alone, we may gather inspiration for our own tasks to-day.

We, too, in less exalted stations, may have his consuming passion for freedom and his invincible faith in the people, in the Republic, and in God. We, too, may have implicit confidence that, though "injustice and falsehood seems to flourish, doomsday comes to them at last."

Here at this monument, erected on old Camp Curtin to the memory of Pennsylvania's mighty men of faith, the past speaks but the future calls. May the course of America in the years ahead be charted by those whose hearts beat in sympathy with the noble purposes of the gallant captain who steered his vessel through stormy seas into safe harbor. Then we may truly say:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State,
Sail on, O Union, strong and great;
Humanity, with all its fears,
And all its hopes of other years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workmen forged each rib of steel,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope.
Fear not the sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave, and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not the rent made by the gale.
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea;
Our hopes, our hearts, are all with thee;
Our hopes, our hearts, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. ISAAC SIEGEL, my colleague in the House of Representatives, is the senior Republican Member of the House from Greater New York, I feel that I can not permit this occasion to pass without calling attention to the general feeling of the people of New York regarding his retirement. The following is from the Harlemite, and written by Mr. Edward Corsi, one of the best-known workers in behalf of Americanization in the United States:

THINGS TO THINK ABOUT.

(By Edward Corsi.)

The retirement of Representative ISAAC SIEGEL from public life is an event regretted by all citizens of East Harlem, regardless of party affiliations. We would not be fair to ourselves nor just to him if we were to allow this event to pass unnoticed.

We say in perfect confidence that ISAAC SIEGEL was the most competent Congressman that ever represented the twentieth district in the National House of Representatives. Not only was he the most competent but undoubtedly the most representative. He was one of the people, an East Harlemite whose long residence in this section made him thoroughly familiar with the hopes, aspirations, and needs of the 300,000 men and women who make up the district.

He was indeed a servant. He served conscientiously and honestly, always eager, always ready to interpret the wishes of the great mass of the people who had chosen him to speak for them in the councils of Government. His record for eight years speaks for itself. Men in all walks of life have congratulated him for his splendid work; the humblest in East Harlem have always spoken well of him, the proudest have regarded him a real man.

As Commissioner Largy has well said, "SIEGEL was like a doctor to the district, ready for consultation and for aid at all times."

But what is to be appreciated in this man's record is not so much his splendid congressional work, his earnest efforts to secure justice for all men and a square deal even for the humblest immigrant, but his deep attachment to his community, his love of the men and women around him, his eagerness to do his bit at all times, even at a sacrifice to himself.

There are politicians in this section who do much prattling about their interest in the public welfare. They are ever ready to lend their names to social and philanthropic work. But those who prove their interest with deeds, who give more than their names, are shamefully wanting. There are politicians who are doing much "for the people" in a social and charitable way, but not for the people of East Harlem.

SIEGEL'S charity began at home. The "people" for him have been the people of East Harlem, his own people. The Institutional Synagogue is a monument to his public-spiritedness. His cooperation with the public agencies in this section was never wanting. He was always ready to give his time, his work, and even his limited funds in order that the generations in East Harlem might grow up in a better and kindlier world. East Harlem is thankful to this man. He deserves more than mere thanks.

The Harlemite regrets the loss of Representative ISAAC SIEGEL, but it finds gratification in the assurance that East Harlem will have in citizen ISAAC SIEGEL a most potent and willing force for the local public good.

Welcome home, ISAAC SIEGEL!

How the Republican delegation of the House of Representatives of the State of New York has considered my colleague, Representative SIEGEL, can best be told by what they wrote to the President. Among other things they said:

Mr. SIEGEL has served continuously as a Representative in Congress since the 4th of March, 1915. He has impressed us by his high character, great ability, and untiring energy. Mr. SIEGEL has practiced law actively for many years at the city of New York, in both State and Federal courts. He is, in our opinion, in every way worthy of holding the office of United States district judge, and we believe that his appointment would be a fitting reward of disinterested, fearless, and distinguished public service.

Of Mr. SIEGEL, Maj. Philip J. McCook, justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, said on November 10, 1921:

What I can say, however, and what I assert emphatically is that no one from this locality has been more useful to the people of New York at Washington, and especially during the critical period of the war, than Congressman SIEGEL. This, I think, will be found true wherever you look; but where I noticed it particularly was in the conduct of the draft. I believe I was the first person in this city consulted about the draft by Governor Whitman, and I was frequently in conference with General Crowder. Later I was director of the draft for New York City. Through all this time the services of Mr. SIEGEL were conspicuous. He encouraged the people. He backed the Government. He educated the immigrant. He assisted the boards and myself. It would be difficult to exaggerate what such intelligent, courageous, and patriotic conduct meant at such a time.

I remember well in May of 1917 General Crowder asked me whether registration for the draft would cause any rioting in New York. I assured him to the contrary and he was greatly relieved, saying, "New York is a cross section of the country with its mixed population; if there is no trouble in New York, there will be little or none anywhere." It was men like SIEGEL who prepared the public mind here and held it on a true course.

Two hundred and fifty-five lawyers, including more than 40 judges of the supreme court, asked for the appointment of Representative SIEGEL as judge of the United States district court for the southern district of New York.

It would fill volumes giving expression as to what they thought of him.

I feel that the general view of New York's public opinion as among lawyers is expressed by Nelson Cromwell, of the firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, which reads as follows:

SULLIVAN & CROMWELL,
New York, February 8, 1922.

Hon. H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to refer to the candidacy of Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL for appointment as United States district judge for this district—the southern district of New York.

I have known Congressman SIEGEL for several years and have observed his discharge of public duties. A branch of my professional practice has engaged me frequently in the district court for more than a score of years and I regard this court as a most practical and useful arm of jurisprudence in this great center of business life—in reorganizations of industrial, commercial, and railroad matters; in receiverships and bankruptcies; in the closer touch with the affairs of men. For this particular office I think any man merely learned in the law would be a misfit. My experience convinces me that the court is best served by a lawyer acquainted with general affairs of life, who has mingled closely with his fellows and comprehends their business and requirements; who understands the true relation of law to business; who has appreciation of the variety and development of the affairs of this great community.

These qualifications Congressman SIEGEL possesses and has exhibited in the years of his public service and fit him, together with his early training as a lawyer and his knowledge of Federal legislation and its spirit, to discharge judicial duties. Our best judges have been found this way, for modern life demands a different type of judge from that of a century ago.

I think Congressman SIEGEL has in him the making of an efficient judge, and I respectfully join in commending him to your consideration.

Very truly yours,

WM. NELSON CROMWELL.

Congressman SIEGEL's home-coming is fully described in the inclosed article, which appeared in the Harlemite, reading as follows:

EAST HARLEM REPUBLICANS PAY GLOWING TRIBUTE TO EX-CONGRESSMAN SIEGEL.

"Welcome home to our ISAAC SIEGEL."

Such was the slogan that welcomed ex-Congressman ISAAC SIEGEL home on Monday night when about 500 loyal Republicans packed the clubhouse at 158 East One hundred and sixteenth Street and cheered their Representative who had just completed eight years of splendid public work in Washington.

It was one of the warmest receptions ever tendered any public official in East Harlem, and it was, above all, spontaneous and sincere. There was not a man in that large audience who did not feel that the district and the organization had lost one of its ablest, finest, and most conscientious servants. Every remark, every reference to the ex-Congressman brought forth thunderous applause. The speakers who praised the man and his work were engaged in no ordinary political flattery. They spoke as they felt. And all felt that the going of SIEGEL is something to be deeply regretted.

Commissioner Charles B. Largy, the leader responsible for having given SIEGEL the opportunity to serve the district, was the speaker of the evening. "I wish I had the words to-night," he said, "to give praise to a man that is deserving. I think it was about this time 10 years ago that I was selected as leader by petition, my predecessor having resigned before the primaries. One of the first duties that faced me was the selection of a congressional nominee. When I called at headquarters two or three names were suggested to me. I said, 'Mr. Chairman, that practice must cease. I want to beat Tammany Hall.' They thought I was joking. Well, I might have been crazy to tell them that. But I knew what I was talking about. I had not said anything to SIEGEL, but I had watched him very carefully. I stood out for his nomination. It led to a fight. But finally I won, and SIEGEL was nominated. You know the consequences. The opposition resorted to everything to beat us, but we won.

"After his election he came to the clubhouse very often and made appointments like a doctor, giving advice and too often financial aid to those in need. His work at Washington was the best any man could give. His platform was strictly American. He was the best Congressman this district ever sent to Washington."

Major La Guardia, who succeeds SIEGEL at Washington, spoke of the splendid record established by him. "It is extremely difficult to take the place of ISAAC SIEGEL, who has such a splendid record and who is so well liked in Washington. I shall feel happy if I can only approach the enviable record he has set.

"It is fitting and proper that he should know of your satisfaction and appreciation of his services. After a man in public affairs leaves for private life he does not get many words of appreciation. You always hear of what a man has failed to do. Very seldom does he get a slap on the back and the words, 'Well done.' So this evening let your retiring Congressman know of your feeling toward him."

While Congressman La Guardia was speaking SIEGEL came into the hall. All stood up and three cheers for SIEGEL were ordered by La Guardia.

Commissioner Largy presented SIEGEL with a gold watch and chain, a gift of the club.

"This is, of course, a very eventful day and one of the saddest days," SIEGEL said; "but this is one of the happiest nights."

He accepted the gift of the club, and in thanking them told how his success was due to their cooperation and good will. He reviewed his work in the House, especially in immigration cases. Referring to his successor, he said: "I think our greatest accomplishment has been the election of a man whom I have stood for since 1918. I refer to my Congressman, friend of friends, Major La Guardia."

Others who spoke were ex-Congressman Thomas Ryan, Mrs. Laura Prisk, Jacob Arthur Adler, and Rabbi Herbert Goldstein, a lifelong friend of ex-Congressman SIEGEL.

A number of songs were sung by Bob Schafer, the Ritz Girls, and Master Seymour Reichstert, an immigrant lad, who sang in three languages.

RESOLUTION.

At a regular meeting of the Republican Club, eighteenth assembly district, Manhattan, N. Y., held on the 5th day of March, 1923, at its clubhouse, No. 153 East One hundred and sixteenth Street, Manhattan, N. Y., it was duly resolved as follows:

"Whereas the Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL has for four consecutive terms been elected Congressman from the twentieth congressional district, and his term of office expired on the 4th day of March, 1923, whence he returned to private life; and

"Whereas during his public career of eight years as Congressman he rendered unsurpassed service to the country and his constituency, and his excellent record as such known the country over; and

"Whereas as public official and as man his heart was ever ready to embrace and soothe the woes and tribulations of all who saw fit to seek his aid and comfort, and his devotion to mankind and humanity and full performance of his duties remains unexcelled; and

"Whereas the members of this organization, of which the said ISAAC SIEGEL has been a most loyal member for many years, being proud of him and desirous of expressing to him their sincere thanks for his undivided, untiring, and constant attention to them and their many friends:

"Resolved, That the members of the eighteenth assembly district north regret the loss of his services as Congressman to the Nation and the public at large, for whose interests and welfare he devoted all of his time during his tenure of office; while in public life ever ready to aid the weak and helpless, without regard to one's race, creed, or color; his one long and constant battle has been for humanity; no request or demand was ever ignored; modest and unassuming, he dispatched the duties of his high office with courtesy, promptness, and sincerity; he sacrificed all that justice and righteousness should be done; no poor or weak asked in vain; let glory reign with him to the end; let his remaining years be blessed by fruit borne as a result of his hard labor; whether in private or public life of him memory should be none other than of a relentless protector of life, liberty, and property; and

"Rejoice to remain his companions and wish him and his family a happy, prosperous, and long life."

On February 27, 1923, Congressman SIEGEL expressly stated in the House his views regarding our duty as citizens, and particularly in relation to the immigration question. I feel that I would not be doing justice to him unless I quoted part of what he said:

We have recently seen how Italy has quietly and peacefully handled a change in the manner of the conduct of its Government and how successful that change has been. As we have said, no one will assert that the Polish Government which has been recently set up is not endeavoring in every possible way to maintain its stability. The same is true of Czechoslovakia, where common sense and reason seem to be the guiding standard in all changes being done. Yet under the proposed legislation, if the census of 1890 is taken as the basis, these people will be discriminated against. If we look across the seas and see how things have been turned topsy-turvy by the miners and railroad men, it must set thinking men to slowly come to the belief that immigration from Great Britain is not in any respect better, as far as this country is concerned, than those who have come from the other countries and who have helped build our subways, construct our buildings, lay the railroad tracks, and in general do the rough work of the Nation.

NO ROOM HERE FOR THE FALSE PROPAGANDIST.

The person who attempts to raise religious and racial prejudice is unworthy of American citizenship. We are in grave danger of losing our sense of fair play and of treating men according to their real worth. So extensive has been the carrying on of false propaganda against the foreign born and immigration in general that hatred and prejudice against them seem, temporarily it is to be hoped, to have supplanted reason and common sense. What have been heretofore conceded and undisputed facts as to the foreign-born rendition of hard work in the building of roads, railroads, subways, and building construction are now being denied by writers in muckraking magazines, who seem bent to make money on sensationalism and forgetting the numerous warnings which have been sounded by every true American statesman for more than a hundred years, that he who creates racial and religious schisms in our midst is unworthy of American citizenship and false to its ideals and traditions.

No milder words can express the true characterization of such creatures. Not contented simply giving facts, they persist in drawing false conclusions even after having adopted false premises as a basis thereof. The same is true of lecturers and writers who are coming here to sow the seeds of racial and religious dissent and simultaneously mulcting Americans of their dollars.

The American people in their hearts are the fairest and most just on the face of the globe. How long will they permit this spirit of intolerance and falsehood to be preached? How long will they permit these poisoners of public opinion to reap the harvest of dollars from the sale of such publications and at the same time damaging the body politic? Every believer in the liberty and freedom of the press to have the right to publish the facts must give these matters grave concern and thought. To vilify human beings because they are immigrants or their descendants, without real reason, regardless of whether they are citizens or declarants, is a pastime which eventually must produce evil consequences. I make these remarks after having watched for more than eight years the growth of this un-American spirit in our midst. The real American realizes that patriotism does not consist merely in fighting for one's country on the battle field. It means more than that. It means the desire and the will to serve the Republic most faithfully at such a time as the Nation requires one's services.

The real patriot to-day is the man who gives the best that he possesses in behalf of the American people, whether in public service or in private life. To merely work and to expend one's earnings are actions that a machine could just as well perform. We are living in an age when the individual must not only serve himself but must make constant sacrifices for the common welfare. By that I mean that it is the duty of every citizen to participate in every movement which tends in any degree to improve the body politic and the general welfare of the community in which he resides.

Such a citizen when he simply votes does not consider that by such an act alone he has performed his full duty to his country. He takes an interest in the public-school system by actively participating in the discussion as to whether children get the most that can be secured from that particular educational curriculum. He makes every effort to improve conditions in his immediate neighborhood and urges the establishment of playgrounds for children. He occasionally finds time to visit public institutions for the purpose of learning how they are being managed and perhaps make some suggestions. He learns early in life that it is better to help develop and build up than to be one whose sole occupation in life is to criticize, destroy, and tear down. He loves his country and flag most who does all in his power to observe most faithfully both the moral and legal law in what he does. Now and then he finds time to visit the hospitals and write letters for such physically incapacitated patients who need such aid or render other assistance. He observes his own religious faith and respects the belief of his neighbors. He loves his home life and takes a deep interest in the education of his own children. No sacrifice is too great for him to make in their behalf. He learns early in life that public office is a public trust. He would rather give up his office than surrender his conscience. He puts truth above all things. He hates the hypocrite. He demands sincerity.

When his country calls for volunteers he is not a slacker. He is one who believes in deeds and not mere utterances. He observes the Ten Commandments and is not jealous of the prosperity of his neighbor, regardless of the place of his birth. Such is the real patriotic American citizen. Such is the type that we desire our citizens to be. Such a kind does not seek thanks and does not expect it. Such a type is rarely found mentioned in the newspapers or other public prints. He goes through life loyal, honest, energetic, faithful, devoted, and a constant inspiration to all who know him, and when he passes from this world to the far beyond, his friends who remain realize that a faithful servant of this world has met his reward.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, Abraham Lincoln, the first President elected by the Republican Party, stood foursquared for principles. In the Lincoln-Douglas debates in 1858, upon which hinged the election of a United States Senator from Illinois, we behold two types of men—the politician and the statesman, the former with his mind able to grasp only the immediate advantage, the latter with a vision that comprehends the eternal verities.

In that debate Douglas played to the galleries. He followed the line of least political resistance. He echoed the sentiment of the unthinking. He was a trimmer who sought votes for himself in the election immediately at hand rather than the solution of a great problem which involved the fundamentals of civilization and the perpetuity of free and popular institutions as embodied in the United States Government. Douglas was willing to and offered to compromise these institutions in order to gain a temporary victory at the polls.

Lincoln, the statesman, was a man of convictions and the courage to stand by them. He refused to take a compromising position upon the question of slavery, which was the issue of the hour. It was during these debates that he gave utterance to the statement that "this Nation can not exist half slave and half free." Lincoln took this uncompromising attitude against the advice of the small politicians of his day, who were afraid to stand up and fight for the right, afraid to take a defeat for the sake of advancing the cause of truth, just as the small politicians of to-day follow popular clamor and become slaves to it. Lincoln had his country in mind rather than his personal fortune; he was more concerned with saving his Nation and the priceless possession of free institutions than he was in saving himself from a political defeat. Because he took this uncompromising position he lost the election in 1858 and with it the Senatorship, but by so doing he gained the Presidency of the Nation two years later.

Let this not be construed to convey the insinuation that he lost the Senatorship because he saw by so doing he would gain the Presidency. Not so. He lost the Senatorship because he had the courage to put his destiny to the touch regardless of the consequences, and current historians of that period confirm the assertion that after the elections of 1858 it looked as though Lincoln had not only killed himself politically but had strangled the Republican Party in the day of its infancy.

But the American people fundamentally are sound. Fundamentally the American people, upon sober second thought, reach down and lay hold of the inexorable logic of a situation. This is proved by the fact that no mouthing demagogue has ever yet grasped the reins of power in this country and held them. This is proved by the fact that at every crisis in this country's history the rank and file of our citizens have arisen to the emergency and decided the issue from the standpoint of mental sobriety and intellectual integrity.

So it was at that critical period of American history. Lincoln led his party through the gates of defeat for principle's sake into the possession of the national administration within the short span of two years, an administration which was destined to play the most important part in preserving free institutions that any human agency has ever played since the hand of time began recording history.

The moral of this is obvious, and there is need of its application to the problems of to-day. All government is a compromise upon details, but no government can exist which compromises principles. Much less can a political party survive and have virility which compromises principles. The application may be carried to the individual. No political weather vane who whips and twists in response to the gusts of popular passion long remains in power. Let it be said, to the credit of the American people, that no such man has ever yet been lifted to the seats of the mighty. Men who tack and turn to every passing wind are sailboat politicians. They never dare venture far from shore. Shallow, they frequent shallow waters. Every storm sees them scudding for the protection of the shore. Such men never have been leaders in the Republican Party, and if the rank and file of the Republican Party remain true to the principles of their fathers such men never will attain leadership in the party. The leader of his party and of his countrymen is he who guides his course not by the weather vane but by the compass of principles which is always squared by the fixed star of truth and justice. He it is who is able to plow the deep, who rides the storm, and makes his port.

Let the Republican Party to-day cease dickering with the sailboat politicians, cease compromising with the political weather vanes, cease catering to passing whims. By so doing it may possibly—yes, quite probably—meet with a defeat. If so that defeat will prove the strength of the party, the righteousness of its principles, and the sanity of its policies, quite as truly as the defeat of Abraham Lincoln in 1858 proved his strength and his righteousness and resulted in his elevation to the presidency as the leader not only of his party associates but the leader of all patriots who had the integrity of the Union at heart. That party which can not stand defeat for the sake of a principle has not sufficient vitality to justify its existence.

Fundamentally the issue debated by Lincoln and Douglas was that of popular government by free agents. It was not the issue of the physical freedom of black human beings as is believed to-day by those who have an incomplete or a distorted knowledge of history. That problem did not arise until the war was half over and was incidental to the war. The emancipation proclamation was decided upon as a measure of war to weaken the South and hasten victory for the Union.

The issue upon which Lincoln took his uncompromising position was deeper than that. It involved the freedom of all labor and the right of all laborers to enjoy the product of their toil. By the same token it involved the right of free capital and the right of the man who invests his capital to enjoy a profit therefrom. Underlying the issue was the centuries-old struggle between an oligarchy or aristocracy and a democracy, between a narrow, arrogant, crushing paternalism and a broad, inspiriting government which encourages the individual to do his best, guaranteeing him the right to profit by his initiative and industry.

Douglas pleaded for a compromise with the slave-holding oligarchy, for a compromise with a system that is the antithesis of a free, progressive government. Lincoln held firmly to the elementary principles of freedom and progress which guarantee the individual not only his freedom as a citizen but freedom in the disposition of his muscle, his brain, his time, his talents, his energy; freedom to reap if he sows, freedom to profit if he invests.

That is largely the issue to-day. The paternalistic ideas which are being advanced to-day are but a variation of the ideas which Lincoln and the Republican Party combated and successfully withstood. Without intending to be partisan it nevertheless must be recorded that paternalism finds a welcome in the Democratic Party. Democrats talk about individualism but practice paternalism. Bryan's free-silver theory was the essence of paternalism. The theory that Government fiat could create and maintain values, the free-silver idea of Bryan and the Democratic Party nearly 30 years ago, was the advance agent of the Lenin-Trotski system of finance.

Russia to-day is giving the world an example of paternalistic government with its system of fiat money. Russia is the promised land of the paternalistic, the elysium of those who believe in government ownership and control; who believe that capital and capitalists are a menace; that private enterprises should be operated on the shares; that every corporation should be regulated and bedeviled and sandbagged; that every man with a dollar should whack up with the one who has none; where the thrifty are punished by having that which they have saved taken from them and given to the shiftless and the improvident.

Russia to-day is the home of the demagogue. It is ruled by the Bolsheviki, which is a Russian term for the "rule of the many." Russian communities are ruled by committees composed of "poor peasants"; these committees under the Bolshevik régime being composed wholly of the shiftless, the improvident, the wastrel, the vodka drinker. No man who owned property of any kind, even land, or who conducted a business, was permitted to sit upon these committees of "poor peasants" whom the Bolshevik régime created and set up as the ruling power in every community.

The Bolshevik régime in Russia began with the same agitation that is conspicuous in so many quarters in this country—agitation for the regulation of public and quasi public utilities, government control of the railroads and the mines and the key industries, the imposition of exacting conditions upon those who had capital invested and the restriction of their right to profit by their investments; then quickly followed the seizure of all private industry and business and the confiscation of all private property of all kinds.

The leaders of this movement obtained their strength and power from the support of the masses who were led to believe that only the property of the rich and the nobility would be confiscated. But true to human nature and true to human history, once the system of confiscation was introduced and firmly intrenched, it did not end with the wealthy and the nobility. It wound up with the confiscation of the land and the cattle and the grain of the peasants, the very ones who had set up this hideous form of government.

As a result, Russia to-day presents a scene of desolation and misery unparalleled in the annals of history. Thrift has been throttled. Individual initiative has been brutally murdered. Incentive to accumulate has been destroyed, root and branch. The result of this has not only been the absolute, utter ruin of the transportation system, the mining industry, all the industrial fabric of Russia, but the certain knowledge that he may not be permitted to enjoy the fruits of his own toil has resulted in the peasant abandoning the arts of husbandry until the very soil has lost its ability to produce and the great fertile lands of that country have reverted to waste.

Let those of America who are now giving a willing ear to the vaporings of like demagogues, who paint for them a picture of the glories of government control and ownership, take warning while yet there is time. No demagogue has ever yet lived who discovered a way to compel labor to work against its will to its own disadvantage; neither has any demagogue discovered a way to compel capital to work against its will to its disadvantage.

Beware of the demagogue, whether he be a labor demagogue or "dirt farmer" demagogue. The labor demagogue never works, he never strikes. He sits in luxuriously furnished offices and draws an annual salary greater than that paid the public officials of our Federal Government, greater than that paid the officials of the majority of private corporations. He draws this salary not for the purpose of promoting the cause of the laborer but for the purpose of creating discontent and fomenting discord in the labor world.

It is said that in China physicians are paid a regular stipend for keeping their patients well. The moment the patient becomes sick the pay of the physician stops. If that rule were applied to the labor demagogue there would be fewer strikes. If the labor demagogue who is responsible for the eruptions in the industrial world were compelled to take his place in the line of men whom he has succeeded in getting to strike and take his turn in drawing his meager weekly strike benefits, we would soon have an era of industrial peace in America the like unto which has never been witnessed since the angels sang together at the dawn of creation.

The labor demagogue who prates about "horny-handed sons of toil" exhibits no callous in his palms. He sees to it that when his dupes go with empty bellies to "advance the cause," he continues to draw his fat salary which enables him to shove his feet under the mahogany and break bread three times a day.

No less dangerous is the "dirt-farmer" demagogue. The "dirt-farmer" demagogue is not peculiar to this day and generation. Within the memory of men now living and in public life we have had demagogues elected to the Congress whose main, if not sole, bid for popularity was their claim they wore no socks. Thank God, we have at least made progress! Even those who stoop the lowest to conquer to-day have advanced beyond that stage where they believe the garbing of the nether extremities in proper habiliments is no longer a practice confined to those who have dark dealings with the moneyed powers.

The demagogue who hurls imprecations and breathes destruction upon those who have by thrift accumulated has not been a strange sight since the days of "Bloody Bridle" Waite. The demagogue who demonstrates his love for the common people by scorning the raiment of the well dressed has not been a novel sight to the American public since the days of "Honest Bill" Sulzer, who, when elected governor of the great State of New York, openly showed his scorn for frock coats and plug hats as the appurtenances of the devil by appearing in the inaugural procession in slovenly garb. He was not in office six months until he was exposed, impeached, and kicked from office.

Beware the demagogue who seeks to prove he is a "dirt farmer" by wearing a costume of the kind attributed in the funny papers and on the vaudeville stage to the rural "jay." Such a politician is a travesty upon the real farmers of America, who, as a class, are better dressed, better fed, better read, and more widely traveled within the confines of the United States than any other class of American citizens. The American farmer is not a "rube" nor a yokel, nor does he regard it as being a tribute to him for anyone who pretends to represent him to act a "rube" and a yokel. It is no more a sign of devotion to the welfare of agriculture for a man in public life to ape the stage caricature of a farmer than it is an exhibition of reverence for him to spit upon the matting in the church aisle, or an acknowledgment of the value of sanitation to pick his teeth with a jackknife.

What did any of these labor and "dirt farmer" demagogues ever do for the farmer and the wage earner? What law did they ever place upon the statute books that worked to the uplifting of either class or to any other class of Americans? All the demagogues collectively, from the days of "Sockless" Simpson and "Pitchfork Ben" Tillman down to the present time, have never written upon the pages of legislation a single law that was of benefit to anyone.

The laws that developed the great Mississippi Valley and extended aid to the farmers of that section of the country were placed upon the statute books by one or the other of the great political parties, largely by the Republican Party, because during all the years that the development of the West and Middle West was in progress the Republican Party was in power in either one or both branches of Congress.

The homestead acts, the reclamation and irrigation legislation, forestry legislation, the laws opening public lands to settlers, the laws giving rights and privileges to live-stock interests who wished land for grazing, the law creating the Department of Agriculture, as well as the laws which created from time to time the various bureaus of that department, are all the product of the Republican Party, by men who were 100 per cent Republican, holding their commission from the Republican Party, responsible for their actions to the Republican Party and to the country.

These laws were placed upon the statute books and operated to the development of the great agricultural heart of the United States before ever a farm "bloc" was heard of, before ever a lot of self-constituted, self-appointed, high-salaried lobbyists stationed themselves in Washington to prey upon the farmers upon one hand and attempt to browbeat and intimidate the National Congress upon the other hand.

What is true of legislation for the farmer is true of legislation for the wage earner. This Nation began its tremendous industry development after the Civil War, during the period when the Republican Party was in control of all branches of the Government. The policies of the Republican Party and the legislation it enacted were of such a character that the standard of living conditions, the level of wages, and the general welfare of wage earners were all raised to such a point in the United States that this country attracted from every other industrial nation of the world millions of immigrants.

The beneficial labor laws placed upon our Federal statute books are almost wholly the product of Republican Congresses elected in spite of the opposition of the majority of so-called labor leaders, such as Samuel Gompers. The labor legislation upon the statute books of the Northern States is incomparably superior to that upon the statutes of Southern States which are solidly Democratic. Practically every bit of legislation, either Federal or State, enacted in behalf of women wage earners and enacted for the protection of the children of the country has been written by a Republican Congress or by a Republican legislature.

There is no influence in America to-day that is more dangerous and more insidious than the influence exerted by those organizations which purport to represent the farmer and the laboring men, but which in point of fact represent nothing except the wishes of their highly paid executives. Executives of such organizations as the American Federation of Labor, on the one hand, and the American Farm Bureau Federation, on the other, have advocated legislation during the life of this Congress which was not to the interest of either the farmer or the laborer. They have advocated legislation in the name of the farmer and the laborer, upon which the rank and file of their organizations had been given no opportunity of voicing an expression and to which a great number of the rank and file of their organization expressed violent opposition. The executives of these organizations have unlimited power voted to them and vested in them at their annual conventions, which they forthwith abuse by using it to blackjack Members of Congress into acquiescence with their personal wishes regarding public measures.

To be more specific: Where does Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and his immediate clique in charge of that organization obtain his authority to speak in the name of the wage earners of the country against prohibition? Where does he obtain his authority from the rank and file of wage earners to denounce the courts of the land? Where does he obtain his authority from the rank and file of the wage earners to condone red-handed massacre, provided those who commit it hold a union card? Yet he and his clique have done this repeatedly, claiming they were voicing the opinions of the wage earners of America.

Or where does Gray Silver, who signs himself "legislative representative" of the American Farm Bureau Federation, obtain his right to espouse the giving away of the greatest water-power rights in America to the richest man in America? Where do Gray Silver and the other executives of the American Farm Bureau Federation, as well as the trade organ of that body, obtain their authority to speak on behalf of the farmers of the country when they join hands with the Democrats, the importers, and the notorious free-trade lobby interests at Washington to attack the principle of protective tariff, to publish and disseminate false and vicious propaganda against the protective tariff law now on the books?

According to newspaper accounts, which have never been contradicted, Gray Silver informed nearly 2,000 South Dakota farmers that "Congress is besieged with paid lobbyists for the sole purpose of killing legislation on the Muscle Shoals proposition." According to the report, "Mr. Silver bitterly denounced the actions of Members of Congress, who 'no longer hear the voice of the people and whose letters to their constituents remarkably resemble the propaganda of certain big interests.'" The members of the United States Senate Committee on Agriculture who filed a report denouncing as a fake and an outrage the Henry Ford Muscle Shoals proposition were Senators NORRIS, of Nebraska; PAGE, of Vermont; MCNARY, of Oregon; KEYES, of New Hampshire; GOODING, of Idaho; NORBECK, of South Dakota; HARRELD, of Oklahoma; MCKINLEY, of Illinois; and KENDRICK, of Wyoming. Which one of these did Mr. Silver have in mind when he accused the opposition to the Ford plan of being backed by the interests of Wall Street?

How many farmers of South Dakota think their Senator who signed this report is being handled by the big eastern interests and that his opposition to the Muscle Shoals grab is dictated by any unworthy motive? How many farmers of the Middle West and Mountain States think that big eastern interests are handling such Senators as those who signed this report against the Henry Ford grab of Muscle Shoals?

Who are the paid lobbyists appearing in Washington in connection with Muscle Shoals? The Members of this Congress could throw a great deal of illumination upon that subject were there an investigation made. It is a matter of common talk as to which side in this fight is spending tremendous sums of money and is maintaining a corps of lobbyists in and around the Halls of Congress, who infest the offices of Congressmen and bombard them with literature and threaten them with political extinction if they do not vote thus and so. Members of Congress could give a great deal of information regarding which side of the fight—the Henry Ford side or the opposition—has expended great sums of money in sending plate matter to country newspapers which deliberately falsifies figures, deliberately sets forth conditions which do not exist, and represents Mr. Ford as making guaranties which he and his official representatives flat-footedly refused to make before the congressional committees holding hearings upon the subject.

Unfair and untruthful although the misrepresentations of Mr. Silver and his associates are upon this subject and upon the subject of the tariff, still more despicable are their cowardly innuendoes that all men who oppose them are actuated by base motives and are controlled by sinister influences of great wealth. There is no crime in having great wealth; but if there were, as the innuendoes of this organization would have it appear, then Mr. Silver and his crowd should immediately sever their relations with Henry Ford, who is to-day acknowledged the richest man in America, who is to-day reaching out and getting control of more sources of wealth than any other man or any other set of men, who to-day is financing, directly or indirectly, more propaganda than any other man or set of men in the United States. If it be a crime to be associated with men identified with Wall Street, then Mr. Silver and his crowd should immediately sever their relations with Mr. Bernard Baruch, whose intimacy with Wall Street is only exceeded by his intimacy with the executives of the American Farm Bureau Federation executive office and his intimacy with the inner circle of the Democratic Party.

The same moral can be applied to those who sit in high places in labor circles. They are continually appealing to the passions and prejudices of the ignorant and the thoughtless by denouncing capital and capitalists. Yet these men themselves are capitalists. They draw salaries in excess of the salaries of any public official of the United States with the exception of the President. Their organizations own not only real estate and property worth millions but they hold securities worth millions.

It was disclosed during the miners' strike last summer that William Green, secretary and treasurer of the United Mine Workers' Union, had borrowed $200,000 of a Wall Street bank with which to help finance the miners' strike. The bank in question stated they had loaned the money as a business proposition, the loan being amply secured by gilt-edge securities. It also stated that it had loaned money to other labor organizations upon gilt-edge securities.

At the same time W. D. Mahon, president of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Workers, announced that in 1917 his organization had borrowed money from Boston banks with which to finance the New York street railway strike. He was quoted in the newspapers at that time to the effect that his organization owned over $5,000,000 of gilt-edge securities. At the same time it was announced that the Illinois miners' union, through Frank Farrington, had borrowed $150,000 from the Springfield, Ill., bank upon gilt-edge security.

One of the biggest banking and commercial institutions in the United States is the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. They own one of the largest office buildings in Cleveland, Ohio. They control the Brotherhood Insurance Co. with $180,000,000 in policies. They own and control the Brotherhood's bank in Cleveland, Ohio, the Brotherhood Investment Co., a $10.-000,000 corporation; the People's Cooperative Bank, of Hammond, Ind.; the Transportation Brotherhood's Cooperative Bank, of Minneapolis; the San Bernardino Valley Bank and two branches, in California; the Federated Banking & Trust Co., at Birmingham, Ala. Still more recently they have bought into the Empire Trust Co., of New York City, and Warren S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, was elected a director of that trust company and will sit side by side with Charles M. Schwab, T. Coleman du Pont, and other well-known figures in New York financial circles on the Empire Bank Trust Co. directorate.

Every honest man, whether he be a laboring man, a farmer, or a business man, will rejoice that this great labor organization has prospered and has expressed its faith in the institutions of our country. But what a rebuke do these facts administer to the demagogues in the labor world whose only hope of maintaining their high-salaried positions is in successfully keeping alive the flames of class prejudice and hatred and who are constantly preaching that legislative and judicial bodies which seek to protect the rights of property are enemies of the common people.

What protection will be left the labor organizations possessing property if the courts are stricken down, as labor demagogues advocate? What protection will be left the individual who accumulates property of any kind if the courts are stricken down? What is to become of property rights and investments if, due to radical agitation, there is enacted legislation of a confiscatory character? What is to happen to those who wish to save and invest if the radicals seize control of the Halls of Congress and enact laws which, due to their paternalistic character, lay upon the shoulders of the people tax burdens which amount to confiscation?

These are things which concern the laboring man who is trying to acquire for himself a home far more than they concern the man of immense wealth who can take his wealth and flee the country, if necessary, just as has been done in Russia and is being done in Germany and Poland and other European countries where taxes have become confiscatory. These are things which concern the farmer who is endeavoring to "pay out" on a piece of land far more than they concern the railroad magnate or the banker who can turn their wealth into intangible property and thereby save it from the back-breaking burdens of taxation.

Reverting to the Henry Ford Muscle Shoals proposition, which finds its greatest lobbyist in the Washington representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the fact that Henry Ford is trying to get possession of this immense source of wealth is not in itself an argument against his proposition. But his proposition is entitled to no more or no less consideration than if it were made by Mr. Rockefeller or J. P. Morgan, or the head of one of our great packing plants, or the president of one of our great railroads. Mr. Ford to-day is the wealthiest individual in America. He has a bank balance of over $80,000,-000, according to financial reports. He is getting control of key industries, is building up transportation systems, is acquiring power sites in various sections of the country. This in itself is not deplorable, but it must be taken into consideration in connection with his desire to lay his hands upon Muscle Shoals.

The argument that Mr. Ford is a public benefactor is not borne out by the facts. Mr. Ford's proposition must be weighed upon its merits and not upon the fictitious and mythical personality with which he has been endowed by his admirers and his paid representatives. Mr. Ford is not a public benefactor. In time of war Mr. Ford was quite as great a profiteer as any other war profiteer. He made tens of millions of dollars out of war contracts, although his paid propaganda circulated the story that he returned to the Government all the profits he made from war contracts. The records of both the Treasury Department and the War Department show this statement to be absolutely false. Not only did Mr. Ford not return one penny of the tens of millions he made on a cost-plus basis during the war, but he even went so far as to file a claim against the Government for damages due him because of expenditures he made to fill contracts which were canceled. These claims were allowed the same as they were allowed to other manufacturers, and he pocketed the millions he acquired in this manner.

Mr. Ford is not a philanthropist. Mr. Ford is out to make money. Mr. Ford's Muscle Shoals proposition does not guarantee to make one pound of fertilizer at any price. Mr. Ford's personal representative, Mr. Mayo, in testifying before the House Committee on Military Affairs, frankly admitted, in response to the direct question, that in event Mr. Ford found he could not make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals at a profit, he would not make any and that there would be no court in the land that could compel him to do business without a profit. The best that Mr. Ford promises in event he obtains this, the greatest piece of property in America, if not in the world, is that he will make fertilizer provided he can do so at a profit of 8 per cent.

The farmers of this country had their experience during the war with those classes of dollar-a-year men and other alleged benefactors who did business on a cost-plus 8 per cent basis. The real farmers of the country should go slow before they take the word of two or three high-salaried lobbyists in Washington, having expensive suites in expensive office buildings, before they take the word of such men as signed the Senate Agricultural Committee's report denouncing Ford's proposition as impossible and indefensible.

Abraham Lincoln was a Republican. He was a party man. He believed in party government and party responsibility. He worked with and within the party organization to save the Union. There is a timely moral in this for the present generation. The necessity of party loyalty and party work can not be overestimated at this period in our national affairs. By virtue of its organization and institutions this is a Government of parties which receive their commissions from the people, are held responsible by the people for their conduct of public affairs, and are compelled to make an accounting to the people at the elections. Those who would destroy party loyalty and break down party solidarity are seeking to destroy the only system of responsible popular government we have. They are seeking to replace responsible party government with irresponsible government by cliques, factions, blocs, groups, and individuals. If a party's ability to carry out its policies be destroyed by breaking down its solidarity it is at the same time and by the same process absolved from any blame for whatever may be done by those cliques which seize control of public affairs but which can not be held for an accounting to the whole people.

It is not a sign of political independence and mental integrity to break down a party organization. It is rather an exhibition of a desire to evade responsibility and to pursue a course dictated by passing whims rather than one by the fundamentals of political economy. Those who seek to disorganize within the party invariably, if put in control of public administration, disorganize the government. Those who object to party organization and party discipline are possessed with a spirit of rebellion against all organized government, and of disciplinary influences which are the foundation of orderly institutions.

It has become the fad among certain classes to-day to decry political parties, to speak of party organizations as though they were corrupt and exercised a corrupting influence upon the Government. This is a gross libel, uttered either by those who are ignorant or by those seeking to destroy party influence in the Government because they find it stands between them and their selfish or corrupt desires.

It is charged that party organizations are controlled by predatory interests and through the machinery of party organizations invisible and sinister influences secure control of public affairs. Instead of this being true, the contrary is true. A great party placed in control of the Government, held responsible to the public for the policies of public administration and for the legislative enactments during the period of its ascendancy, can not evade that responsibility or avoid an accounting at the next general election. If those policies and enactments have been in the interests of sinister influences rather than the interest of the people, the party is punished and hurled from power.

But where there is no party solidarity, where men charged with administration of public affairs and responsible for legislation owe no allegiance to party, refuse to submit to party discipline, defy party organization and act upon their own responsibility, either individually or in cliques and groups, there is no way for the country as a whole to hold them to an accounting. Instead of party government promoting special interests, party "blocs" and groups promote special interests. They are organized for that very purpose.

One evil leads to another. Special interests, seeing they can accomplish their ends through the formation of "blocs" where they can not through a great party, encourage such formation. Not only that, but it is well within the bounds of conservative statement that special interests, seeking legislation inimical to public welfare, often find in a "bloc" or group already formed a very ready and willing medium, provided it is sufficiently financed. And so it has come about in the present Congress that representatives of these groups, professing to speak for the people, are, in reality, the spokesmen of influences which would not bear the scrutiny of too close an investigation. So it has come to pass that representatives of organizations which pretend to voice the sentiment of great classes of citizens are using their power and influence to voice the wishes of a few designing interests with whom they have perfected amicable arrangements.

The breakdown of party government may largely be attributed to the primary system. A hue and a cry was raised against the so-called party boss. It became quite fashionable to join the clamor that people should vote for the man instead of the party. Through the press and from the platform and even the pulpit came the advice that if party lines could be broken down something constructive might be accomplished. Some of this advice was delivered in sincerity but in ignorance. Some of it was delivered by those who were fully aware that, because of their lack of integrity or intellectual poverty, they had no hope of receiving honors at the hand of any responsible, self-respecting party organization. No greater hoax was ever perpetrated upon the American people than that of wiping out the convention system and substituting therefor the primary system in the belief that thereby the processes of government would be purified, the character of the personnel of public officials elevated, and the quality of legislation improved.

Lincoln was a product of the party convention system. Had there been in vogue during his time the state-wide direct primaries where any demagogue could mount the stump and get away with any accusation, the war would have been lost, the Union would have been dissolved; this the greatest experiment in popular government would have been written down as a failure, and the hopes of mankind for the establishment and maintenance of free institutions resting upon the consent of the governed would have been postponed indefinitely.

This is not supposition. It is a matter of record that in the midst of the Civil War the demagogue, playing the part of treason, did lift his voice and secured the ear of the people. Had we been cursed then, as we are to-day, with the "bloc" and the group systems, obtaining their commission from a misinformed constituency often lashed to a passion in the heat of a campaign, Clement L. Vallandigham would have carried Ohio and been a hero of a political faction rather than the traitor that he was. It is a matter of record that in the neighboring State of Indiana a bloc controlled by the infamous and treasonable organization known as the Knights of Golden Circle elected a secession legislature, which sought to tie the hands of Oliver P. Morton, Indiana's war governor, the right hand of Abraham Lincoln, by refusing to appropriate money which Morton needed to help finance the defense of the State and of the Union. But in both cases the power, the solidarity, the virility, the red-blooded patriotism and loyalty of the Republican Party's machinery stood back of the men who were fighting to preserve this Union.

Abraham Lincoln was not the only product of the party convention. Men who for two generations following the Civil War formulated the policies of this Government and guided the destinies of this Nation were products of the party convention system. Grant, Garfield, Harrison, Blaine, Ingalls, Hoar, Reed, Allison, Edmunds, Logan, Sherman, Windham, Morgan, and so on through a galaxy of Republican leaders, while on the Democratic side such outstanding men as Hendricks, Thurman, Carlisle, and Vilas, all were the products of the convention system. All these men assumed the duties of public office with the knowledge that if they proved recreant to their trust not only they, as individuals, but their party with them, would be retired from public control in disgrace. In no nation, either ancient, medieval, or modern, has there ever been a group of statesmen who served the public more faithfully, who were more zealous in their work, or who wrought so largely and so effectively as the group of American statesmen during the generation following the Civil War, a group which was the direct and sole product of party government, selected by the party convention.

But the people follow strange gods. Party convention was thrown into the discard in order that the electorate might vote for the man instead of the party. The public now witnesses the fruits of that system. Instead of perfecting popular government it is destroying popular government. Instead of bringing about a more direct responsibility to the people upon the part of public men, it has lessened that responsibility and made it not only possible but easy for men in public office to evade party responsibility for whatever happens.

Instead of purifying public affairs the party primary has made them more corrupt. The party leaders under the old system sought men with mental attainments and high character to carry the party banner and lead in the fight on the hustings. It did not matter to the party organization or to the leaders whether such men were wealthy in a material way or not. A poor man, if he possessed brains and character, could hope and expect party preferment. To-day, under the party primary, the poor man is barred. No one without a bank roll can aspire to nomination for office with any hope of success. Under the old party convention system the rank and file in the party worked for the party success because they believed in party principles and counted it an honor to give freely of their time and energy to bring victory to their party banner. Since the primary has been in vogue no man can be secured to work for the party or party candidates unless he is paid. The primary system has made it necessary for individuals seeking nomination to raise and expend great sums of money.

There is no exception to this rule. There are a few demagogues who have secured party nominations who claim their campaign expenses amounted to but a few hundred dollars. Such men are guilty of deliberate deception. One such man, who has gained considerable prominence throughout the country by reason of his radical ideas and bizarre interviews and speeches, boasted he had successfully defeated a large field of candidates in the party primary with the expenditure of only a few hundred dollars. But it later developed that a great radical organization with headquarters in a magnificent office building in the city of Washington possessed of a two-million-dollar campaign fund had sent into this man's State two score or more of paid organizers and speakers and had flooded his State with literature, all in order to nominate him because it was understood between him and them that he was to be their spokesman in event of his success. It later came out that another organization, having for its aims special legislation, had gone to his aid with organizers and speakers and literature.

This is the very essence of invisible government. This is the most corrupting influence that could possibly be at work. It should be kept always in mind that special interest is special interest, no matter what its name, and it is as corrupt and as corrupting for a radical organization professing to be for the people to buy the nomination of a candidate for public office as it is for a railroad to do so. It should be always kept in mind that the man who rises upon the floor of the American Congress with the label of some special organization of that character upon him is as venal as the one who rises upon the floor with the label of some private corporation stamped upon him. Neither represents the public. Neither is fit to occupy a seat in the halls of legislation.

The direct primary and the "bloc" system of Government is breeding a generation of political hypocrites. Men are using the party label to secure for themselves a nomination and election only to repudiate the party, its principles, its policies, and its leaders once they have secured their seat in the Halls of Congress or in the legislative halls in our several States. They use the party name as a baggage check upon which to ride to Washington. There are men in both branches of Congress to-day who were nominated in Republican primaries and were elected because they had their name on the ticket under the eagle, the emblem of the Republican Party, but who since they were elected have opposed the Republican Party at every step, have spoken and voted against every party policy, have denounced the fundamental principles of the party, and have boasted of their infidelity and treachery as though it were a virtue rather than a shame. Were such political actions indictable, these men could be convicted of perjury, forgery, and the securing of places and power under false pretenses.

These men in their egotism boast that their success is due to their popularity. This boast is given the lie by the fact that not one of them dare run in his State for election as an independent, his name on the ticket in a column not headed by the party emblem. It is not a violent assumption to arrive at the conclusion that a man who will resort to such deception to secure a seat in the halls of legislation will not hesitate to use the same methods after he has secured his seat; that an individual who will thus betray his constituency in order to gain for himself a position of influence and satisfy personal ambition will not hesitate after he has secured the position to betray the people again if by so doing he can gratify some other personal ambition. This is what the American people are reaping as a result of the primaries and the "bloc" system. The only cure for it is a return to old-fashioned party government. It was good enough to save the Union once, and it will be needed if we are to save free institutions again. Unless we do return to the system of party government there are two alternatives ahead of this country—one-man rule, which most likely will go to the individual who proves the most crafty and unscrupulous; or mob rule, with all that implies.

The direct primary has opened the way to the vicious and unscrupulous. It has enabled the partisans of one party to participate in the primaries of other parties to an extent that nullifies the will of the rank and file of the party holding the primary.

No greater crime against party government was ever perpetrated than that which marked the Michigan primaries of 1918. Because of the primary laws in that State it was possible for Mr. Ford to run as a candidate for nomination for the United States Senate on both the Democratic and Republican tickets. Now, it is obvious that a man can not be both a Democrat and a Republican. It is equally obvious that a man who places his name on both tickets is guilty of the basest sort of deception and is on the face of it attempting to trick the people. In this plot the leaders of the Democratic Party in Michigan, the leaders of the Democratic national organization, and even the high Democratic officials who directed the affairs of the Government participated. It was a deliberate, well-planned scheme for the Democratic Party to rape the Republican primaries in Michigan. This sort of a thing was absolutely impossible in the party convention. In view of this it is a travesty to speak about primaries being the medium through which the people can express their wish and obtain their free choice.

Or, take another instance: The candidate for nomination for a high office in a Middle Western State is a publisher and he owns a string of daily, weekly, and monthly publications. Through these he reaches more people of his State than any other one man. All of the political propaganda which he places in his publications to boost himself does not cost him a cent. In a campaign in his own State he refused to carry the advertisement of his opponent. This man is one of the most vociferous exponents of the direct primary. He is also loud in his denunciation of those who spend considerable sums of money to win a nomination or an election. Yet in his State if a man wishes to oppose him in the direct primary he must either suffer the fatal handicap of having no publicity as against the tremendous propaganda in the papers owned by the gentleman in question, or he must expend a tremendous sum of money in other papers to offset the self-advertising publisher candidate.

This same situation exists, with variations, in other States. It is breaking down popular government. It is muzzling free speech and making a farce of untrammeled expression of the public. None of this could happen under the party convention system.

The menace does not stop here. There is in existence a self-constituted organization known by the high-sounding title of Conference for Progressive Political Action. It has elaborate offices, occupying three or four floors in a marble office sky scraper in the city of Washington. It has a publicity department which employs more people and expends more money than all the old party organizations added together and multiplied. It has a staff of highly paid traveling organizers. It has a weekly publication which it furnishes to hundreds of thousands of individuals. Its head is a Socialist who has consorted with the most radical elements in the United States and who has been a candidate for office upon the Socialist ticket. It has for its executive officers a collection of Socialists, communists, and other radicals, sprinkled liberally with a number of Democrats who believe in paternalism. It has for its cardinal principles the destruction of the courts, the public ownership of railroads, mines, and key industries. Its literature and publications take advantage of the liberality of our laws to preach sedition, class hatred, and destruction constantly.

This organization in the primaries of 1922 and in the elections expended untold sums of money sending speakers, workers, and literature into States and congressional districts to defeat men who refuse to subscribe to their violent, destructive, and seditious opinions. No railroad, no bank, no great corporation, indeed no group of private corporations or banking interests or railroad interests expended anything like the money or had at work anything approaching the tremendous organization that this Conference for Progressive Political Action expended or had in the field in 1922.

It worked under the guise of being nonpartisan. In point of fact, it lined up with scarcely any exception against candidates on the Republican ticket. Those exceptions were where the candidates on the Republican ticket were not Republicans but radicals stealing the livery of Heaven in which to serve the devil. This organization, which is daily, hourly at work breaking down the faith of the people in our Government, arraying the mass of people against those who have a competence, seeking to overthrow the courts of the land, advocating confiscation of railroads and mines thrives and accomplishes its purpose by reason of the direct primary. It would be utterly impotent under the old system of party convention.

This organization and kindred organizations are responsible for the nomination and the election to the Congress of bootstrap economists, who assert to the farmer they are going to lessen the cost of his living by reducing railroad rates and the cost of manufactured products and at the same time promise the workingman they are going to raise his wages. These are the gentlemen who are proclaiming the fantastic and impossible doctrine that they are going to cut down living costs all around by transferring the expense of running railroads, mines, and other industries from the shoulders of the shippers and consumers to the United States Treasury. But here they stop for the simple reason that they can not explain to the public how, if they increase the expenses of the Government, they are not going to increase taxes, and if taxes increase they must be paid by the man in the ranks.

These are the gentlemen who are advocating Government ownership of railroads. We had an experiment of that character for two years under the Democratic administration. It cost the taxpayers directly $2,000,000,000. The thing which afflicts the farmer to-day is the conditions brought about by Government control of railroads under the McAdoo régime. The high freight rates to-day are the result of the conditions fastened upon the transportation systems of the country under Government control. It succeeded in doing four things: It bled the United States Treasury of $2,000,000,000, which must be raised in taxes from the common people; it nearly wrecked the railroad systems of the country; it established and made legal a system of shop rules and working conditions and wage levels for the railroad unions which necessitated the raising of freight rates; and this condition brought about the fourth result, namely, the greatest distress the agricultural sections of America ever experienced.

Yet there are men in the agricultural sections of the United States who are now playing hand and glove with this conference for progressive political action, with these socialists, communists, and government-ownership fanatics in order to bring about a permanent control and ownership of railroads by the Federal Government and fasten upon themselves taxes indirectly and directly that will inevitably result in their utter ruin. There could be no more unholy and unnatural alliance imagined than the farmer joining hands with this outfit to turn over the industries of this country to the radical crowd.

It would have but one result in the world of transportation, in the mining industry, in all manufacturing plants—wages would be raised to a ridiculous level, hours of labor would be cut to a ridiculous minimum, a minimum of production would be set, and the result would be the rest of the world, and the farmer particularly, paying enormous tribute to the labor demagogues who would sit in control at Washington and by the threat of swinging the vote of their several million followers have a strangle hold upon Congress and the administration.

In this radical scheme to push up costs in the railroad world, in the mining industry, in all manufacturing industries—the bulk of which increase would be saddled upon the farmer because he is the largest buyer of transportation, of fuel, and all manufactured goods—are such organizations as the Conference for Progressive Political Action, the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated organizations, the Farmer-Labor Party, and other organizations having popular titles given strength and standing in the country by the support of men nominated and elected to office under the camouflage of their being Republicans.

In some quarters the voice of small politicians is being raised in advice that the Republican Party compromise with these elements; that if it does not it will go down in defeat. Never was more disastrous advice offered. It is on a par with the advice offered Lincoln in his first campaign to compromise with the institution of slavery and the advice offered later during the war that he should permit the "erring States to go their way" and thus bring about dissolution of the Union because that was the line of least resistance and the field of least endeavor and least anguish.

The Republican Party to-day is the only organization which stands between the forces of radicalism and destruction and the institutions of our Government. It is cordially hated and feared by those forces. That is evidenced by the fact that they and their satellites do not dare take the field openly against the Republican Party. Men who have the backing of these radicals do not seek nominations and elections as radicals but insinuate themselves upon the Republican Party under the Republican Party emblem.

"Boring from within" is the phrase used by radicals to describe this method of their efforts to secure control of the Republican Party. It is a phrase borrowed from Lenin and Trotski. It is apt; it is well chosen, in view of the fact that the objects ultimately desired by these gentlemen are the same as those of Lenin, Trotski, and their crowd of wreckers in Russia. There is nothing to be gained by compromising with these radicals. Those who cater to them earn their contempt, excite their derision, but never win their confidence or gain their support, while at the same time the party which would cater to them would justly earn the disgust of the solid, substantial worth-while Americans.

This Congress is drawing to a close. The written record will show it has enacted more constructive legislation than any American Congress in history. The written record will show it has enacted no class legislation, no destructive legislation, no legislation tearing down one section of the country in order to upbuild another, no legislation injuring one class of people in order to enrich another. It has been a Congress which has legislated for all classes and all people.

It found public and private conditions in the worst possible state, due to eight years of paternalistic government under the direction of a Democratic administration. It found the farmer bankrupt, 5,000,000 ordinarily employed wage earners walking the streets, business living from hand to mouth, industry paralyzed, taxes more oppressive than ever in the history of America, waste and graft rampant in the Government departments.

By legislation and by administration all this has been changed. It has been two years of rigid economy upon the part of both Congress and the executive branch of the Government. It has been two years of legislation reducing taxes. It has been two years of legislation putting business, agriculture, and industry back on their feet. It has been two years of retrenchment, two years of reconstruction, two years of working the country back to a healthy condition. All this has been accomplished by the Republican Party, in control of the executive and the legislative branches of the Government.

In the legislative branch it has been accomplished by Republican majorities in committees and on the floor of both the House and the Senate. It has not been accomplished by lobbyists who claim the credit for it. It has not been accomplished by "blocs" who claim they compelled the legislative branch of Congress to do their bidding. These lobbyists, these organizations, these "blocs" remind one of the fly that sat on the chariot wheel and exclaimed, "What a dust I am raising!" These accomplishments have been in spite of the "blocs" and the lobbyists and the organizations, not because of them. The Republican Party, in control of both branches of Congress, has legislated wisely and constructively just the same as it has legislated wisely and constructively in previous years when it had control of Congress. But here these gentlemen advertise themselves in order to keep the money coming into their coffers from the laboring men and farmers whom they dupe into paying dues. One would suppose that before they came on the scene of action and established themselves in high-salaried jobs no Congress had ever enacted a law in behalf of the workingman or the farmer or the business man or the country as a whole; and one, if he believes them, shudders at the prospect of their untimely demise, for if they go, wisdom shall certainly die with them!

Notwithstanding the splendid record of this Congress, no Congress has been more heartily damned and more unjustly maligned than the Sixty-seventh Congress. This misrepresentation and denunciation has its origin, its financing, and its distribution among those groups and "blocs" and individuals and lobbyists who have been unable to jam their schemes through this Congress. It has been aided and abetted by the "10 per centers" over the country—those who have secured 90 per cent of the legislation they wanted but who are sore because they did not secure the remaining 10 per cent. It is human nature to complain because of the few things we do not get rather than to be thankful for the many things we do get. It is the privilege of the American people to criticize their legislative representatives. In fact, it is an American trait. The spirit of fault-finding is not new. The trouble maker has been a burden and a pest since the earliest time. There is every reason to raise the voice of warning against those who preach dissatisfaction, but there is no reason to despair because such doctrine is abroad. In the earlier days of this Republic similar conditions existed. In 1833 Daniel Webster made a speech in the Senate in which he said:

There are persons who constantly clamor. They complain of oppression, speculation, and pernicious influence of accumulated wealth. They cry out loudly against all banks and corporations and all means by which capitalists become united in order to produce important and beneficial results. They carry on mad hostility against all established institutions. They would choke the fountains of industry and dry all streams. In a country of unbounded libefty they clamor against oppression. In a country of perfect equality they would move heaven and earth against privilege and monopoly. In a country where property is more evenly divided than anywhere else they rend the air, shouting agrarian doctrines. In a country where wages of labor are high beyond parallel they would teach the laborer that he is but an oppressed slave.

Had Webster been living to-day he could not have described more accurately the situation. There is only one new element which did not exist in the days of Webster. That is the foreign propagandist—the propagandist and agitator who would have America forsake her time-honored policy of noninterference in the quarrels and bickerings, embroilments and wars, the age-long feuds of Europe. This class of agitators and propagandists are numerous. They are perhaps the best financed of any group of agitators in the country. They are now making a special effort to convince the agricultural sections of the country that the prosperity of the American farmer depends upon our interference in European affairs. He is being furnished all sorts of false figures, all kinds of misleading statements, in order to secure his support of the movement to have the United States shoulder the burdens of bankrupt Europe. In this connection I wish to quote from an article which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the signature of Garet Garett:

There is the fear that unless the European demand for our surplus agricultural produce is sustained the American farmer will be ruined.

Well, but here appears at once the unexpected circumstance that while the farm bloc was supporting the Borah resolution and was willing to support the administration in almost anything it might think to do for the purpose of saving Europe so that Europe could buy America's grain surplus—even then our exports of grain and grain products were running twice over what they were before the war, and had been running that way through the year, with exports of other food, like provisions, running at the same time half again as high as in normal times.

What is the explanation? It is simply that during the war and ever since our exports of food to Europe have been abnormal; not subnormal—abnormal. Fix that fact. They were abnormal during the war for obvious causes. They have been abnormal since the war because European agriculture is not yet back to normal. American agriculture has continued to supply the difference between normal and subnormal food production in Europe. Russia is still out. We are filling her place as food purveyor. But Russia presently will come back. Agriculture all over Europe is coming back. During the war Europe's annual grain production fell 1,000,000,000 bushels. The production in North America increased in the same amount. That kept a balance. In the last four years Europe's production has increased about 400,000,000 bushels. It is nearly halfway back to normal. And just to that extent her abnormal demand for North American grain is reduced. In the same way and for the same reasons the European demand for all American food products is tending to fall naturally—that is, tending to become normal again.

Instead of telling the American farmer that the American Government must settle things in Europe, must get German reparations fixed if it has to fix them itself, in order to sustain the foreign market for his surplus, the farm bloc ought to be telling him this: "Tranquillity in Europe will be a human blessing, though not for the reasons you think. Prepare yourself for the immediate effects. You will not like them. You are supposing that an abnormal postwar demand for food will continue. It will not. When Europe returns to a state of normal productivity she will be 95 per cent self-sustaining in foodstuffs, as she was before, and American exports therefore will fall to what they were before the war, which was much less than they are now. You are overproducing to meet the aftermath of a war demand which will tend to disappear no matter what we do. Therefore govern your work accordingly, as industry goes, and let your production down."

But, no. It talks to him of a food loan to Germany, and of continuing to give our surplus away—of giving, forgiving, and lending Europe the money with which to buy our things.

The thought of making a capital loan of $1,500,000,000 to Germany, or a capital loan of any sum, is fantastic. All that she can legitimately need is maybe 80,000,000 bushels of wheat to take her into the next crop and raw materials on which to apply her labor, provided she is willing to begin to pay three or four hundred million dollars at the utmost. And that may all be managed in the way of commercial bank credit. It ought not to be managed in any other way. She will buy the food in any event.

There is another thing the farm bloc ought to tell the American farmer and doesn't dare to say. That is: Growing grain for export is the most wasteful industry we have. It is conducted and must be conducted in competition with Australia, Argentina, and India. The sooner we stop it the better.

It would be impossible for me to state the situation any more clearly than it is stated in these few sentences. I have the honor to represent a congressional district which is strictly agricultural. It contains within its boundaries more farms than any other congressional district in the United States. I have tried during my tenure of office to represent the farmers of my district. In doing so I have endeavored to inform myself upon the subjects which affect their welfare and their prosperity. I can conceive of nothing that would result more disastrously to the farming interests of this country than for them to follow the false leaders who would have them participate in European affairs in the vain hope that by so doing they would increase their markets and thereby increase their prosperity.

The article quoted says the members of the "farm bloc" are back of the movement to have America interfere in Europe in order to revive it and restore the market of the farmers. I do not speak for the "farm bloc." I am not a member of the "farm bloc." I represent the agricultural interests of my district without being instructed by the "farm bloc" as to how I shall vote. I feel I, like every other Representative in Congress who comes from an agricultural district, know the sentiment of and the needs of the farmers of my district better than those lobbyists in Washington who claim they speak the voice of the farmer. I am certain I know better the need of the agricultural interests of my district than some members of the so-called farm bloc who know nothing whatever about farming a farm, but who are very adept in farming the farmer for his vote.

There is nothing more false than the repeated statements made in various quarters that the American farmer under the Republican administration in the last two years has lost his European markets. To prove the falsity of this statement, I present a tabulation obtained from the Department of Commerce, showing the exports of farm products for the five years preceding the war and for the last two years under a Republican administration. According to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, the exports of "foodstuffs and food animals" for the five years preceding the World War were as follows:

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1910	$109,828,320
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1911	103,401,553
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1912	99,899,270
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1913	181,907,266
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1914	137,495,121

The exports of "foodstuffs and food animals" for the last two years were as follows:

Calendar year ending December 31, 1921	$692,248,671
Calendar year ending December 31, 1922	458,353,860

The exports of "foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured"—such as flour, bacon, cured meats, and so forth—for the five years preceding the World War were as follows:

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1910	$259, 259, 654
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1911	282, 016, 883
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1912	318, 838, 493
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1913	321, 204, 373
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1914	293, 218, 336

The exports of "foodstuffs, partly or wholly manufactured," for the last two years were as follows:

Calendar year ending Dec. 31, 1921	$669, 665, 598
Calendar year ending Dec. 31, 1922	588, 242, 722

From these figures it is clearly evident that the American farmer has not lost his foreign markets. It is clearly evident that he is exporting more to-day than he did prior to the war.

I would not be guilty of the same deception that our Democratic critics and our international propagandists are guilty of by claiming this increase in exports as compared with pre-war period is due to a Republican administration, the result of Republican policies. Such is not the case. It is due to the fact that Europe is not yet back to its normal production of agricultural products. As the article which I have quoted so clearly points out, as soon as Europe is back to normal production the exports of our agricultural products will decrease. There is nothing else ahead for the American farmer except a decrease in his exports to Europe. The sooner Europe is put on its feet the sooner he will lose his exports to that country. The sooner Russia is again in the field producing enormous quantities of wheat and other products the sooner will our exports of wheat decrease to a level of the pre-war period.

Therefore what folly it is to argue that the American farmer should put up money to hasten the revival of Europe upon the ground that by so doing he will increase his exports. What folly it is to propose that the American farmer be taxed to raise a billion or two billion dollars to loan European countries in order that they may buy his products. If loaning a man money for the purpose of having him spend it with you is the way to prosperity, then there is nothing in the world to prevent the corner grocer from becoming a merchant prince by the simple process of loaning his customers money with which they can purchase his goods. Ergo—the more money he loans the more goods they will buy of him. The more goods they buy of him the more money he will have to loan them to buy more goods. Strange it has been left to the addle-pated agitators of to-day to discover this short cut to affluence and ease. According to that theory of commerce and finance the two victims of a shipwreck, stranded on an island, could have become immensely wealthy by the simple process of swapping jackknives indefinitely.

The only thing which the American farmer should fear is the fact that European nations, and particularly Russia, will regain their normal production activities in agricultural lines before their currency assumes its normal value. This possibility is a real menace to the American farmer. The American manufacturer is facing increasingly destructive competition to-day from those industrial centers of Europe which have a debased currency.

They are flooding this country with manufactured articles laid down in this country upon a basis of valuation expressed in terms of their debased currency. No protective tariff ever written could possibly have rates high enough to protect American industries against imports so valued.

The logical and inevitable result of such a flood of imports laid down in this country, duty paid, for less than the American manufacturer can place them on the cars at his factory doors will be the decrease of industrial activity in America, with a corresponding decrease in employment of American wage earners. These wage earners are the best customers of the American farmer. I do not propose at this time to go into a lengthy discussion of the tariff. Suffice it to say that when the American wage earner has employment at an American wage the American farmer is prosperous because of his home market, and when, due to a flood of cheaply made foreign goods, the American wage earner is thrown out of employment the American farmer is the first and the worst sufferer.

The protective-tariff system has not only built up in America the greatest industries in the world and raised the level of wages and the standard of living of American wage earners higher than enjoyed by any other class of industrial workers in the world, but by the very reason of this the protective-tariff system has made the American farmer the most prosperous tiller of the soil in the world, infinitely better off than the peasant of eastern Russia or the muzhik of Russia.

Therefore it is incomprehensible from the standpoint of the interests of the farmer himself that such an organization as the American Farm Bureau Federation should, through its executives and through its trade organ, the American Farm Bureau News, launch an attack upon the system of protective tariff and endeavor to convince the farmer that his interests are identical with the interests of Europe, and that he will be best served if he breaks down the industrial fabric in America and reduces to a state of idleness the millions of profitably employed American wage earners.

That is but the beginning of the disaster. If the attacks of the American Farm Bureau upon the protective-tariff system, which it is making in conjunction with Democratic politicians, is successful, what the European manufacturer can do, the European agriculturist can do. Already Russia is coming back as a producer of agricultural products. Already she is shipping grain to Germany and to other European countries. First-hand observers who have returned from that country say that in two years Russia will again be producing great quantities of agricultural products for export, but who believes that within two years the Government of Russia will have become so stabilized, will have returned to the paths of sanity, will have reverted to the practices of economy sufficiently to restore her currency to a normal rate of exchange? No one. What is to happen to the American farmer if he lends his assistance to the free trader to break down the system of protective tariff when Russia begins to pour wheat into the ports of the Atlantic seaboard valued in terms of the depreciated Russian ruble?

When that hour comes the market of the American farmer in the industrial, consuming centers of the United States will be wiped out quite as thoroughly and as completely as though the entire Atlantic seaboard had slipped into the ocean. And if the American farmer in that hour can not compete at home with Russian wheat raised by the muzhik and paid for in the depreciated Russian ruble, what hope has he of competing with it in the markets of Europe?

The internationalist who would have the American farmer intervene in Europe in order that he may take upon his shoulders the tax burden of that continent; the free trader who would have the American farmer help him break down the system of protective tariff in order that Europe may seize the American markets, are the worst enemies to-day of American agriculture. Therefore, the conclusion is justified that such organizations as the Farmer-Labor Party, Conference for Progressive Political Action, the American Farm Bureau Federation, and like organizations, which are working hand and glove with those interests, disseminating their false and vicious attacks in an effort to mislead the farmer, are not the friends of the farmer and do not represent his interests.

The farmer of America, the wage earner, the business man, and manufacturer—all Americans, whatever their avocation or trade—should ever keep in mind that in this country, so long as popular government is to survive, the welfare of one class of citizens or one section of the country bears upon the welfare of all classes of citizens and all sections of the country. They should remember that one class of citizen or one section of the country can not be injured without that injury affecting and afflicting all other classes and all other sections.

We are living in the aftermath of the greatest world cataclysm of time. There have been other wars, but nothing which compared in extent or destructiveness to the World War. It literally wiped out the accumulations of centuries. It has turned into strange channels the current of human thought. But one thing it did not do and could not do. It did not destroy or change one iota the old-fashioned fundamentals or principles upon which all enduring civilization is founded. Now, as in the aftermath of all great wars, there is a spirit of unrest abroad; dissatisfaction is the rule rather than the exception. At such a time not only the welfare but the safety of nations and of civilization itself depend upon sober-minded, straight-thinking, God-fearing men and women who keep their eyes upon the eternal principles.

As for America and Americans there can be no better example to follow than the example of Abraham Lincoln, who has been justly styled "the first American." As for Republicans and the Republican Party, they must hold firmly and advocate boldly the same principles which Abraham Lincoln upheld and advocated. He believed in the sanctity of the courts. He believed in law and order and respect for constituted authority. He believed in sound money and economic practices. He believed in economy. He believed in the right of an individual to pursue his chosen avocation or trade and to enjoy the fruits thereof. He believed in all people, not a class. He believed in American institutions. He believed in America first. He believed in the doctrine of nonintervention in European affairs quite as firmly as he resented any effort upon the part of European nations to intervene in American affairs as they did attempt to do during the Civil War. He believed in the doctrine and the practice of protective tariff for American industries, American wage earners, and American producers. He believed in party government. He believed in party loyalty. He believed in giving an honest day's work, heaped up and running over, for an honest day's wage.

He stands to-day in the estimation of Americans and in the estimation of mankind, even to the farthest-flung outposts of the civilized world, as the most human figure of modern times and one of the most heroic figures of all times. He stands to-day in the estimation of all Americans as the exemplar of American institutions and ideals. He stands to-day in the estimation of Republicans not only as their first President, the savior of the Union, but as their lawgiver. Neither mankind nor Americans nor Republicans can go astray in working out the problems of civilization if they ever keep in mind the teachings and practices and the ideals of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the proposed constitutional amendment, claimed to be for the purpose of reaching tax-exempt securities, issued under governmental authority, is in reality something very much more, in that it strikes at the very foundations of the Government, and particularly at the perpetuity of the States and the control by them of their credit and their existence.

In the great case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., U. S., 316, p. 431) the Supreme Court of the United States most impressively called attention to the fact "that the power to tax involves the power to destroy."

The court said:

> That the power to tax involves the power to destroy; that the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; that there is a plain repugnance, in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control, are propositions not to be denied. But all inconsistencies are to be reconciled by the magic of the word "confidence." Taxation, it is said, does not necessarily and unavoidably destroy. To carry it to excess of destruction would be an abuse; to presume which would banish that confidence which is essential to all government.

But is this a case of confidence? Would the people of any one State trust those of another with a power to control the most insignificant operations of their State government? We know they would not.

The proposed resolution reads as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 314) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein). That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States; but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under authority of such State."

It will be observed that the proposal is so drafted as to persuade the States that the Federal Government is not asking for a privilege which it is not willing shall be exercised by the several States with respect to the Federal Government.

The hearings held before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives clearly reflect that the opponents of the proposed constitutional amendment were of the opinion that unless this so-called reciprocal power of taxation was given to the States there would be no possible chance of securing ratification of the proposed amendment by three-fourths of the States of the Union.

So, after all, this supposed concession of a reciprocal right is only a bait with which to entrap the States.

But quite apart from the wisdom or advisability of the adoption of such a policy, let us inquire for a moment as to the value to the States of the so-called reciprocal authority.

One of the foremost advocates of this resolution, and one of the recognized greatest tax experts of the country, is Hon. OGDEN L. MILLS, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York, who is generally known to be many times a millionaire and closely identified with J. P. Morgan & Co. and other great Wall Street interests. Mr. MILLS, when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in advocacy of the proposed amendment, made this startling admission and disclosure:

Mr. MILLS. Well, I take it that we have got to consider this proposition as Representatives of the National Government. What the States will do with it afterwards is a very different question, and I think my vote in the State legislature might be possibly different from my vote in the National Legislature, although I do not want to commit myself on that point. We have got to look at this from the national standpoint. We are giving the States the privilege, to be sure, of taxing national securities, but in return we are getting the great mass of securities that on the whole are going to constitute a much larger tax base than the Federal securities are. And what is more, we are asking for the benefit—and we are getting the benefit—of taking them at a much higher rate than the States are likely to do. You are only giving to the States the privilege of taxing income from the bonds.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I was going to call to your attention.

Mr. MILLS. And there are only four States in the Union to-day that have income taxes. All the other States, or the great majority of the States, tax securities as property, which they generally classify as the property tax.

Mr. GARNER. We are asking the State in this amendment to surrender their right to issue tax-free securities.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. And to vest unlimited power in the Federal Government for tax purposes.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

From the foregoing statement, and the amendment proposed, it is apparent—

(1) That States which do not have an income tax law could not reach Federal securities.

(2) That only Federal securities controlled within the State could be reached, even if such State has an income tax law.

(3) That a few States, where the great financial centers exist, would control the Federal securities issued and be able to reach them through income tax laws. The great majority of States in the American Union would never derive an advantage from this so-called reciprocal provision.

(4) It is to be carefully observed that the proposed constitutional amendment does not authorize taxation of securities which have already been issued. The effect of this feature is of tremendous importance, because the Federal Government has issued about all the securities or bonds which may be necessary for many, many years to come, and is now engaged in the process of redemption and refunding of such securities, with a view to the final liquidation and payment thereof.

The States, however, in order to meet the necessities for schools, highways, drainage and reclamation projects, and other great public improvements, are constantly compelled to utilize their credit, or the credit of the political subdivisions of such States, to obtain bonds for such public purposes. So that while the States, for the most part, would never derive anything whatever from Federal securities, yet the Federal Government would either be able to entirely destroy the tax-exempt securities of the States and their political subdivisions, or to tax them so heavily as to destroy their marketable character.

It is apparent, therefore, that if the people of the United States are hoping to reach those tax-exempt securities of the Federal Government already issued through this proposed amendment, they are doomed to utter disappointment, for, as stated, it applies to future issues of securities only, and such part of great fortunes as has already been invested in tax-exempt securities will not be reached by the amendment proposed.

The Federal Government is not surrendering any appreciable authority, but will gain a tremendous and complete power over the individual States, their securities and their welfare, in the event the proposed constitutional amendment is submitted and finally ratified by the required number of States.

A reading of the proposed constitutional amendment clearly shows that such amendment would apply only to "securities issued after the ratification of this article"; which would, therefore, make it impossible under the proposed resolution to levy any tax upon tax-exempt securities already issued. The Secretary of the Treasury stated in a letter dated September 23, 1921, to the chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency:

It is also important, in order to avoid any question of bad faith, that the amendment should not apply to outstanding issues which now enjoy tax exemptions.

(5) It is also to be noted that there is incorporated in the proposed constitutional amendment not only language relating to securities issued by the Federal Government but also "under the authority of the United States or any other State."

The purpose of the inclusion of this language is very plain, especially when viewed in the light of the explanation given by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter of September 23, 1921, previously referred to. He therein stated:

This would apply, for example, to securities issued by Federal land banks and other so-called instrumentalities of the Federal and State Governments, which might not be considered as coming within the terms of the resolution as it now stands.

This means that the tax-exempt privilege now enjoyed by farm-loan bonds could no longer be maintained in the event of the adoption and the ratification of the proposed constitutional amendment.

By degrees, therefore, it will be seen that the smoke-screen attack which has been for a long time developed and sustained with great intensity by certain mortgage banking interests against the farm loan act is becoming recognized as one of the strongest moving forces to bring about the adoption of the proposed tax amendment.

The Secretary of the Treasury testified at the hearings in January, 1922, as follows:

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Secretary, would you mind telling the committee what, in your judgment, the adoption of this resolution—what effect it would have on the sale of Federal farm-loan bonds?

Secretary MELLON. They would probably have to bear a higher rate of interest in order to meet the difference in taxation or to meet the competition in the market from tax-free bonds.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Secretary, that would depend to some extent upon the condition of the market at the time they were offered, the scarcity of bonds; and if investment funds were considerable, the rate of interest might not be seriously affected.

Secretary MELLON. Certainly it depends on the condition of the money market at the time.

Mr. YOUNG. But in a money market that is rather tight, where money is scarce, you figure that it would affect the rate and increase it?

Mr. GARNER. The farm-loan bonds would have to absorb this tax in an increased rate of interest, would they not?

Secretary MELLON. They would have to pay an increased rate of interest undoubtedly. They always would. It might be a lesser or a greater amount of interest and might not be higher than the rate now prevailing, but it would be higher if this exemption were not allowed than with the exemption, naturally, and so would all Government issues.

The farm loan act successfully resisted the effort of certain interests to have it declared unconstitutional chiefly because through its operations the farmers of the United States were being relieved of extortionate interest rates and charges in connection with loans and being permitted to borrow from the land banks upon reasonable terms.

The effect of the operations of the land banks, moreover, has not only been to give the farmers loans at lower rates of interest when the money was borrowed through the farm-loan system but has compelled those previously exacting extortionate interest rates and charges to reduce such rates in order to find investment for their money.

It is, therefore, but natural that these selfsame interests should be seeking to compel the farmers of the United States to pay more for their loans when obtained through Federal land banks, so that these interests in turn may likewise make a higher charge and receive an increased interest return.

The hearings held on this resolution show the attendance of some of the so-called mortgage bankers who were intensely interested in removing, as far as possible, the competition and effect of the low interest charges upon loans through Federal land banks, which low interest charges are made possible largely through the tax-exempt privilege which the Federal farm-loan bonds enjoy.

It is through the sale of these bonds that the money is provided out of which the farmers obtain their loans.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, estimated that the difference in the interest rate between what a tax-exempt bond would have to bear and a bond without tax-exempt privilege would have to pay, in order to sell at par, would be from 1 to 1½ per cent.

Mr. FREAR. That is true to-day that the Government can issue 3½ per cent tax-free securities?

Secretary MELLON. Yes, sir. Now, to sell a security at par that is not tax free the Government would have to pay a rate of interest to-day of more than 4 per cent, of course.

Mr. CRISP. More than what?

Secretary MELLON. More than 4 per cent. I suppose it would depend upon the length of time they would have to run, but it would be somewhere from 4½ to perhaps 5 per cent, depending on the length of time they would run.

The Government actuary, Mr. Joseph S. McCoy, testified:

There is little doubt that under these conditions the future investor in what are now tax-exempt securities would demand that they bear a higher rate of interest or be sold at a discount sufficient at least to meet this tax.

The Secretary of the Treasury appeared inclined to the same view, and the chairman, Mr. FORDNEY, of the Ways and Means Committee, thought the people generally would pay double in increased interest charges what they would receive back in taxes.

But it is urged that the States and their political subdivisions are reckless and extravagant in the issue of tax-exempt securities and should be curbed.

A good and sufficient answer to this argument is that the curbing should be done by the States in the regulation of their own credit and not by the Federal Government through a paternalistic control over the States.

It is well known, moreover, that before bonds for great public improvements can usually be issued now a vote of the people of a county, school, reclamation, or drainage district must first be cast authorizing the issuance of the same.

Is the Federal Government to be permitted to exercise the veto power over the control by the people of the States of such matters of vital domestic concern?

The manifest purpose of the proposed constitutional amendment is declared by large money and mortgage banking interests to be the suppression and elimination of tax-exempt securities; and to be more frank about it, it should be added, the tax-exempt securities issued by the States or political subdivisions thereof.

And when one asks for the reason behind such purpose it is speciously urged by such interests that it has to be done in order that great fortunes shall not escape taxation.

It is a singular thing that so many millionaires of Wall Street and elsewhere and other men of enormous wealth, who have been and are still vigorously advocating the reduction of the Federal income surtax on swollen fortunes, should suddenly become so solicitous about none of those fortunes escaping taxation, as it is claimed they are doing now, in tax-exempt securities.

Hon. OGDEN L. MILLS, heretofore referred to as one of the greatest champions of the proposed amendment, as late as August 17, 1921, in a speech in the House of Representatives indicated that even if false statements had to be made to conceal their assets and profits great swollen fortunes would not pay a high range of Federal income surtaxes.

He was advancing the argument in advocacy of a reduction of surtaxes upon such great fortunes to a basis where, he claimed, it might be possible to persuade those against whom they were assessed to make an honest and true return. Mr. MILLS further indicated that public sentiment sustained such tax evasion. And yet it now appears his deepest concern is that these very swollen fortunes shall be reached to the uttermost limit by the alleged device of practically prohibiting, through the Federal Government, the issuance of all future tax-exempt securities by the State governments or their political subdivisions. Surely the people can not be accused of being unreasonable if they question the sincerity of such advocates and distrust the motives behind this movement for conferring upon the Federal Government the power to control the destinies of the several States and forever destroy their independent sovereignty. The price to be paid for giving the Federal Government power to control the issuance of tax-exempt securities is so amazingly and incredibly high that the American people have never dreamed of its proportions and have not realized that it demands the surrender of the sovereignty of the States and involves a relinquishment of right and power to exist as independent political units within a Federal Union, so that all the governmental power of the States and municipalities will be completely submerged in the power of the Federal Government, which will then be all-embracing and supreme.

It is apparent to one who gives consideration to this great question of the regulation of the issuance of tax-exempt securities that the remedy for checking or controlling the issuance of such securities is not to confer upon the Federal Government the power to control the credit, and thereby the very right to exist, of the individual States of the Union and their political subdivisions, but rather to formulate and declare a policy to be initiated, adopted, and carried out by the several States, each within its own sphere, and regulating the issuance of its own securities, and the Federal Government likewise regulating the issuance of Federal securities; so that, in order to check or abate the issue of tax-exempt securities, all that will be necessary is for the individual States to exercise the powers which they already enjoy to provide for a limitation upon the tax-exempt privileges of State and municipal bonds and for the Federal Government to exercise the power which it already has to curtail or entirely restrict the tax-exempt privilege of any future issues of Federal bonds.

Of course the people will be called upon to pay higher rates of interest upon their bonds, as indicated by the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever such bonds are divested of their tax-exempt privilege and are made taxable, because such bonds, when taxable, will have to yield to the investor a higher return in order to be as productive from an investment standpoint as a tax-exempt bond. But this, as stated, is simply a question of policy which each State is quite able to regulate in its own way and in conformity to the wishes of its people without conferring the power upon the Federal Government to destroy such States through the power of taxation and to leave them helpless and dependent upon the mercy of the Government of the United States.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. Speaker, the tariff bill recently enacted into a law contains provisions never before incorporated in any bill. Those provisions attempt to confer elastic powers upon the Executive in disregard of the fundamentals of the Constitution which define the powers to be exercised by the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

The Constitution clearly imposes upon the legislative department of the Government the power to "lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excise, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and welfare of the United States." That power can only be exercised by the Congress and is nondelegable. That it is committed exclusively to the Congress by the Constitution in its exercise is made plain by that provision of the Constitution which vests in the Congress "all legislative powers" granted by the Constitution, excluding the exercise of those powers by the Executive or the judicial.

The framers of the Constitution scrupulously guarded the rights of the people, especially with respect to the raising of revenue. They incorporated into that instrument a mandatory clause requiring that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," conferring upon the Senate merely the right to "propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills."

When it is remembered that the Members of the House are the direct representatives of the people, and so constituted under the Constitution as originally adopted, it will readily be seen that the purpose of its framers and of the States in ratifying it was to give to the people as nearly as possible a voice in the imposition of taxes to be raised for the support of the Government.

It will hardly be gainsaid that "duties, imposts, and excise" collected at the customhouse, commonly known as tariff, are taxes, and that burden must be borne by the people of the United States.

A tariff bill, therefore, is a revenue bill, and the power of originating it is granted to the House exclusively. Nor can it be gainsaid that the enactment of a tariff bill is the exercise of legislative power granted exclusively to the Congress and can be exercised by no other branch of the Government.

The prescribing of the rates of duties upon imported articles is the exercise of a function of legislative power, committed to the Congress and denied to the Executive under the Constitution. And when Congress undertakes, in violation of the Constitution, to shirk its duties by delegating to the Executive the power to name the rate of duty which any imported article shall bear, the exercise by the Executive of a power so attempted to be delegated involves usurpation.

The people in the ordaining of the Constitution carefully and studiously avoided committing to any department of the Government the right to fix the rate of taxation other than to the Congress.

The rate of taxation is the very essence of tax legislation, and the one in which the people of the country are the most interested.

In the construction of the present tariff bill, by way of amendments offered in the Senate, the power is attempted to be conferred upon the Executive to increase or decrease rates of duties, not to exceed 50 per cent, as fixed by the bill on any article of import which in his judgment will equalize competition, or to adopt the American standard of valuation instead of the foreign standard of valuation, or vice versa, and increase or decrease the rate as fixed by the bill, not to exceed 50 per cent, as his discretion may dictate.

No other construction can be placed upon those provisions than that they attempt to confer upon the Executive the power to fix rates of duties and to change those rates as often as he may choose. For example, the duty on an article as fixed by the bill may be 25 per cent ad valorem, and under the power attempted to be conferred upon the Executive he may fix the rate at 37½ per cent, or 12½ per cent ad valorem or some intermediate figure.

Indeed, the duty may be, as fixed by the bill, based on a foreign valuation and changed by the Executive to an American valuation, with an increase or decrease of duty not exceeding 50 per cent of that fixed by Congress.

I repeat, if this is not rate making and revenue raising and taxation by the Executive, the exercise of a legislative function conferred exclusively upon the Congress by the Constitution, then the grant of power to the Congress "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excise" is without meaning.

I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that no court of any respectability has ever held that the Congress of the United States may delegate to the Executive the power to fix the rate of taxation—the rate of duty which imports must bear and which must be paid by the consumer thereof in this country.

It is one thing to confide by legislative enactment administrative features of a law to be exercised by the Executive, but that is quite a different thing from committing to him the power to fix a rate of taxation which must be borne by the people.

It will not do to say that because the rate of duty is limited to a decrease or increase of 50 per cent that the Congress and not the Executive fixes the rate of duty which an article of import must bear. The difference in the increase or decrease between no per cent and 50 per cent may be fixed by the Executive and unfixed by him whenever it suits his pleasure. He, therefore, in naming the rate of duty necessarily fixes it, and in doing so he is exercising a legislative and not an executive function.

What effect upon the commerce of the country the exercise of such a power will have is not difficult to foretell. The importers of goods can never know the duty which they will have to pay and, therefore, the price at which their goods may be sold, nor can the buying public be protected in purchasing merchandise at the fairest cost to them.

The power attempted to be conferred, if valid, redounds to the benefit of the profiteer. Every competitive manufacturer of goods in this country will, of course, fix a price on his goods which will enable him to make a profit, irrespective of what valuation or rate of duty may be fixed by the Executive, and the consumer must pay the price.

Not only is such a power dangerous to the commerce of the country in that it confers upon the Executive, in the exercise of that power, the unreviewable right, the final right, to so administer the tariff rates as to be oppressive to the people or to promote the prosperity of one class of industry to the destruction of another, but is dangerous to the Republic.

When it is remembered that the House in the passage of this bill adopted the American valuation plan, in which the Senate declined to concur, resulting in an amendment of the House bill utterly repudiating that plan, it will readily be seen that the attempted effort to confer upon the Executive the power to adopt the American valuation plan is a cowardly subterfuge upon the part of the Congress to have put in force a valuation plan by the Executive which the legislative branch of the Government had not the courage to adopt, and this the Congress has attempted to do by a delegation of legislative power forbidden by the Constitution.

Whether a duty be fixed upon a foreign or an American valuation is essentially legislative. A valuation is necessarily a basis for fixing an ad valorem duty, and whether that valuation shall be foreign or American must be determined by the Congress, and can not be determined by the Executive.

Not only do the dodges on the part of the Congress of assuming the responsibility of fixing a valuation plan and the rates to be exacted, coupled with the attempt to confer that power upon the Executive, involve a violation of the Constitution and of the solemn oath taken by Members of the Congress to support the Constitution, but also involve an attempt to confer on the Executive a power destructive of the rights of the people of a democracy.

If the Congress has the power, under the grant vested in it by the Constitution, to transfer to the Executive the right to fix rates of tariff, it has the power to transfer the right to exercise any other legislative grant vested in it by the Constitution of the United States.

When once this is conceded and becomes a fixed principle established in our political system the grants of power in the Constitution which limit the legislative powers to be exercised by the Congress may be wholly disregarded, and instead of having a government by the people and for the people we will have a government by the Executive and for the Executive.

The progression of the abrogation by Congress of the powers conferred by the Constitution and the transfer of the exercise of those granted powers to the Executive will necessarily lead to a destruction of the republican form of government ordained and established by the Constitution.

The attempt on the part of the Congress to abrogate the discharge of its constitutional obligations and to impose the performance of those obligations upon the Executive in the making of tariff rates, in so far as that particular matter is concerned, is of comparatively small moment when we consider the consequences that may flow as the result of the recognition of the right of the legislative body of this Nation to delegate the exercise of legislative power to the executive branch of the Government. It is not difficult to see what the consequences will be if this principle is established. Whenever power is acquired by man he is so constituted that he never voluntarily surrenders it and will exercise it, however oppressive it may be upon the people, though its acquisition may be by usurpation.

Whenever we depart from the principle that this is a government of law and not of men, and whenever we willingly as a people surrender the rights secured by the Constitution and acquiesce in the usurpation of those rights by an Executive, the day will not be far distant when anarchy will take the place of law, resulting in the destruction of American civilization and the liberty secured to the citizen by the Constitution.

No people enjoying the form of a democratic government can afford to tolerate the exercise of a governmental power not conferred by their organic law. And no representative of the people sworn to support the Constitution should be tolerated who, inadvertently or knowingly, votes to confer a power upon any other branch of the Government where the obligation of the execution of that power is imposed upon the legislative body of which he may be a member.

The determination of whether a bill is conformable to the Constitution and within the power of the Congress to enact into a law is necessarily addressed to the legislative body in which it is pending. The responsibility of determining whether a bill or any provision of it is within the jurisdiction of the Congress to legislate upon the subject matter of the bill is upon the individuals composing the Congress. That responsibility can not be shifted or avoided by enacting a bill into a law and forcing some interested citizen to challenge its constitutionality, and thereby imposing upon the courts of the country the duty of determining its validity.

The presumption is always indulged that the Congress has acted within the powers conferred by the Constitution in the enacting of statutes; and the executive officers of the Government, acting on that presumption, proceed with their enforcement and continue in the process of their enforcement until their validity is challenged by some citizen and their invalidity declared by the courts.

The presumption indulged by the executive officers that the Congress has not exceeded the powers granted to it by the Constitution is also indulged by the courts, and the burden is upon the citizen challenging the validity of the enactment of demonstrating its unconstitutionality beyond a reasonable doubt.

This burden should not be imposed upon the citizen in order that he may enjoy the rights and privileges secured to him by the Constitution, and this burden would never be imposed if the Members of the Congress would discharge the solemn obligation of seeing that all laws enacted by the Congress are within the grants of power vested by the Constitution. And that obligation would doubtless be fulfilled if Members of the Congress would forget the political advantages which may accrue to their party by the enactment of unconstitutional statutes.

A no more striking example of this could be found than in the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill here under discussion.

No political party in the Congress would have dared to confer the powers upon the Executive of this Nation attempted to be conferred by that act had it not been conceived that the Executive could exercise those powers to promote the political supremacy of the party to which he belongs.

No greater weapon could have been placed in his hands to compel the industrial and manufacturing interests of this country to give allegiance to the policies of the party of which the Executive is the head and to aid in the continuation of that party in power, and no more powerful weapon could have been given the Executive to dominate the economic conditions of the country.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave given to extend my remarks, the following data is submitted. It consists of a statement concerning the oil rights in the Red River bed controversy made by Hon. Thomas P. Gore on January 24, 1923, and is inserted at his suggestion:

STATEMENT OF HON. THOMAS P. GORE.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to thank the committee for the courtesy shown me in having this called meeting, and in exchange for the courtesy I wish to tender you my sympathy. It seems as if the hearings on this Red River question are to be as perpetual as the brook in the poem. So far as I am concerned, I will try to abbreviate my part in the discussion.

I am sorry not to have been here yesterday. I understand that on yesterday a representative of the State of Oklahoma appeared before the committee and pressed the proposition that these entire lands, that the entire south half of Red River from the Arkansas line to the one hundredth meridian, be granted outright to the State of Oklahoma. It is hardly necessary for me to say, Mr. Chairman, that any grant of land which the General Government might make to the State of Oklahoma which did not impair the equitable claims of these pioneers would be a source of great satisfaction to me.

I would like to see the entire strip, the entire south half of Red River, top and bottom, granted to Oklahoma, reserving, of course, the equities which, in my judgment, have accrued, in view of the circumstances, in behalf of men who discovered this oil field. Neither I nor those whom I represent have taken the initiative in any effort to secure a grant to Oklahoma for these reasons. I have undertaken to proceed in a practical way. I have undertaken to place myself in the situation of this committee, to make a survey first of the things it was possible for you to do, then to make a choice among the possibilities and a choice based upon the general and established policy of the United States in dealing with oil and gas lands of this character.

I realize that if Congress should grant this oil field to Oklahoma, Montana, Wyoming, and California would immediately not only insist but demand that the oil fields within their borders be granted to their respective Commonwealths.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. I am sorry you were not here yesterday. In order that the record may portray the true facts, I want to say that Montana and these other States would not have a right to come in on the same grounds as Oklahoma, because we ask for this land upon the authority of the land grants of 1862 and 1866, which have been satisfied so far as the States you name are concerned.

Mr. GORE. I appreciate that.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. They could not come in on the same ground.

Mr. GORE. I appreciate that, and also the fact that the General Government has dealt rather generously with the State of Oklahoma in respect to lands. It has treated the State and the institutions of the State pretty generously, notwithstanding that the General Government is in default to the State of Oklahoma with respect to the lands granted in the Morrill Act. I hope that the General Government will yet find ways and means to fulfill that unredeemed obligation. If the opportunity should arise, so far as might lie within my power, I would contribute to the redemption of that pledge which has not been made good and which I would rejoice to see made good in the future; but, notwithstanding that fact, I would still doubt the forbearance of Montana, Wyoming, and California in the event the proposition were made to convey this oil field to the State of Oklahoma.

I would doubt if they would find themselves possessed of sufficient forbearance not to venture a similar request in behalf of their Commonwealths. Now, I do not know what is twinkling in the eye of Judge RAKER there, but he is a more moderate man than I imagine if he did not take occasion to intimate on that occasion that California would not be adverse to receiving the oil fields situated within her borders.

It has occurred to me that possibly the State might ask for the royalties. Mr. Chairman, whether the United States leases these lands or grants them to Oklahoma to lease away, a royalty would be reserved in behalf of the United States in case the United States leased this land. If granted to Oklahoma and Oklahoma leased the lands, a royalty would be reserved to the State of Oklahoma. Assuming that you take care of the pioneers in either contingency, all that Oklahoma would receive would be the royalties accruing from the lands claimed by these pioneers, so that the transfer of the entire estate to Oklahoma, allowing Oklahoma to lease the lands, reserving a royalty would not really speed her on her way very far. In other words, the practical results would be the same, because I should favor no scheme for disposing of this land either by the General or the State Government which did not guard and recognize the rights of those men who took the chance and developed the presence of this hidden treasure.

Mr. Chairman, I have assumed that this committee in meeting this exceptional situation would as far as possible pursue, adopt, and apply the general and established policy of the United States. These circumstances are exceptional. They must therefore be dealt with in an exceptional way, and by special or relief legislation, but in enacting relief legislation I assume that the committee will, as far as possible, adapt and apply the general policy of the Government to the peculiar circumstances of this case.

When these lands were located in December, 1918, and January, 1919, the general mining laws of the United States did apply to the public domain. It was an ancient policy. It had been the policy of the Government for more than half a century. That policy was displaced in February, 1920, displaced by the leasing act so far as oil and gas deposits are concerned. The leasing act was the result of a great deal of deliberation and it embodied a compromise of various conflicting interests, but it was a matured policy. So far as I know the act has worked well. It has justified and vindicated the wisdom of the men who prepared it and the men who enacted it.

I have assumed that the committee in meeting this emergency would apply the provisions of the leasing act to these exceptional circumstances as far as that can be done in working out practical justice.

Under the leasing act a royalty is reserved to the United States, and under the leasing act the lessees are obligated, of course, to pay a royalty to the Government of the United States.

Now, I assume that that characteristic will attend any relief legislation which may be enacted to meet this situation. Nothing but the Supreme Court of the United States would have convinced me, Mr. Chairman, that the leasing act did not apply to the south half of Red River. The first section is general in its terms. It contains an express exception, which would indicate that everything that was not excepted out of its operation was included within its operation, but the Supreme Court has held otherwise.

The leasing act contains several relief sections, sections 18, 18a, 19, and 37. Section 37 provided that anyone having a valid mineral claim existent at the date of the act could pursue the claim to patent. Now, mark you, it used the expression "valid claim." That presupposed that the land in question was subject to the mining laws, and it presupposed that the claimant had complied with the requirements of the mining law, and having done that he was entitled to a patent. Relief under section 37 of the leasing act turned on the character of the claim.

Section 19 was a relief section, somewhat similar to section 37, except that the relief granted under 19 did not turn on the character of the claim but turned on the character of the claimant. It provided that any bona fide claimant or occupant of oil and gas lands under a claim—not under a valid claim, but under a claim—initiated prior to October 1, 1919, who had complied with certain conditions and requirements, being in the main, of course, conditions stipulated in the general mining laws, should be entitled to relief in the form of a permit or lease.

I believe that the chairman of this committee and Mr. RAKER both had much to do with the drafting of the leasing act—I think I have seen their fingerprints on that measure. I have wondered what section 19 was inserted for if it means the same as section 37, and under the construction of the Supreme Court it seems to grant relief to no one who can not obtain relief under section 37, and I assume that no man would seek relief under a lease where he was entitled under the law to a patent. Now, section 19 reads as if it were drawn to meet exactly this emergency, and I take it this committee will apply section 19 to this situation as far as that can be done. The two measures, one introduced by the chairman and one introduced by Mr. SANDERS, fall within the general boundaries and purview of the leasing act. The spirit and purpose and policy of that act are embodied in those measures.

Whatever legislation you enact will, of course, define the conditions and fix the standard which must have been conformed to by the claimants who are to be entitled to relief. In fixing these conditions and circumstances the committe will, of course, add as one of the conditions the presence of good faith.

Now, of course, there will be contests, Mr. Chairman, arising under this legislation, whatever you enact. There will be claimants insisting that they did in good faith comply with the conditions and that they enjoy priority of right.

A good deal has been said here during the course of the hearing with respect to the detailed circumstances and evidence tending to establish priority in behalf of one claimant as against another. As I view the situation those details are not essentially material at this time. You will prescribe the conditions, fix the standard. The duty of determining whether a given claimant qualifies under those conditions and standards must be devolved upon an administrative officer of the Government. The committee is not equipped for that sort of work. It is a quasi-judicial duty, which must in the nature of things be devolved on some official of the Government. The duty will, of course, be devolved upon the Secretary of the Interior. The thing now is to secure relief legislation based upon sound public policy, which makes provision for the equities of the case, and when the committee has done that it has discharged its duty, and we must, of course, assume that the Secretary of the Interior will then discharge the duties devolving upon him.

The necessity for legislation in behalf of these claimants depends upon their claim that they acted in good faith. Those who did not act in good faith can not appeal to you for consideration. Judge Dyar made his entire protest turn upon the point of good faith and he took the position that under the circumstances which obtain in this controversy no one could have acted in good faith. He claims that the circumstances negative the presence or the possibility of good faith.

The chairman read authorities into the record which stripped the issues down to a clear-cut point, so that it can be seen of all men, and it is clear that good faith can be exhibited where there is an adverse claim or an adverse claimant. Judge Dyar assented to the general propositions laid down by the chairman or, rather, laid down in the authorities cited by the chairman, with two qualifications. First, he insisted that the rule is that the party alleging good faith must have used extreme caution and exercised due diligence. Now, I agree with the judge. His first qualification is well founded. That is the law. The other qualification was that in the cases cited by the chairman those alleging good faith were seeking to recover improvements or the value of improvements, and that no claim was set up for the substance of the property and, therefore, the authorities did not constitute precedents in a case where a claimant was seeking the substance of the property itself. Now, I can not agree with Judge Dyar in the application of that rule. He was reasoning by analogy, and no method of reasoning is so dangerous as that of analogy, because there may be an essential difference, a fundamental difference, in the facts and circumstances of the case. The difference may be latent; but if there is a fundamental difference, of course any analogy fails.

I submit that in the existing situation the analogy suggested by Judge Dyar utterly fails. No individual who owns land ever blazes forth to the world that if the people will come and find valuable mineral deposits on his premises the mineral deposits shall be theirs for a song. That is never done, but the United States for more than half a century has said to all men, to all men who could qualify, to all citizens of the United States, without regard to age, color, or sex, "Find a mineral deposit of value anywhere on the public domain and that deposit is yours"—the substance, not the shadow—"the substance is yours for a nominal consideration." That is the purpose of the policy and that is the title of the act. The act of May 10, 1872, was entitled "An act to promote the development of the mineral resources of the United States." Judge Pitney in a recent case said it held forth an invitation to all men and the promise of a generous reward to those who accepted the invitation.

These men accepted the invitation, and Attorney General Williams, the year that measure was enacted, rendered an opinion saying it ought to be liberally construed in order to effectuate the policy of the law.

The object of the mining laws of the United States has been to dispose of the substance, to dispose of the minerals, I believe, under a placer mining claim at $2.50 an acre and under a lode claim, I believe, at $5 an acre. Judge Raker will correct me if that is not right. That is the law and it has been a wise policy. It has been justified by a progress which has no parallel in the annals of the race. It is not analogous to a private individual, who generally observes the ancient rule, the good old plan, "Let him get who has the power and let him keep who can." So the analogy fails altogether.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to good faith, I think this distinction ought to be made. It is not necessary for these claimants to make a showing of good faith before this committee which would justify you in granting them a lease or leases to these lands, if you were vested with authority to do that. Your function, as I conceive it, is to consider the circumstances of the case; to consider the showing of good faith which they did make; it is your duty, as I conceive it, to determine whether or not an executive officer of this Government ought to be vested with the power and charged with the duty of making a thorough and judicial investigation, weighing the evidence, measuring the situation, dealing with these men in the light of our history and determining whether or not they used such good faith and did such development as would entitle them to a lease, a lease that would be in harmony with our public policy. That is the duty of the committee, as I understand it, with respect to good faith.

What showing have these claimants made in regard to good faith? I think they have made such a showing; they have made such a showing as warrants you in commissioning some one to make a thoroughgoing investigation of the facts and equities in the premises, and to render judgment in accordance with such findings.

It is my own belief that my client, Mr. Testerman, has made such a showing of good faith as will justify you gentlemen in the pursuit of such a policy. Now, what did he do? Tom Testerman is a plain, practical man; he is one of the men who has made Oklahoma what it is; he has builded better than those who built palaces; he has helped to build a Commonwealth and to establish a seat of civilization, than which there is no greater service to this country or to the people of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Greer County case was a matter of common knowledge; it excited a great deal of interest while it was pending, and it was known to all men that the United States won the suit; it was known of all men that the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the south bank of Red River was the southern boundary of Oklahoma and that the south bank of Red River was the northern boundary of Texas. Everybody knew that, and Tom Testerman took the word of the Supreme Court in good earnest when it said so. As I suggested before, the Supreme Court did not attach to that opinion the statement that its judgment was not a joke. It did not say, "Know all men by these presents that the south bank of Red River is the north bank of Texas, and anybody who crosses it is a transgressor." But it said that the south bank was the boundary between the two jurisdictions. That was known to Tom Testerman and known to other men.

Now, when the oil interests excited Wichita County, men's eyes naturally began to search for lands of the United States which might be available. But Tom Testerman did not rush in where angels fear to tread. He made as thorough an investigation and survey as his circumstances would allow him to make, and this must be kept in mind: He and his conduct must not be judged in the light of the three recent opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is now easy to say that the south half of Red River belongs to the United States and that it was not subject to the mining laws of the United States. The child at its mother's knees knows that now. But you must judge Tom Testerman, his motives and his conduct, under the circumstances as they were at that time.

In judging of the conduct and the genius of Christopher Columbus we do not reach that judgment in the light of present-day science. We have to travel back to August, 1492, and make ourselves denizens of that age as well as denizens of the Old World, and we must judge of his motives, his conduct, his genius, and his greatness by the knowledge of mankind at the hour he set sail. In judging the conduct of Washington and his compatriots we do not judge them in the light of twentieth-century civilization. Those men looked at their situation and at their prospects through the midnight gloom of Valley Forge, and looking through that gloom they could not catch sight of the splendors which have since come upon us and our country.

Tom Testerman was a layman, a practical man. He believed that the south half of Red River belonged to the United States because Oklahoma went to the south bank of the river and because the Indian treaties and the lands that were granted under them, as well as the act opening the lands to settlement, stopped at the middle line of Red River. It required no impulse of genius to reach the conclusion that that land belonged to the United States. But he did not go on his mere assumption. He was a member of the State senate at the time and had served several terms in the State legislature. He was an intimate friend of Governor Williams, at that time Governor of Oklahoma, but who had been chief justice of our State and is now an ornament to the Federal bench. He went to Governor Williams and told him that he had taken an oath as governor to execute the laws of Oklahoma throughout the territorial extent of Oklahoma, and he asked him how far he executed the laws of Oklahoma in Red River. The governor told him he executed the laws of Oklahoma to the south bank of Red River. Now, then, an ordinary farmer had a right to attach some weight to the opinion of the former chief justice of our State.

He did not stop there. He found that the companies which owned the toll bridges across Red River paid taxes on the entire bridge to the counties in Oklahoma where they were situated. Commonwealths are rather alert in collecting all the taxes that are coming to them. It would not have been allowed to go unchallenged if it were not a matter of common knowledge, the fact that the south half of Red River was within the jurisdiction of Oklahoma.

He did not stop there. He found that the railroads sold tickets in Oklahoma marked to the south bank of the river. They were required to make returns as to their gross earnings to the State, and they counted as a part of their earnings the fares to the south bank of the river. They were allowed in Texas and in Oklahoma to issue bonds based on their mileage. The Oklahoma railroads based their bonds on the mileage to the south bank and the Texas railroads also based their bonds on their mileage to the south bank. We had a 2-cent fare in Oklahoma and a 3-cent fare in Texas. The railroads were contesting the 2-cent fare on the ground that it was confiscatory, yet they sold tickets at 2 cents a mile to the south bank of Red River. Not only that, but they placed markers at the bridges on the south bank, "Texas and Oklahoma," in order that he who runs might read. It was advertised to the world that the south bank was the boundary, and Tom Testerman knew that because he took the trouble to find it out. I believe there was an opinion by the criminal court sustaining the jurisdiction of Oklahoma to the south bank, but I am not prepared to give the citation or style of the case. I have been so informed.

Tom Testerman is of that mold; he is a sort of David Crockett, a Red River and made inquiries. Before he set foot on the south half of Red River he made an inquiry of Mr. Aynesworth, an attorney in the Greer County case, and asked him where the south boundary of Oklahoma was, and he told him it was the south bank of Red River, and advised him that the south half of the river was the property of the United States. He has since embodied that opinion in an affidavit.

Testerman did not stop there. Before he spent any money in the development of these claims he went to the tax assessor of Wichita County and inquired of him as to what was the north boundary of Wichita County—which was also the north boundary of Texas—and the assessor of Wichita County, who had been assessor for 2 years and deputy for 10 years preceding, advised him in an affidavit that under the direction of the county judge and county commissioners of Wichita County he assessed property to the south bank of Red River and no farther. He assessed the property in that county for taxation. We have here the affidavit of ex-Sheriff Hawkins, and he gave testimony to the same effect; that his jurisdiction extended to the south bank of Red River and that the jurisdiction of the officials of Cotton County, Okla., came down to the south bank of Red River.

Now, I ought to say in fairness, Mr. Chairman, that several of these men, particularly those in office, recanted when the fight waxed furious. When the election drew near they saw a light, and they changed their conscientious convictions. I say that for whatever it may be worth, and whether they were right or wrong, Mr. Chairman, in their first affidavits or in their second affidavits. Tom Testerman may have a wizard's eye in searching out the treasures of this earth, but he had no such talent in searching the minds of men and forecasting that they would revoke or renounce their oaths in the future. He could not tell that these officials, trusted by their fellow citizens, would make different affidavits in the future. When he was contemplating the development of the south half of Red River he had to go by the lights as they were shining at the time; he could not draw aside the veil of futurity.

He did not stop there, Mr. Chairman. He consulted officials in Oklahoma, he consulted officials in Texas, and he examined the method of paying taxes. But he did not stop there. He went to an official of the Federal Government and he ascertained that the Federal enforcement officer, charged with the duty of arresting those who were introducing whisky into Oklahoma—Wichita County was wet and Oklahoma was dry—would arrest them for introducing whisky into Oklahoma the moment the wheels rolled off the green grass onto the bed of Red River, and if he arrested them before the wheels rolled off the green grass he did not charge them with introduction, but with conspiracy to introduce.

I am showing you the pains Tom Testerman took not to become a trespasser upon the public lands of his country. He did not stop there. He went to a prominent attorney in our State, one who had served as a member of the supreme court commission, and he had Judge Rummons prepare an opinion as to whether or not the south half of Red River belonged to the United States, whether or not it could be acquired under the mining laws, and, if acquired, whether rights could be assigned. Judge Rummons reported to him that the lands were public lands belonging to the United States; that they were subject to the mining laws and that rights so initiated could be assigned.

Now, he had the right to act under all these circumstances, but he was not willing to do that. He took precaution; he used "extreme caution and due diligence," and he paid $1,000 for an opinion at the hands of Judge Rummons which advised him that these were Government lands and subject to the mineral laws.

But he did not stop with that. Tom Testerman knew nothing about the mining laws. I was talking with him the other day, and he said he never heard of the placer mining laws and knew nothing about them; that he had heard that when the Government owned lands that were valuable for minerals a citizen of the United States could acquire them under the laws of the land, and he took this extreme precaution. He had Judge Rummons go with him to Wichita Falls and to Red River; he had this distinguished lawyer prepare the notices, prepare the certificates of location, and advise him so that he would not sin against the laws of the land. He took those precautions, and what more could he do?

It has been intimated here that Tom Testerman, this rough-and-ready old frontiersman, ought to have investigated the case of Lenertz against Malloy. Tom Testerman never heard of that case, and if he had read it he probably would not have been able to decipher the technicalities of it. It is a sound decision; I do not challenge it, but it is inapplicable, as Colonel Roote so clearly demonstrated. I do not assent to the proposition that it was incumbent upon Tom Testerman to investigate the authorities on which Judge Rummons rested his opinion. He was not qualified to do it.

He remarked to me the other day that if Judge Rummons wanted somebody to pass judgment on a herd of cattle or a drove of mules he would probably have consulted him, but when it came to a question of law, constitutional rights, or the interpretation of statutes he was bound to be governed by others. He had no authoritative judgment of his own in the premises, but it seems to me he did all that could be required of a prudent man. He showed good faith.

I shall not embark upon an investigation of the authorities upon which Judge Rummons rested his opinion, because I can not think it material and I can not think this man was charged with any obligation to make such an independent investigation. However, there is one point to which I might advert, and it is with respect to the claim of the Government as to the Plumb amendment, attached to the Indian appropriation bill of March 3, 1891, which declared that all the lands in Oklahoma should be declared agricultural lands and that proof of their nonmineral character should not be a condition precedent to final entry. That is relied upon to take this strip of land out of the operation of the general mining laws, because the general mining laws are universal in their terms.

The Plumb amendment was attached to the Indian appropriation bill which carried a rider opening lands to settlement in five different States and Territories, and it provided for the opening of three different reservations to settlement in Oklahoma. Section 16, to which the Plumb amendment is attached, is not only one section; it is one sentence, and this Plumb amendment is embodied in a proviso. As you know, Judge Storey said that a proviso to a statute will be strictly construed to cover only the exception intended, and that has almost been consecrated into a maxim of the law. Not only is it one sentence, but that proviso contained three distinct propositions. One fixed the price of the land and the other preserved the rights of ex-Union soldiers and sailors. Senator Plumb kicked this in on the floor of the Senate, and he told why. Judge Riter contends—and is unfortunately supported by the Supreme Court—that this agriculturalized all of Oklahoma and repealed the mining laws of Oklahoma.

Mr. DYAR. No; it did not say that; it said as the mining laws never did apply they never had to be repealed.

Mr. GORE. I believe they did say that, but they said that if this had applied it would have modified it. I believe they did say that. Now, it is a controverted question as to whether the mining laws ever applied here. They applied in the Red River in Arkansas and Louisiana, and on the Arkansas River and elsewhere; everywhere except at this particular point. Now, I do not think the Plumb amendment can be relied on, because Senator Plumb never intended that it should be. He made a speech on this amendment and he intended that it should apply to the three reservations then being opened and said so. He not only said that, but he said, "There are mineral lands in the future State of Oklahoma; there is coal, gold, silver, zinc, and lead, but in Oklahoma as it is now"—and only five counties were involved—"and as it will be when these reservations are opened there are no mineral lands, but," he said, "under the ruling of the Interior Department these homesteaders are required to file a nonmineral affidavit, and that puts an honest homesteader to no end of trouble." That was all it was intended to do, and it could only apply to agricultural lands. The south half of Red River is, perhaps, one portion of the earth's surface which never was agricultural land, certainly not in the memory of man. The Interior Department issued a circular on July 1, 1918, before these entries were made in December, showing that there was not an acre of public land in Cotton County or Tillman County, Okla., where this strip is situated. The Government did not know it owned this strip, and if it did had paid no heed to it.

My own theory is that this strip was left out through oversight. Judge Dyar has presented a theory which, I think, is more ingenious than practical—that this little strip was left there as a sort of Chinese wall between the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians and the people of Texas. Let us assume that that theory is the fact and that that strip of land would have kept them apart and that it did keep them apart. A theory that does not account for all the facts is not a sound theory, Mr. Chairman. When the Government bought this reservation from the Comanches, and when the Government opened it to settle to white men, this theory of Judge Dyar's had no application. At that time there was not any necessity for having this little strip of sand between the white people of Oklahoma and the white people of Texas. Of course, they may have had unwonted foresight and may have foreseen the controversy that arose when the rangers came down. But that theory does not account for leaving this strip out when this country was opened to settlement, and there is only one explanation which attributes reflection or judgment to the Congress, and that is that it was either an oversight—and that impeaches them on the ground of negligence—or that they expressly applied the mineral laws to this reservation down to the middle of the main stream of Red River, and Congress undoubtedly thought that the south half was already within the purview of the general mining laws and that there was no necessity of expressly saying so. Now, that gives rationality to the acts of Congress and to the legislation.

Of course, the big pasture was situated here, and that was subsequently opened, but the mining laws were not applied to that pasture, because it belonged to the Indians, all the top and all the bottom.

The Government sold it as trustee for the Indians and sold all the top and all the bottom (surface and subsurface) and gave the Indians all the proceeds. It would have been bad faith to have applied the mining laws to the Indian lands, but undoubtedly when Congress extended the mining laws to the north half of Red River they must have assumed that the mining laws applied to the south half. However, we are here with this land adjudged to be land of the United States and finally adjudged not to be subject to the mining laws; we are here with no legal rights. We are here as suppliant American citizens standing upon our equities, and I say that in no cringing sense, as you gentlemen appreciate. We stand here appealing to your consciences and to your judgments for such relief as the circumstances may warrant in the premises.

Now, then, what did Tom Testerman do after making these investigations and after obtaining the opinion of Judge Rummons that the south half of Red River was the property of the United States and subject to the mining laws? What did he do? He undertook, in accordance with Judge Rummons's advice, to locate placer mineral claims, and he surveyed the claims along the line where the green grass kisses the yellow sand. He kept off of the flood plain. He did not want to take any chances; he did not want to be a trespasser on land within the jurisdiction of Texas; he kept on land that belonged to the Government and where he thought he had a right to go or where he had the right to think he had a right to go. He surveyed his claims from the green grass on the south side, from the cut bank, which the Supreme Court decides to be the boundary. He surveyed his claims from that line to the medial line of the stream; he did not cross the thread of the stream to the north, where it belonged to the riparian owners on the north bank, and he did not cross the green grass on the south, where he thought it might belong to the State of Texas. He has four claims there of 640 acres. The eastern claim is longer north and south that the most westerly claim, because it is farther from the green grass to the thread of the stream at the east end than at the west, and he kept his claims away from the green grass on the Texas side. Was that the conduct of a reckless man? Was that the conduct of a man acting in bad faith? Was that the behavior of a trespasser? Was that the behavior of a man who was disregarding the rights of others? He was acting upon the advice of his attorney and in the light of the circumstances as he had been able to ascertain them.

Tom Testerman—and I say this because it is uncontroverted, and because I do not wish to embark on controverted points—was the first white man to go in this oil field in Red River. That is undisputed. There is no controversy about that. He went in on the 8th day of December, 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by saying he went in there on that date?

Mr. GORE. That is the date he staked his claims.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean located them?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; he located them on that date.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose he was there before that time looking over the ground?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; undoubtedly he had looked over the situation and decided, I suppose, where would be the likeliest place for development. I mean that he located his claims under the placer mining laws, or attempted to, on December 8, 1918. Soon after that he became involved in a controversy with other claimants, but he did not resort to any shotgun remedies. He went into the courts of his country. In January, after he located his claims in December, he went into the district court of Cotton County and made an application for a restraining order to restrain certain other parties from trespassing upon the property he had located. The temporary order was granted in January and was made permanent in August, on the ground that the land belonged to the United States and was subject to placer mining entry. That was the judgment of the court.

He sought judicial protection; he sought judicial relief, and he stood on the judgment of the court that this was Government land and was subject to placer claims, this in addition to the other precautions, because this came on subsequent to his location. Later on he drove into the thistle brake with a caterpillar tractor and broke down the thistles and brush, spudded in in May, I believe it was, struck sand on the 13th day of August, swabbed his well on the 20th and 21st, made a trial run of the oil on the 22d day of August, 1919, went into Wichita Falls about 6 o'clock, and at 8.30 was served with an injunction issued out of the district court of Travis County, Tex., where Austin is located, enjoining him not to go on the property to do any development work or anything else. The district court of Travis County, Tex., took jurisdiction of his person, because he was in Texas, took jurisdiction of property situated outside the State of Texas, took jurisdiction of property that belonged to the United States of America, and exercised jurisdiction outside the domain of Texas, where it had no more authority than it would have had in the valley of the Nile. As I say, the trial run was made——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). What do you mean by the trial run?

Mr. GORE. To see whether there was oil in the well. You see, he had provided a tank and made a run of the oil on the 22d day of August. He said to himself that "it was well done," and then this injunction was served. Afterward they took him to court for contempt and fined him $100 and put him in jail for violating the order of the court, which had, however, no validity, no more than it would have had in any foreign land. He was in Austin, Tex., in durance vile. His attorney phoned the attorney general of Oklahoma that a citizen of Oklahoma was imprisoned in Texas for contempt of a court that had no jurisdiction over his acts or his property. The attorney general phoned his attorney to meet him in the city of Washington; they met in Washington and made application to bring the suit, the case of Oklahoma against Texas. That is the origin of this suit, and it grew out of the unlawful imprisonment of Tom Testerman. As I say, he is a frontiersman and has braved many dangers, but he is not familiar with all these technicalities of the law.

What has happened in the course of the litigation is known to the gentlemen of the committee. I insist he acted in good faith, believing he had a right to go on the property, and he certainly did not damage the property; he revealed to the United States that it had a very large treasure there which ought to be and which will be—if not dissipated by the receiver—a source of revenue to the United States, and it ought to be a source of revenue to the man who took the chances. He did not know when he spent $25,000 in putting down one of these wells whether it would be a dry hole or not; he took the chance. Tom Testerman stands well amongst his neighbors. He collected money from 80 of his neighbors; they raised $120,000 and more to do this development work. They had faith in his character as a man; they had faith in his judgment and they made their contribution or investment, and he expended one hundred and twenty-odd thousand dollars in teaching the Government of the United States that this land was a treasure house. I will not say the land that God forgot, because He dowered it with a treasure more precious than wedges of silver, but it seems to have been land, according to Judge Dyar and the Supreme Court, that Congress forgot. However, I think Congress assumed that it was within the mineral laws, otherwise it would have applied the mineral laws to the south half of the river.

Now, gentlemen, we are not asking you to do a strange thing; we are not asking you to do anything new under the sun, and you can not go very far astray when you tread the beaten path, when the light of precedent guides you. This has often been done in the past. I need not do more than refer to it, because it has been amply referred to before, but when the Secretary of the Interior found that building stone was not subject to placer entry what did Congress do? Inspired by a spirit of justice and guided by the public policy of this country, it immediately passed a relief measure under which men who had in good faith located placer mining claims could pursue them to patent. It did not stipulate good faith, as I remember, in allowing them to pursue those claims to patent. I have read the reports in the House and the Senate, and the reason set forth in the Senate report was that these men had, in good faith, made their investments; that property rights had attached, or had been supposed to attach, and that it would work injury and injustice if Congress did not relieve those who had in good faith made these locations. There was not any hesitation about it; there was not any debate about it.

Later on, as has been suggested, it was ruled by the Secretary of the Interior that oil was not a mineral. Did Congress hesitate about relieving those men who ventured their fortunes in an effort to develop the oil lands of the West? No. Congress immediately enacted relief legislation. There was not any opposition to it; there was not any quibbling about it; and there was not any cheeseparing about it. Congress met the occasion and took care of the men who were building up this country.

When the leasing act was passed the gentlemen who sit at this board, and whose counsel contributed, may I say, to the wisdom of that measure, provided relief legislation in four sections of that act. There may have been differences as to the measure of relief, but I venture to say that in the confidences of your committee meetings there was never any dispute about granting relief to men who acted in good faith, however opinions may have differed as to the measure and character of relief.

In the Greer County case the homesteaders were protected in their claims, whether they were contested or not. That does not go to the vitals of it. The question is that a man who is in possession of a claim and who has acted in good faith ought to be relieved. And, Mr. Chairman, the pioneers, the men who made America what it is, have never appealed in vain to the Congress of their country for relief when they have acted in good faith and have been mistaken as to the technicalities of the law. The men who have made America were not versed in legal technicalities, but they have been versed in the ways and means of building up here the greatest civilization ever known. They know how to do that; they have done it in a rough and ready way, but they have never stood with one foot upon the bank of the Rubicon and debated whether or not they had a technical right, and they entered the promised land when they knew the general policy was an invitation.

Tom Testerman is of that mold; he is a sort of David Crockett, a man who, if called on, would brave any dangers and protect himself as a she tiger protects her young. Now, the men who have redeemed this country from the wilderness, the men who have subdued the forests, who have conquered the mountains, who have built for themselves a home by the side of the eagles and who have carried our flag and our institutions from the eastern to the western seas were not jurists; they were not Marshalls or Storys, but they knew how to do things, how to meet situations, how to carry forward the vanguard of civilization, and how to make America the greatest land the sun shines upon. Tom Testerman is of that mold, and I do not believe he will appeal in vain to the Congress of the United States for a reasonable measure of relief under the circumstances as they have been proven to this committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there be any questions, I shall be very glad to answer them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Mr. Testerman going to testify?

Mr. GORE. I think not; no, sir. Of course, he is at the disposal of the committee, but my own view, Mr. Chairman, was that it was really wise to keep out of this record the testimony which bears solely upon disputes between different claimants. Of course, any testimony and evidence that may be necessary to enable the committee to establish the conditions and requirements which these men should have met I think would be material, but I think the issues between the different claimants, the Burk Divide people, the Denson people, the Wyoming people, or the Sparks people, ought to be referred to a single forum.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you think about the language in section 18 of the leasing act, to which I have referred several times, the language being:

"In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them, as shall be deemed just."

That language to be in lieu of the language granting priority rights.

Mr. GORE. Of course, I realize that the language you have just read is the result of a great deal of thought and research, and fixes a policy, and as far as the terms of the leasing act can apply to these circumstances, I think they ought to apply. I assume, and as far as I am concerned I have no doubt, that the claimant who shows that he has conformed to the conditions which you prescribe in this act and has complied with those conditions in good faith will have a seniority right and that such a claim will control in any decision that is made.

The CHAIRMAN. They have had cases under the oil leasing act in which they have applied this language, and I understand from the Interior Department that they give consideration to priority, although they do not make it wholly controlling, depending upon the particular equities of the case before them.

Mr. GORE. Other claimants are more concerned about the language of the bill as drawn than we are, and I have no objection to the language remaining as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. What other claims conflict with Mr. Testerman's claims?

Mr. GORE. The principal contest is on the part of those who claim on the Texas side. I think there is, perhaps, a 40-acre conflict with one of the placer claimants, but that turns not on the question of priority but on whether the lines of the congressional survey should have been extended south.

The CHAIRMAN. On what date did Mr. Testerman bring in his well?

Mr. GORE. He struck the sand on the 13th of August, although he spudded in in May, I think it was; he struck the sand on the 13th day of August.

The CHAIRMAN. When was the injunction served on him?

Mr. GORE. He swabbed his well on the 21st and made his trial run on the 22d and was served with the injunction that evening at 8.30.

The CHAIRMAN. And has not had possession since?

Mr. GORE. I think he did assert a little possession between that and the time he got into jail, or, I mean, at the time he was fined.

Mr. TESTERMAN. The Cotton County officers took charge of it on the 7th day of October under the receivership.

Mr. GORE. Then he went back on the premises, under the protection, as he thought, and authority of the court. Then he was put off by the rangers.

The CHAIRMAN. He had four claims?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they named?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What are their names?

Mr. GORE. The western claim is the Border Line; the next is the Tiger, then the Lucky Spot—and I might say that Lucky Spot is a misnomer—and Black Jack.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they contiguous?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; and they comprise 640 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he putting down any other wells when the injunction was served?

Mr. TESTERMAN. When the injunction was served I had two drilling rigs run down and just completed; for the fourth well I had a derrick built, and for the fifth well I had a stand of piling built. Those five wells are on the four claims, however.

The CHAIRMAN. You were operating on each claim?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When the injunction was served?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Actually operating upon the claims?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How many wells did you put down altogether?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Five wells in the river bed.

The CHAIRMAN. To oil sand?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Well, I got very light sand south of that, 9 miles away. I drilled two wells, commencing one in December, 1918, and commencing the other one in January, 1919, and I completed those wells in March, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you instructed that it was necessary to be working on these claims?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes; I was instructed that it was necessary to put down a well on each claim. That was the instruction I received.

The CHAIRMAN. Each claim was treated as a separate unit?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir. However, I might say that the locators of the claims assigned their rights to what we call the Mellish Association and all became interested in the association. Now, when it came to development we got into a situation where a bunch of us were not able to pay our part, so that a number of the other men put in more money, and then we made it into a joint-stock association.

The CHAIRMAN. They speak of you locating four claims; of course, you could not do that?

Mr. TESTERMAN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. And your other friends did that?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, do you happen to know how many wells are now down in the property in question?

Mr. GORE. Do you mean in the river bed?

The CHAIRMAN. In the hands of the receiver.

Mr. TESTERMAN. I could make a guess about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know, Mr. Dyar?

Mr. DYAR. Yesterday I submitted a statement from the receiver, and I believe I read it into the record, but I believe I was interrupted before I completed the full statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you put that into the record?

Mr. DYAR. Yes.

Mr. TESTERMAN. There are two hundred and some odd wells, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what the present production is of the wells now in the hands of the receiver?

Mr. GORE. No; but I understand that some time ago there was a production of 600 barrels a day. That has been some months ago and undoubtedly the production has run down. The last time I consulted the receiver's report I think it showed that he had taken out something like $10,000,000 worth of oil and disposed of it, and that the expenses and disbursements have been something like $8,000,000.

Now, that brings up another point which I think is very important. It seems to me this is an emergency that should be met immediately, not merely on account of these claimants but on account of the Government itself, because under the decision of the Supreme Court this land will have to be cared for when the receiver is discharged. It is valuable property and I think the duty devolves on the Government of providing some sort of administration of it. I know of no law which would authorize its administration and certainly there is no appropriation that could be used for its development or for its administration. That being so, it seems to me it is an emergency which justifies the gentlemen of the committee in resorting to a rule for the passage of this legislation in order to protect the Government's interests.

The CHAIRMAN. What is oil now worth down there?

Mr. GORE. I understand that oil has recently advanced.

Mr. TESTERMAN. It is $2.25 at this time. There is a premium of 25 cents on oil having a gravity of 38 and above.

Mr. GORE. This is a good character of oil. There is one other point. Mr. Testerman has in this vicinity 640 acres and this bill provides for 480 acres. Now, I would like to see that raised for two reasons. First, for the very plain reason that Mr. Testerman is interested in 640 acres, and, I think, interested in a way that entitled him to relief. That is one point. The other is that the smallest maximum which has ever been fixed in any legislation, so far as I can recall, is 640 acres. You will remember that section 17 of the leasing act provides for 640 acres and section 19 provides for a much greater number, and in some instances it is practically unlimited.

Mr. LARSEN. I believe it has been stated that Senator Testerman is associated with 32 men, 8 men on each claim.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. That would only be 20 acres apiece for them at 640 acres.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Eight on each claim?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; eight on each claim.

The CHAIRMAN. So that each section has eight men claiming it.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; each claim was located by eight locators. As you know, under the placer law it is provided that no one can claim more than 20 acres, but that eight can form an association and claim as much as 160 acres and not more. As I suggested, the lowest maximum that has ever been fixed is 640 acres, so that in order to be harmonious with the existing policy of the Government I think the number of acres in this bill should be raised to 640. I might say to the gentlemen from the West that if you reduce the maximum in this instance it may come back to plague you in the future, because there are those who will say that in this instance you thought 480 acres were enough, that you had departed from the general and existing policy, and that if it were justified in this isolated case they might seek to make it the general policy. So I think as a matter of foresight and prudence it would be wise for you to adhere to the 640-acre standard.

The CHAIRMAN. Under section 14 of the leasing act they are entitled to one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, or in any event as much as 160 acres, if there be that number of acres within the permit.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, they were entitled to a prospecting permit on the four sections?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I believe they could get a lease on "one-fourth" and a permit on the rest, which might eventuate in a lease.

The CHAIRMAN. How much had Mr. Testerman and his associates expended on the four claims at the time the Texas injunction was served upon him?

Mr. GORE. About $120,000. I might say in this connection that they took his machinery and equipment, valued at a little over $19,000, for which he has never received one cent of compensation. They used it in drilling the other wells in the claim that he had located, and they held and enjoyed the fruits and profits from the date of seizure until the appointment of the Federal receiver, which, I think, was from October or November until the 1st of April.

Mr. TESTERMAN. From November 7.

Mr. GORE. They drilled wells with his machinery, took the oil and enjoyed the fruits from everything they recovered.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Have they ever made a claim for the proceeds of the development?

Mr. GORE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That operation was under the protection of the Texas courts, was it not?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I may say that everybody else who put down wells and were similarly situated with Senator Testerman, with one exception, have been paid back the expenses of drilling the wells, because the Government took them over; that is, the court took them over through the receiver and made use of them. The people who put down those wells have been reimbursed in every instance except Senator Testerman. Why a discrimination was made I do not know unless it was that technically he was in contempt of this Texas court, and I suppose that the comity which obtains between courts restrained the receiver of the United States Supreme Court from reimbursing him.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the title to this property was in controversy, I do not see how they could go ahead and develop it and take the proceeds of it.

Mr. TESTERMAN. There was a receiver appointed out of the Texas court and he was appointed in October, the middle of October, 1919, and on November 7 they took possession of the entire property, machinery and all, and drilled wells on the property.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Under the direction of the receiver?

Mr. TESTERMAN. I do not know.

Mr. GORE. Presumably under the Texas receiver.

Mr. LARSEN. What became of the funds collected by the Texas receiver? Did he turn them over to the receiver of the Federal court?

Mr. GORE. My understanding is that they were turned over to the company which was claiming the land.

Mr. LARSEN. It seems to me that when the receiver of the Federal Government took the property from the receiver of Texas that he would have transferred the property in hand and the funds in hand to the Federal receiver.

Mr. GORE. I think Congressman MCCLINTIC, of Oklahoma, will probably suggest or submit to the committee an amendment directing the United States to recover at least the royalty on account of the oil recovered.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. I incorporated the substance of that in the bill which I asked you to consider yesterday, which is designated as a recapture clause.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What is Mr. Testerman doing toward making a recovery of the proceeds from the property which he claims?

Mr. GORE. A motion was submitted providing for reimbursement, as in the other instances, but it was not allowed by the court. As I say, I do not know on what ground it was disallowed, because the reason of the court was not stated. However, it is my inference that it must have been because he had been enjoined and forbidden to go on this property by the Texas court. Unless it was that, I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What length of time was there between the injunction being served on you and the receiver of the United States being appointed?

Mr. TESTERMAN. The injunction was served on me August 22, 1919, and the receiver of the United States Government took possession April 20, 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And during that time the persons claiming the property under the Texas law operated the property?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And took your machinery and all the proceeds?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir; and drilled other wells; they drilled those wells on the property with this machinery. I might state to this committee, just for information, that it was almost impossible to secure drilling machinery there; I had a number of rigs, and they confiscated this one and drilled those wells. I was forbidden to go down on the river, under penalty that I would be jailed, and I had other rigs there.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It looks to me as though the court was conniving with these people to euchre you out of the proceeds.

Mr. TESTERMAN. I could not say about that, of course.

Mr. LARSEN. Where is your drilling outfit now?

Mr. TESTERMAN. The drilling outfit, as I understand, was hauled back to the site from where the Texas fellows took it and taken over by the Federal receiver.

Mr. LARSEN. If he took that over, it looks to me as though the funds would have been turned over with the property.

Mr. TESTERMAN. I do not know what the court's order was. The receiver told me that the drilling machinery was a wreck when it came back, but it was new when they took it. I drilled one well with it, and when they turned it back to the receiver I was told it was all junk stuff. Of course, I have never seen it since then. I might say, in addition to that, that the well I drilled, the one that is producing now, flowed about 200 barrels on the 22d.

The CHAIRMAN. On the 22d of what?

Mr. TESTERMAN. August, 1919.

Mr. GORE. That is the day he made the trial run.

Mr. TESTERMAN. We could not run anything from that well on account of this injunction. I went up and talked to my attorneys and they put it into the hands of an Oklahoma receiver, and he was dispossessed by the Texas authorities after that. What the well made between November 7 and April 20 I do not know, but it was turned over to the receiver of the United States as a dry hole, the report says. I made three trips to talk to Mr. Delano, and finally proposed that I would pay all the expenses if he would let me go on the well and open it. He said it was dry. I finally got some one down there to open it; I got them to clean it out, and they cleaned it out. I have a son who is permitted to go on there—and we stood around and watched them, and they took out a lot of old stuff, and after they got it out the well went to flowing, and it gave 200 barrels of oil. That was the condition of the initial well.

The CHAIRMAN. How many wells are there on the Mellish properties?

Mr. TESTERMAN. I think there are about 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Mellish properties are yours?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes; there are about 14 wells and there are two or three dry holes.

Mr. GORE. He has not been allowed to go on the property.

Mr. TESTERMAN. The receiver has been very nice, and I have no complaint to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any idea how much oil the receiver has produced from the Mellish properties?

Mr. TESTERMAN. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. An approximation of it?

Mr. TESTERMAN. No; I have not.

Mr. BURTNESS. Have you any approximate figures showing what the Texas receiver produced from the wells?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Only conflicting reports, Mr. BURTNESS. I have a very good friend who has tried to keep in touch there, and he told me the first well was making about 1,000 barrels a day when the Texas folks had it.

The CHAIRMAN. How many wells did the Texas people have in operation?

Mr. TESTERMAN. At that time?

The CHAIRMAN. When the Federal receiver took them over.

Mr. TESTERMAN. I could not tell you; but they were drilling several wells—five or six.

Mr. GORE. You see, they would not allow him to go on the property and he could not keep up with them.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would like to ask with reference to the form as well as to the dates of the assignments from the individual claimants to the Mellish Corporation?

Mr. GORE. Senator Testerman will have to furnish that information.

Mr. TESTERMAN. My attorney advised me that it was necessary to drill a well upon each claim. I drilled two wells down the river and got nothing, and after that we put the claims into an association under what they call the five-claims act. All I know is what he told me. And we assigned those claims to that association, called the Mellish Consolidated Association.

Mr. BURTNESS. Was that done before the discovery of oil?

Mr. TESTERMAN. It was done before the discovery of oil—that is, the assignment commenced before that—and we were some time in getting the parties together, who were here and yonder, you know, and I rather think some of it was done before we got oil; in fact, I know it was. But the question came up about the legality of it, and we reorganized as soon as we got oil, and we made a new assignment—that is, we assigned this to the Mellish Association for the purpose of operating under what he called the five claims act. I do not know what it was.

Mr. BURTNESS. Have you a copy of one of those assignments?

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have in mind any law regarding the assignment or any law that prohibited the assignment?

Mr. TESTERMAN. No; but he thought they could be assigned.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that after you made your discovery?

Mr. TESTERMAN. No; it was made before; I think part was made before we discovered.

Mr. DYAR. When you created this association did the original locators maintain their proportional interests in the property?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir. But after we drilled the wells and this litigation came on, then is when we reorganized and issued it into units, because we had to have money and could not get it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you reorganize after you discovered oil?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the assignment you speak of when you refer to an assignment?

Mr. TESTERMAN. Yes, Mr. Chairman. They first made an assignment to the Mellish Consolidated Placer Mining Association of all of their interest in the Mellish Association. Then we drilled the wells, and when this litigation came on we reorganized so that we might issue units in lieu of those interests they had on the first organization.

Mr. GORE. I think they were under the impression that they had to put down a well on each claim and needed people to put up money, so they organized this holding company so that those who put up the most could have the most.

There are one or two verbal points which I would like to mention. After the word "citizen" I should think the words "of the United States" should be added.

The CHAIRMAN. What bill are you referring to?

Mr. GORE. The Sanders bill. And after the words "lands and oil and gas deposits" I rather think the words "belonging to the United States and" should be added. I consulted with Colonel Roote about it, but he does not think it is material, so I am not disposed to insist on it but merely suggest it for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. LARSEN. Reverting to the quantity of land, the difference between 480 acres and 640 acres, you stated the condition with reference to Mr. Testerman and his associations. Do you know whether or not the same condition exists with reference to claimants in other cases?

Mr. GORE. I could not speak generally as to the Burk Divide people.

Mr. LARSEN. Then, so far as you know, if the committee were to adopt the scheme of 640 acres, would it result in any of the claimants getting more than 20 acres per person?

Mr. GORE. I rather think it would, and I think Congress has permitted that where they need larger tracts for development, and I think they would be permitted to share accordingly.

Mr. LARSEN. It is possible you did not quite understand my question. If there were 160-acre lots and eight persons filed on the 160 acres, that would mean 20 acres to each, and my question was whether in the other cases they had as many as eight persons?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LARSEN. I am not speaking of the Testerman claims, but I am speaking of the other claims.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I think the Burk Divide claims were filed in accordance with the placer mining law—eight claimants to each 160 acres—and another group was the Burk Burnett.

Mr. LARSEN. Then nobody would get more than 20 acres?

Mr. GORE. You see, it would be merged, in a sense, and 20 acres would not be allotted to one man and 20 to another, but it would result in somewhat of a community interest.

Mr. BURTNESS. So that we may have a little more definite reference to this matter in the record as to the date of the assignment, I would like to state that I find in volume 2 of the transcript of the evidence, at pages 680 to 692, inclusive, what is known as the Mellish Exhibit No. 10, and which appears to be a copy of the so-called assignment from the various claimants of the Mellish Consolidated Placer Oil Mining Association in Red River. I do not believe it is necessary to insert the document itself, because it is rather long, but the agreement is substantially this: After setting out the locations made by all of the individuals and their names, as well as the name under which they operated each claim, there is this language:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed between the parties herein above named, and whose names are hereto affixed, that said mining claims above described shall be grouped into an association composed of the locators hereinbefore named, to be known as the Mellish Consolidated Placer Oil Mining Association in Red River, of which the parties hereinbefore mentioned shall be members, and their interests therein shall be in proportion to their respective interests in the claims hereinbefore described, which interest is an undivided one-eighth in each of said placer oil mining claims above described for each of the locators thereof."

Then later in the exhibit I find this language:

"It is further agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that each of the said parties shall have a one-eightieth interest in said Mellish Consolidated Placer Oil Mining Association in Red River for each of the said placer oil mining claims of which he is a locator, to wit."

Then the names are set out, and this instrument is dated January 2, 1919.

Mr. GORE. I think the reason for that one-eightieth, Mr. Congressman, was this: They did not know but that one of the claims might be dry, and they tried to provide so that if one produced and another did not they would all participate.

Mr. BURTNESS. And it was for that purpose the adjustment was made?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I think it was done as a matter of mutual protection.

Mr. BURTNESS. As I say, the instrument is dated January 2, 1919, but a great many of the acknowledgments are dated later.

Mr. GORE. That grew out of this circumstance: You must remember that there was a great rush into this oil country on the Burk Burnett and Burk Burnett extension, and there were thousands of people who rushed into those fields from the four quarters of the earth, and it was a difficult matter to get these acknowledgments after they had dispersed.

Mr. BURTNESS. I simply mentioned the fact that the signatures were apparently attached at a date later than the date of the instrument.

Mr. DRIVER. It seems to me from the language which has just been read that this was an association of these various interests for their mutual convenience and operation of the property?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DRIVER. Now, was this afterwards converted to a corporation?

Mr. GORE. No, sir.

Mr. DRIVER. It still remains an association of these placer mining locators?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTNESS. Under the terms of this very instrument Tom Testerman and others were appointed trustees.

Mr. DRIVER. My reason for mentioning that was to ascertain how far the limitation fixed on the acreage would affect these particular claimants. There has been some discussion here about 640 acres and 480 acres being the limit, but if the particular interests of these various claimants are transferred to this association I do not see that the limiting of the acreage would affect them particularly.

Mr. GORE. You might be correct and I rather hope you are.

Mr. BURTNESS. Still the language used here, as far as the assignment is concerned, setting out the names, and so on, goes on to provide this:

"Do hereby sell, transfer, convey, and assign to the said Mellish Consolidated Placer Oil Mining Association, all of their right, title, and interest, forever."

Mr. DRIVER. And they selected trustees to operate the property?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; later selecting trustees of the association to operate the properties.

Mr. GORE. I merely want to refer to the fact that Mr. Barcley stated that the bill as drawn would afford relief to Texas claimants who in good faith complied with the conditions, and I am disposed to agree with him in that conclusion. As you will remember, Judge Dyar suggested that he was not resisting legislation to lease these lands to the pioneers who went there and developed them, so that the contest seems to revolve mainly around the proceeds.

Mr. BURTNESS. The reason I mentioned this matter of the assignments was due to some statements made yesterday by Mr. Macey, which statements seemed to indicate that these assignments, in the form they are, might technically be contrary to the provisions of the placer mining act, where they were made prior to the discovery of oil. That is the reason I was interested in trying to get just what the assignments were and to determine whether they were really anything more than assignments merely for the convenience of the parties, and they seem to retain specifically in that instrument, which was executed prior to discovery, the original interest which they had.

Mr. GORE. As I recall, there was an act passed March 2, 1911, which provided that claims regularly made could not be held void on account of transfers. You know it grew out of some decision, I think, by the Supreme Court.

Colonel ROOTE. No; the land office.

The CHAIRMAN. It is contended that that refers to claims theretofore made.

Mr. GORE. It was retroactive?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the claim which is made.

Mr. GORE. Well, that raises a very interesting question and one which I would like to look into further. Gentlemen, I thank you. I will submit for the information of the committee, to be printed in the record, an amendment prepared by Congressman MCCLINTIC, which directs the recovery of royalty from those who operated the properties between the ouster of Senator Testerman and his associates and the taking over by the Federal receiver. My own judgment is that it ought to direct the Government to recover all the proceeds and not merely the royalty; that is, recover all the proceeds where they did not act in good faith and did not make discovery and do not comply with the conditions set out in the bill.

The amendment referred to follows:

"(Amendment proposed by the department with certain suggested changes.)

"S. 4197. Page 4, line 2, change period to colon, and add the following (at the end of section 4):

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to take such legal steps as may be necessary and proper, to collect from any person or persons who shall not be awarded a permit or lease under this act an amount equal to the value of all oil and gas produced by him or them from any of said lands prior to the inclusion of said property in the receivership, except oil or gas used on the property for production purposes or unavoidably lost and except other reasonable and proper allowances for the expenses of production: Provided, That of the amount so collected, 12½ per cent shall be reserved to the United States as royalty and the balance after deducting the expense of collection shall be paid over to the person or persons awarded permits or leases under this act, as their interests may appear."

The CHAIRMAN. Yesterday we promised to permit Colonel Roote to offer something.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I desire to extend my remarks on the subject of House bill 13927, entitled "A bill for the establishment of a United States industrial home for women at Mount Weather, Va."

The Government faces a critical exigency in the matter of the care of female United States prisoners. It has never had any penal institution of its own in which to incarcerate female offenders against the laws of the United States. It has been necessary to rely upon the good will of various of the States to secure accommodations in State institutions for Federal prisoners of this class. Those institutions upon which the Government has relied in the past can no longer accommodate these women. The limit of their accommodations has been reached. At present there are but two institutions which continue to receive them; one in California and the other in New Jersey. They are both small, and within a short time it is estimated they will be filled to their maximum capacity. The Government has been unable to secure additional accommodations for women prisoners in other States. A canvass, which has been conducted of the States for this purpose, has met with no success whatever.

There are at the present time approximately 350 female United States prisoners confined in various State institutions. There is a steady increase in the number of commitments by the courts of this class each year. It is estimated that the number of women prisoners has increased at least 100 per cent within the past 10 years. Not only is it necessary to provide a place of incarceration for the annual convictions, but a number of those now confined in the State institutions must be removed. Several of the States have advised the Government that they can no longer care for these women, and are insistent upon their immediate removal. The States are also gradually increasing their charge for keeping women offenders.

The need for a Federal institution in which to confine women prisoners is, therefore, immediate and insistent. In establishing such institution it has been decided to make it an industrial home rather than a penitentiary. It is proposed to confine in such home all women over 17 years of age convicted of offenses against the United States. It is the duty of the Federal Government to provide a place of confinement for its own women prisoners wherein they may have uniform treatment and be segregated into classes according to age and past criminal record. The scattering of these women prisoners among various States and subjecting them to ten or a dozen different methods of discipline is indefensible and evidences a neglect which should be immediately rectified.

To accomplish this end this bill, H. R. 13927, introduced by me, provides for the establishment of a United States industrial home for women at Mount Weather, Va. It provides that the discipline therein shall be correctional and designed to prevent the inmates from becoming hardened criminals. It provides for their education and training in occupational pursuits along the most advanced lines. The object sought to be attained will be to lead the women to regard themselves as not yet of the criminal class, and to so train them as to enable them at the expiration of their terms to reenter society trained and equipped to support themselves and live a law-abiding life.

The bill also provides for the appointment by the President of a board of advisers composed of four prominent citizens of the United States, the Attorney General, the superintendent of prisons of the Department of Justice, and the head of the home. It will be the duty of this board to take an active interest in the immediate and future welfare of the inmates, particularly with respect to their establishment in society upon their release. This is a very important feature. Prisoners have heretofore been turned loose at the expiration of their sentences without any regard to their future and poorly, if at all, equipped to earn a livelihood. This is so stupid a policy that it would not be tolerated were it not for the fact that it has a long tradition behind it. It should no longer be tolerated.

After officials of the Department of Justice visited a number of reservations now held by the Government as surplus real estate, careful consideration led to the conclusion that the abandoned weather station at Mount Weather, Va., was the most desirable of any of these properties for the following reasons:

First. For the reason that the buildings can be adapted for the incarceration of female offenders with the least outlay of funds.

Second. Its relative remoteness, reducing to a minimum the introduction of contraband, a constant source of trouble in all penal institutions.

Third. Its healthfulness. It is located on a ridge of the Blue Ridge Mountains and will be an ideal place for the recupera-tion of those prisoners in bad health and those who have been taken off the drug habit.

Fourth. Its proximity to Washington will result in giving it the benefit of many various advantages offered by Government agencies and activities, such as the Bureau of Education, in the training and teaching of the inmates; the Public Health Service, in matters of health and hygiene; and the Department of Agriculture, in its farming and dairying activities.

Fifth. While not geographically in the middle of the country, it is centrally located in relation to the sections from which come most of the female offenders.

It is estimated by the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury that it will cost about $76,000 to adapt the present buildings at Mount Weather for use as an industrial home for women. It is estimated by the prison authorities of the Department of Justice that the annual cost of the maintenance of the institution will be about $130,000. There should be offset against this figure, however, approximately $95,000 annually which it now costs the Government to maintain its women prisoners in State institutions, which sum it will no longer be necessary to pay if the Government has an institution of its own to which the above-mentioned class may be transferred.

Briefly, an urgent emergency exists. The need of providing for the proposed institution is imperative. No other solution of the problem of providing a place of confinement for women is practicable. There is no place for them now, and no other way in which they may be cared for. The seriousness of the matter is apparent. Unless a place be provided, the Government soon will be in the anomalous and embarrassing position of convicting offenders against the laws without any place whatever in which to incarcerate them.

WOMEN PRISONERS NEGLECTED.

The Government for its male offenders has long since provided modern institutions for confinement at Fort Leavenworth and Atlanta, but has been sadly negligent of its female offenders. These have been handed over to the States, where they have received treatment ranging from good to bad. If the State prison authorities saw fit to put the unfortunate women in stripes upon a bread and water diet or to apply to her bare back the scorpion lash of the cat-o'-nine-tails, that was the State's business. How unjust it would seem for a sovereign to cause a subject—especially a woman—to be indicted, tried, and convicted for an infraction of law and then to delegate to another the full power of applying punishment, and without concern for the reformation, education, or future of the convict.

I do not hesitate to say that the conduct of the Federal Government toward its women prisoners is a national disgrace.

MOUNT WEATHER.

The land was purchased in 1902 and buildings constructed later for the purpose of establishing an aerological and meteorological observatory and laboratory for the study of the upper air and solar radiation and magnetic observations.

Mount Weather, Va., is the name given a group of buildings erected by the Weather Bureau for special aerial and research work on top of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Loudoun and Clarke Counties, about 20 miles south of Harpers Ferry and 47 miles in a direct line west of Washington. It is 6 miles south of Bluemont, Va., the nearest railroad station and present terminus of the Washington & Old Dominion (suburban electric) Railroad line. The grounds have an area of 84.81 acres, are roughly square in outline, lying on both sides of the ridge, the top of which is 1,725 feet above sea level.

It overlooks to the west the entire Shenandoah Valley from Strasburg to Harpers Ferry, and to the east all that portion of Piedmont (Va.) Valley between the Blue Ridge and the Bull Run Mountains.

The grounds are inclosed by a stone wall and wire fence.

BUILDINGS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

Administration and observatory building: Erected, 1909; brick, tile, and concrete; three stories and cellar; 18 rooms.

Machine shop: Erected, 1904; two-story frame and stone building; eight rooms.

Central heating and power plant: Erected, 1909; one-story stone building; boilers and electrical equipment sufficient for supplying heat, light, and power for the entire plant.

"Absolute" and "variation" buildings (for terrestrial magnetic work): Erected, 1906; two 2-story frame buildings, used in connection with investigations in terrestrial magnetism; cellar under each. The walls are about 4 feet thick, of double construction, packed with sawdust to secure constant temperature conditions within.

Stables: One 2-story frame and stone stable and one 2-story frame stable.

Farm cottage for dwelling purposes: Erected, 1905; a two-story frame building; nine rooms.

Physical laboratory: Erected, 1909; three-story stone building; 16 rooms.

Cottage for dwelling: Erected, 1909; three-story frame building; 15 rooms.

Reel house and kite shelter: A circular frame building 9 feet in diameter.

A 108-foot tubular well supplies all buildings with good water from an elevated water tank having a capacity of 14,000 gallons, filled from pump operated by an electric motor.

All the buildings have been erected and improvements made in the best and most substantial manner possible, and the property as it now stands represents an actual cost value to the Government of about $200,000.

Mr. C. C. Clark, of the Weather Bureau, testifying before the House Committee on Agriculture, June, 1921, when those interested in providing industrial training for soldiers were trying to induce congressional action in that behalf, said:

Mr. CLARK. We built, I think, eight buildings on the land and operated them as observatory and administration buildings, heating plant, and other smaller structures. We are now caring for them with custodians and maintaining and protecting them as best we can with the limited funds at our disposal. This is a map just drafted showing the contour lines and the location of the buildings.

Mr. THOMPSON. What was the cost of those buildings?

Mr. CLARK. $209,000, approximately, was the original cost of the land and improvements.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Are they leased or abandoned or are you receiving any revenue from them?

Mr. CLARK. They are not now occupied or being used. We are now maintaining them and caring for them as custodian, to preserve them as Government property. We have two custodians there.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But they are not occupied?

Mr. CLARK. They are unoccupied.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And there is no financial revenue accruing to the Government?

Mr. CLARK. No, sir.

The buildings, on account of increased cost in labor and materials, likely could not be reproduced now for less than double their original cost.

The Government experts who have examined the property find it ideally located for and the principal buildings well adapted to the purpose outlined in the bill.

EFFORT TO SECURE THE PASSAGE OF THE BILL HAS PROVED UNAVAILING.

Those testifying or urgently insisting upon the passage of the bill were Hon. John W. H. Crim, Assistant Attorney General; Mr. Heber H. Votaw, Superintendent of Prisons; Mrs. Fannie French Morse, executive head of the National Training School for Girls, with a long experience in prison work; Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, Assistant Attorney General; and Mrs. Lenna Yost, legislative agent of the Women's National Christian Temperance Union.

In addition to these, many men and women, some resident in Virginia and others elsewhere, have given the measure their full support.

It is understood that the President indicated to those in commanding position—to the majority leader, I understand—in the House the need for favorable action on the bill.

The Speaker could not see his way clear to recognize a Member to move for a suspension of the rules, nor would the Rules Committee grant a rule making the consideration of the bill in order, so the bill, notwithstanding it had received a favorable report from the Committee on the Judiciary, was allowed to die on the calendar.

OPPOSITION TO THE BILL.

The main opposition to the bill came from some folk who have built summer cottages located from 3 to 6 miles from Mount Weather. I understand that these cottagers, or most of them, reside in the city of Washington and only spend a little of their time—during the hot season—at or near Mount Weather.

It remains to be seen if the Government, with its large investment in valuable property at Mount Weather, with its vast need for a home for its women prisoners, with its earnest appeal voiced by the Executive and the Department of Justice addressed to the Congress, is to be thwarted and the efforts of its duly constituted officials rendered nil by a half dozen city folk who seem to have persuaded certain of our legislators that an altitude of 1,725 feet above sea level is entirely too cold a place for women prisoners. It is pertinent for me to suggest that Bluefield, a city of 20,000 people in my district, is located more than 2,000 feet above sea level. Without taking the time to look the matter up, I should think that the city of Denver was at least 5,000 feet above sea level.

The women of the country are justly aroused and indignant concerning the fate of the bill in the Sixty-seventh Congress.

We confidently hope that the next Congress will allow the bill to pass. In fact, we do not doubt that the Members of the Sixty-eighth Congress will act promptly and favorably upon the proposition.

Certain designing persons, as I am informed by an official of the Government, have conceived the idea of buying this property from the Government for about $25,000, notwithstanding the present value of the land and the cost of reproducing the buildings would approximate one-half a million dollars.

I am informed that some of the same people who now oppose the use of the property for an industrial home for women also opposed the use of it for a home for soldiers.

Unless the Government shall be allowed to use this property for some of its purposes, then it would be better to sell it for $25,000, for the cost of upkeep and caretakers is considerable.

The fact that the Federal Government in all the years of its existence has never established an institution for the safekeeping, the education, and the reformation of women committed for infractions of penal statutes is to my mind most remarkable.

Just why the Government should have overlooked or neglected this patent obligation to the unfortunate women sentenced by the law to imprisonment is more than I can understand.

Ample accommodation at Fort Leavenworth and Atlanta for men has long since been provided. These penitentiaries are conducted along the lines of modern thought of students of penology, to the end that the convict be helped to improve himself mentally, morally, and physically, so that when he or she shall have "fulfilled the law's demands" the individual may go out into the world not only a better person but better able to fight the battles of life.

Exercise of the power to imprison carries with it the corollary obligation of superintending that imprisonment—of seeing to it that the incarceration is not only not inhuman but that the unhappy person shall in every possible way be fortified for the struggle to rehabilitate himself in society.

The Government ought not to shirk the duty I have already mentioned, especially as concerns its women prisoners. There is a nation-wide demand from the people—especially the good women—of the land for the passage of this bill, and they are not in a humor to tolerate delay.

The 84 acres of land and the buildings on it which the Government owns, situate on Mount Weather, cost about $215,000, and it would hardly be fair to the Government not to allow it to use this land lawfully acquired and buildings constructed before the summer cottages were built.

There can be but little doubt that the next Congress will promptly pass the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I thank you for this opportunity to present to you a statement of the results of our new tariff law.

To-day I want to call attention to the wave of business activity and prosperity that is now upon this Nation, and in doing so I state very definitely that this prosperity is not the result of world-wide conditions nor is it mere coincidence. It has been stimulated by the enactment of needed tariff legislation and is brought to us in spite of adverse conditions existing elsewhere throughout the world.

In 1913 when the Underwood bill was in course of enactment we listened to the glowing predictions of the friends of free trade; they passed their tariff bill that fall and during the winter that followed we watched those glowing predictions go astray. They promised us increased export trade, but our exports declined; they promised us increased prosperity, but realization came in the form of bread lines and unemployment. We read newspaper accounts of the 4,000,000 unemployed and how the crowds storming the gates of Ford's factory were dispersed with the fire hose.

During the past year, while the new law was under consideration, we have heard the free-trade predictions of calamity, and we have prosperity. They have predicted an abrupt end to our foreign trade, but our foreign trade has increased. Instead of reading of unemployment, the press tells us of labor shortage. As a patriotic duty and with all the earnestness in me, I urge upon all of you to consider the times. Why turn back again when the avenues to prosperity are so clearly indicated?

There is a menace to our national welfare that I would like to emphasize at this opportune time. The menace to which I refer has caused financial losses, suffering, and want in a measure too great to estimate. This menace, my friends, is the susceptibility of a considerable portion of our people to the pleasant but utterly fallacious argument that conditions can be created whereby everything we want to sell can be sold at a high price and everything we want to buy can be bought at a low price. May this dangerous but pleasant sounding contention, which is so impossible of fulfillment, never again lead this Nation from the road of prosperity.

Business depression and lack of purchasing power go hand in hand, and with them come declining values, low wages, business failures, and unemployment. And we find with prosperity increased purchasing power, increased values, high wages, abundance of employment, and business activity and success.

We are well off when we can purchase what we want, and what better evidence is there of the Nation's ability to purchase than actual increases of purchases? What better evidence of the ability of our people to have homes than the fact that the building of homes is increasing by leaps and bounds? What better evidence can there be of the ability of our people to ride in automobiles than the fact that more automobiles are being built and sold than ever before? The Department of Agriculture reports recently issued showed an increase in the consumption of meat in the United States of over 600,000,000 pounds in 1922 as compared with 1921—what better evidence of the ability of Americans to purchase meat? The Washington Post of January 30 reports that a survey of 77 per cent of savings institutions shows an increase in savings accounts during the last year of $500,000,000—what better evidence can there be of our ability to provide for the future? The Post Office Department announces that in the six months ending December 31 last a billion more stamps were issued than during the corresponding six months one year previous, and as a result of the increasing demand for stamps the reserve supply has fallen to 200,000,000 below what is estimated as a safe margin. This is a barometer of prosperity. The Washington Post of January 28, quoting from reports of the Department of Commerce, shows that the record retail sales of the month of December are being maintained in January.

During the past few years some faulty international free-trade argument has found surprisingly fertile soil in the minds of many of our bankers of prominence. They have led especially in the large cities in predicting calamity as the result of increase of tariff rates, but even upon the unwilling prosperity has been thrust. A few days ago my attention fell upon the following headline in the morning paper, "Boom in industry reflected in banks," and below this heading is the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, showing an increase in the resources of the banks of the country of $2,031,215,000 during the year just ended.

In the spring of 1921 a depression of major magnitude seemed imminent. Farmers were especially hard hit and their inability to purchase caused serious losses to retailers and manufacturers. In May the emergency tariff act was passed. It was hastily enacted and a makeshift, but it stemmed the tide. The indications of better times, however, were soon in evidence—increased purchases of agriculturists helped other lines of trade. It marked the beginning of business revival, and since then business improvement has been constant and certain. In September, 1922, a tariff law, carefully studied out, was passed to take the place of the incomplete emergency act. It protected not only the product of the farm but also the product of the factory. The new law has now been in force for five months; they have been months of progress. Increases in building and in the consumption of food and clothing tell us the American people are better clothed, better fed, and that housing conditions are improving.

Since the war a new antiprotection argument has been concocted. It is as faulty as the rest. It is a susceptible sounding contention that we can not sell unless we buy from Europe; that free trade will aid Europe and thus aid us; and that Europe must pay her debt to us in goods. Analyze it. We find only the old proposal to surrender American markets to the product of lowly paid labor of other countries. The ultimate consequences of such a policy would neither be a help to Europe nor a help to ourselves. It would bring upon us a period of depression; and let me sound the warning that any policy that will bring business stagnation to the United States will only tend to add to the world's burdens. On the other hand, prosperity in America will reflect itself in Europe and place us in a position to help Europe. We can best aid Europe by seeing to it that all in America are well employed at high wages, for then America will be the best market in the world for foreign as well as domestic products. You have heard prophecies that high tariff rates will stop importations, but since the tariff law our importations have actually increased. That is evidence that when the purchasing power of America is high other countries find a ready market in the United States, and that it is our ability to purchase rather than tariff rates that influences our import trade.

Without stating causes or drawing conclusions, let me place before you a contrast as food for thought. In the United States last year the consumption of sugar was 102 pounds per capita, while in Russia the consumption of sugar was but 5 pounds per capita. This unvarnished statement should cause a person to think in the right direction. What a poor market is the country without industry and production.

When other arguments fail, the free trader talks of finding a market for our surplus production. They ask what will happen when our production exceeds domestic consumption. In reply, I would ask, When do we have surpluses? We have surpluses, my friends, when people right here in United States have their purchasing power diminished; we have surpluses when Americans are unemployed in the periods of business depression. During times of prosperity this question of surplus production is eliminated. In the final analysis the market for the world's production is only the world. If one nation so shapes its policies that its production far exceeds its consumption, it compels some other nation to consume more than it produces. With proper national policies, production in America will greatly increase, and with it will come increased consumption. Why talk of a surplus production in America while there is so much room for better homes, better schools, better streets, and highways, and public buildings? To me increased production means increased earnings—not necessarily measured in dollars but in the comforts and enjoyments of life, and the time has not yet arrived when the American people have all the comforts, improvements, and advantages to which they are entitled. They can consume much more than at present of the product of effort in America. The consuming power of our people is almost without limit. Certainly labor in America can profitably be employed in caring for domestic needs without serious problems arising in connection with the disposal of surplus production.

There are two ways of increasing income-tax receipts—the first, and the unpleasant way, is to increase the rate of taxation; the second, and very pleasant way, is to increase incomes. We are about to witness the results of the second method. Earnings in the year 1922, as compared with the year 1921, were increased and will be reflected in the income-tax installment to be paid into the Treasury on March 15. I predict a substantial increase with confidence. It will balance our budget and place us on the right side of the ledger, and in no small measure is the tariff the cause. Of all tariff laws the emergency act and the more recent permanent act are revenue producers, direct and indirect, surpassing all expectations.

Customs receipts for the current fiscal year were first set at $350,000,000; they were later increased to $375,000,000, $400,000,000, then $410,000,000, then increased to $440,000,000 and to $450,000,000; recently it was estimated that they would reach $480,000,000, and now it appears that customs receipts will certainly exceed $500,000,000, and may possibly reach the sum of $530,000,000. Add to this, my Democratic friends, the increase in income-tax receipts that will surely come from increased incomes, and you will have the results, from the standpoint of revenue, of a truly revenue-producing tariff law.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, three different legislative bodies of the State of South Dakota have memorialized Congress for legislation to stabilize the price of farm products. The dire distress that the farmers have encountered during the last three years is well known, and it is contended by many who are thoroughly familiar with agricultural conditions that if the present condition continues it will cause the farmer to abandon agricultural pursuits and encourage him to move to the cities and enter into competition with labor in those localities. Certainly under present conditions there is no inducement for a young man to engage in agricultural pursuits.

The plan of stabilizing the price of farm products has been before the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses and lengthy hearings thereon have been held, and during the last session of the Sixty-seventh Congress the Agricultural Committee of the House reported favorably H. R. 7735, introduced by me and which embodies a plan for stabilizing the price of farm commodities. However, in the closing days of the session it was impossible to secure consideration of the measure.

While the bill reported is to some extent a departure from former policies of the Government, the plan is not as drastic as some would have us believe. The bill in question only asks the Government to say to the farmers that it will buy their surplus at a price that will assure them a return of cost of production and a slight profit. But if this proposition as relates to agriculture seems to be a departure, why not try it for, say, two or three years? Certainly the Government could afford to make a trial of this plan for a few years in order to rehabilitate and reestablish this, the basic industry of our land, on a paying basis.

Put agriculture back on a prosperous basis, restore the farmer's purchasing power, and see how quickly it will be reflected in the stimulated demand upon the industrial and manufacturing centers. We are passing through a crisis, and it may be that after a few years this law would not be necessary, but for the present the farmer is in a critical situation. He has been suffering loss, and I think, in view of the conditions, we are justified in taking unusual steps to alleviate the situation.

The present Legislature of South Dakota, being the third time the legislative body of that State has memorialized Congress on this subject, adopted a resolution urging legislation to stabilize the price of farm products.

The resolution is as follows:

A concurrent resolution proposing and recommending the creating by act of Congress of a corporation for the stabilizing of markets for agricultural products.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring)—

Whereas special privileges and opportunities afforded by Federal law have unbalanced the markets and virtually repealed the law of supply and demand; and

Whereas the present marketing system for agricultural products is entirely in the hands of interests antagonistic to the welfare of the producer and the consumer; and

Whereas such conditions are so detrimental to the national progress and prosperity of the agricultural industry that the same has been forced into virtual bankruptcy and has entailed great distress upon farming population: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is urgently requested to promptly enact legislation which will provide for a practical marketing medium, and indorse thereof the following plan:

That by a special enactment of Congress a corporation be formed, authorized, and empowered to equip itself with necessary facilities for storage and marketing of agricultural products; that the said corporation be capitalized with a sufficient fund to provide the necessary facilities as above set out, including warehouses, elevators, and storage facilities, together with a fund sufficiently large to cover operating expenses until such time as the profits from the operation of the corporation shall be sufficient to take care of the same.

That the said corporation shall be authorized and empowered to issue, in exchange for agricultural commodities received, in storage or for transfer, negotiable currency issued against the actual commodities received, said currency to be issued to the producer as the agricultural commodities are received by the said corporation and retired by the said corporation in equal amounts as the said commodities in hand are delivered back to consuming trade or to foreign markets.

The said corporation to consist of a body of directors not to exceed seven members, the Secretary of Agriculture acting as an advisory member; the said directors to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to be chosen from each of the districts into which the agricultural portions through which this corporation shall operate shall be divided, each director being the active head of the district from which he is chosen.

It shall be the duty of the board of directors, through and with the advice of the Secretary of Agriculture, to arrive at a basic price of each agricultural commodity at such time of the year when such price can be the most accurately arrived at.

The basis for such price to be arrived at by the actual supply and demand as shown by the Federal crop statistics.

That from the basic price there shall be a graduated scale, rising from month to month throughout the year, to allow for the actual cost of shrinkage, storage, and loss for handling grain.

That the agricultural portion of the United States shall be divided into the districts above named with a view to including in each district that territory tributary to and delivering to certain central markets, with a view to including in each territory those districts the most accessible to those markets and geographically so located as to be easily controlled from the district headquarters.

That the said corporation shall be empowered to receive at all times all agricultural commodities produced within the United States not perishable, and to sell such commodities to all consuming trade, either domestic or foreign.

That said corporation shall, during the first year of its operation, purchase and hold in permanent reserve an amount of all agricultural products which can practicably be kept in storage and which are a part of our export trade equal to 10 per cent of the average annual national production of such products; that in the discretion of the board of directors the said reserve may be increased not to exceed 20 per cent of the average annual national production of said products, but that not to exceed 10 per cent of said production shall be placed in said reserve during any one calendar year, and such reserve shall be drawn upon only when the commercial demand therefor becomes excessive; any depletion of such reserve shall be made up from the yield of the next year warranting the same, the purpose being to always, so far as practical, keep an ample reserve of such products.

That the secretary of state transmit this memorial to both Houses of Congress and to South Dakota's delegations therein.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
E. O. FRESCOLN,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a short history of the Battle of the Killdeer Mountain, fought in western North Dakota. The story of the battle was written by Col. Clement A. Lounsberry, a veteran of the Civil War, and one of the pioneers of the State of North Dakota. In giving us this story he has performed a distinct service by furnishing an accurate account of one of the events in connection with the opening up of the great Northwest by General Custer and his followers. Colonel Lounsberry was the first editor in North Dakota, and in a long and useful life took part in and depicted many of the events that marked the changes and development of the country from a wild western frontier to one of the foremost States of the Union. He also rendered distinguished service in the Civil War and still carries the marks of the wounds received there. It is desired by Colonel Lounsberry and the people of western North Dakota that the historic site of the Battle of Killdeer Mountain be preserved to the Nation, and for that purpose I have introduced a bill in Congress providing for the establishment of a national park on that location. Following is the account of the battle:

THE BATTLE OF KILLDEER MOUNTAIN.

The Battle of Killdeer Mountain, which it is proposed to commemorate by the creation of the Killdeer Mountain National Park, was the closing incident of the Sioux Indian uprising, beginning near Acton, Minn., August 17, 1862, resulting in the destruction of the Yellow Medicine and Redwood Indian agencies, the attack upon New Ulm, siege of Fort Ridgeley, and the battle at Woodlake September 23, 1862, where 270 captives were surrendered. During this brief period 644 citizens had lost their lives, 93 soldiers had been killed in battle, 270 citizens had been carried away captive, and many soldiers and citizens wounded; Sioux Falls had been burned, and a vast extent of territory in Minnesota and Dakota devastated, the loss of crops and destruction of homes aggregating millions of dollars in value.

The captives in the hands of the Indians were tortured in every conceivable manner, in many instances too horrible to mention, until death brought relief; the wounded were beaten with muskets and hacked with tomahawks, bodies of the dead mutilated or filled with arrows. Women and children, wounded and bleeding, fled to the forests, where in some instances they wandered for weeks before they could be found and given aid, many of them being crazed by their sufferings, fleeing in terror from approaching relief.

Four hundred and twenty-five Indians were tried by court-martial, 320 convicted, 303 sentenced to death, 38 hanged at Mankato at one time and 2 later, 2 hanged at Fort Snelling, 1 pardoned and 3 released after three years' imprisonment, and the sentence of others commuted. Little Crow, the leader, fled to Canada, but returned July 3, 1863, and was killed by a settler.

The uprising was followed by three expeditions—one under Gen. Henry H. Sibley, in 1863; one under Gen. Alfred H. Sully, the same year; and another by General Sully in 1864.

The Indians driven out of Minnesota by the two expeditions of the previous year were concentrated on the plains of Dakota. They were raiding the settlements in eastern Dakota, western Minnesota, and northern Nebraska; attacking transportation on the Missouri River, serious because of the gold discoveries in Montana and the large immigration heading across Dakota for Montana and Idaho, and the need of Army transportation.

General Sully established his supply depot on the Missouri River at Fort Rice, July 3, 1864. He had first encountered the Indians at the mouth of the Cheyenne, where Captain Fielding, of the topographical engineers, was killed. July 18 he left Fort Rice and proceeded west; at Heart River, in the vicinity of Dickinson, he corralled an immigrant train which he had relieved from the Indians and left some of his heavier supplies, guarded by a part of his force, and proceeded to the Knife River, where he attacked a large force of Indians reported by his scouts.

Pursuing the fleeing Indians at Killdeer Mountain on the 28th he encountered a force estimated by him at 1,600 lodges, representing 5,000 to 6,000 warriors. The Indians were expecting him and were ready for the fray. They were so well posted and their confidence so great that they did not take down their lodges, but commenced circling around his command, each time drawing nearer until they were within 200 yards, when fire was opened on them and many saddles emptied; they then drew off to a greater distance pursued by the Cavalry. Now thoroughly alarmed, the Indians were trying to save their women and children.

The troops opened on them with artillery, the attack being supported by 11 companies of the Sixth Iowa Cavalry, 3 of the Seventh Iowa, 2 of Dakota Cavalry, 4 of Brackett's Minnesota Battalion, 10 of the Eighth Minnesota Mounted Infantry, 6 of the Second Minnesota Cavalry, Jones's Battery, Pope's Battery, two sections of the Third Minnesota Battery, and 70 scouts, the whole force numbering 2,200.

The attack was made in front, the Indians attempting to flank Sully on the left and then on the right and rear, the battle line extending in a circle of about 3 miles. The Indians attempted counterattacks but were repulsed at every point. Major Brackett made a furious attack which they countered, and many Indians were killed, their counterattack being repelled by the aid of Jones's Battery. Being reinforced the Indians made a heavy attack in the rear, which was also dispersed by the same guns.

Sully closed upon their main camp and put them to flight, the artillery driving them out of their strong position in the ravines and on the hills, the cavalry pursuing. The battle lasted all day, and by sunset there were no Indians in sight, and the troops slept on the battle field.

Colonel McLaren was detailed next day to destroy the large amount of property the Indians had left. He gathered into heaps and burned at least 40 tons of dried buffalo meat packed in buffalo skins, great quantities of dried berries, tanned buffalo, elk, and antelope hides, brass and copper kettles, mess pans, and so forth; saddles, travois, and lodge poles. The woods were burned in order to make the destruction complete.

The loss of the Indians was very large, many dead being left on the field. Sully's loss was 5 killed and 10 wounded.

Capt. Nelson Miner, of the Dakota Cavalry, relates that, being hard pressed at one point, he dismounted, and in the fight forgot all about his horse, but when the battle was over his horse was by his side, having followed him wherever he went.

LOCATION OF THE KILLDEER MOUNTAIN BATTLE FIELD.

The ground on which the battle of Killdeer Mountain was fought is now described as sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 29, 30, 31, 32, and north ½ sections 27 and 28, township 146 north, range 96 west, 5th principal meridian, in Dunn County, N. Dak.

The curator of the North Dakota Historical Society, H. C. Fish, in 1915 visited the Killdeer Mountain battle field in company with S. S. Campbell, of Sentinel Butte, N. Dak., who was sergeant in Sully's command.

The trip was unique, for after 46 years Mr. Campbell expected to point out the place of the battle between Sully and the Sioux. What helped to keep the scene so vivid was the constant reading of his old diary which he kept in 1864 during the whole of the Sully campaign. Many of the old troopers for years after the trying march wrote to Mr. Campbell and wanted to know when and where different events occurred. Mr. Campbell at once recognized the lay of the land, and when they went out to the south of the spring said: "This looks just like the old Indian camp; if it is, there is a dry coulee just over there to the south." The dry coulee was found, when Mr. Campbell continued:

"On this broad, open space south of the old spring 1,600 Indian tepees were arranged." Mr. Campbell said that they camped the first night after the battle just west of the Indian camp. The thickest of the battle occurred on the ranch of John Ross, where the Indians made the last stand before their camp was taken. The camp of the second night was at the spring on the old Craig ranch, some 8 miles east of the battle grounds.

The course of events taken from Mr. Campbell's diary is interesting. They started from Sioux City Tuesday, May 31, 1864, and gradually made their way up the Missouri to Fort Rice, and then across country to the Indian hunting grounds. On July 25 the whole army of Sully corralled their extra horses and teams some place 15 or 20 miles south of Dickinson.

"There were also 50 teams of emigrants bound for Idaho who were going along under the protection of the Army. After the corral was established the troopers took nine days' rations for a rapid march into the Indian country. On July 26 the Army marched 1 mile and grazed their horses till 2 o'clock. Then scouts reported that they had a skirmish with the Indians. Mr. Campbell's battalion was put on double quick for 19 miles. July 27 the Army marched 20 miles and grazed their horses, and then marched 10 miles and camped on Knife River. The day of the battle, July 28, the Army marched 12 miles before light and grazed their horses and took breakfast. After breakfast they went 4 miles and met the main body of the Indians.

"The Army formed a line of battle and for 9 miles there was a running fight. This started at 9 o'clock in the morning and lasted all day long, the right battalion fighting the Indians hand to hand. Many of the Indians had only war clubs and bows and arrows and very primitive guns, but from behind every rock and group of trees the arrows showered upon the troopers. At one time a very large force of the Indians came in from the rear and attempted to capture the battery of 12 cannon. They made their way with all the fiendish glee they could muster, but they did not reckon on the gunners. They made their way along until the Indians were within 200 yards of the battery, and then let two charges go. This made an awful swath in their ranks, and the Indians turned like a pack of frightened sheep before the onslaught of wolves and fled, followed by a terrific saber charge by the troopers. This stand was the turning point in the battle. From this time on the soldiers had the Indians on the run for the hills and the saber was exchanged for the revolver. They soon had the Indians over the hills among the brakes. That night under the silent skies the dead were buried on the camping grounds, and horses were picketed over the grave to destroy all signs of the place.

"The next morning, Friday, July 29, the soldiers tried to follow the Indians, but they could not do it with success because of the breakback of the hills. The Army turned back, and in the dry coulee south of the Indian camp tons of meat, both jerked and pemmican, 1,600 tents, poles, clothing, and blankets were burned.

"That afternoon the Army marched 8 miles east to the spring at the old Craig Ranch. Just as the dusk was creeping over the Army 600 Indians drove fiercely through the camp and tried to stampede the horses. The two outer guards were killed, but other than this not a shot was fired or a person hurt. It created a great deal of excitement for a time, but the night brought on nothing of importance. This night was vivid in the memory of Mr. Campbell. He well remembers looking toward the battle grounds many times and seeing the constant light of the torches in the long night search for the dead and wounded or for some things hidden in the flight.

"During the next two days the Army made their way back 67 miles to the corrals. In the battle at the Killdeers, or, as the Indians call it, 'Ta-ha-kouty,' or the 'place where they kill the deer,' some 2,200 soldiers were actively engaged against 5,000 or 6,000 Indians. Sully reported some 150 of the Indians and 5 soldiers killed.

"From this battle ground up to Yellowstone and back to Fort Rice the Indians kept at their heels, and the Army had to be on their guard constantly."

BATTLE OF THE LITTLE MISSOURI, OR "WHERE THE HILLS LOOK AT EACH OTHER."

After his return to his camp on the Heart River, on his way to the Yellowstone, this battle occurred. In order to reach a pass through the Bad Lands known to one of his Yankton Indian guides, General Sully August 5 camped at what is now Medora, in the Bad Lands, "where the hills look at each other." In order to pass through the Bad Lands it became necessary to cut into the hillsides at many points.

The Indians attacked the camp from the hills that evening, and at one point cut off some of the horses, which, however, were recaptured; the next day the working parties were attacked several times. The immigrant train, having women and children and moved by oxen, impeded the march and lengthened the column to 3 or 4 miles, making it necessary to double up for protection, and yet in the Bad Lands at many points they could only pass in single file. The danger to the immigrants added to the difficulties of the situation and to the anxieties of the general. On the 6th every butte (hill) was covered with Indians. Some of the buttes were 300 feet in height, others sharp pointed, and almost touched, as well as looked at each other; some were low, others mere banks of burnt clay or scoria, as good for defense as those built for that purpose; while others resembled chimneys or other ruins of a burned city, for they had been formed by burning coal mines and the erosion which followed. It was necessary to climb up steep hillsides, plunge down into deep gullies, pass through wooden ravines, crawl along narrow gorges, sometimes in the beds of dry streams, and without water that hot day in August until late in the afternoon, when they reached a small lake and springs where the Indians had concentrated in an effort to keep them from water. There was fighting almost every step of the way, but the Indians, wary from the battle of July 28, had little heart for close-range fighting. At the lake and springs the encounter was sharp, but the Indians again fled. They lost very heavily in the 10-mile battle in these Bad Lands of the Little Missouri, estimated by Sully at 150 and by other officers as high as 300.

As Sully moved forward the next morning he encountered about 1,000 Indians. The skirmishes were frequent, but when they reached the open country they saw a cloud of dust made by fleeing Indians about 6 miles away, and that was the last seen of them for several days. He escorted the immigrants to the Yellowstone and returned down the Missouri, establishing a line of military posts on that stream.

CLEMENT A. LOUNSBERRY.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, we are now coming to the closing hours of the Sixty-seventh Congress, which Congress, with the exception of a few days, has sat in continuous session for a period of two years, during which time we had to meet and endeavor to solve more momentous problems than any past Congress since the establishment of the American Republic. Other Congresses have sat during times of war, when the fate of the Nation was hanging in the balance, but their problems were chiefly to make appropriations and authorize the issuing of bonds to raise the money to finance the Army; therefore there was no great amount of statesmanship required to contract the national indebtedness; but this Congress has had to wrestle with a problem of rehabilitation and reconstruction, and a repayment of the indebtedness incurred from the greatest war which the Nation ever engaged in. There were many problems met and solved in one way or another. Not all of the problems have been solved to my personal satisfaction. One of my greatest disappointments is that the problem which has not been solved is the payment of a just and adequate soldiers' bonus, although I am very much gratified over the passage of the Sweet bill and the recent passage, in the closing days, of the highly important amendments thereto, which will go a long way toward compensating the maimed, the crippled, and the incapacitated of our soldier boys. But notwithstanding the passage of these very needful and helpful measures, I find that many of the soldier boys who were justly compensable under said act would be unable to obtain their compensation without the kindly advice as to how to prepare their evidence and get it properly before the Veterans' Bureau, and the assistance and cooperation of an intelligent and friendly disposed Congressman to lend his every influence and assistance to the securing of justice for these men whose ability to earn a livelihood at their former vocation has either been irretrievably lost or greatly impaired. And it is with the utmost pleasure to me that I have been able to assist hundreds of World War veterans, and also Spanish-American War veterans, and the fast dwindling numbers of our Grand Army of the Republic, who saved the Union in the dark days of 1861 to 1865, to obtain their just dues in their incapacitated and declining years. Therefore I wish to append a list of cases which have been adjudicated through my office since the last published list of June 13, 1922. In this list, as in all previous lists which I have published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it will be found that I have not confined my activities to be of assistance to any of the boys in the above-enumerated class of the Nation's heroes in my own congressional district alone. During my incumbency I have handled cases from a majority of the States in the Union and a few from foreign countries. It matters not to me where the meritorious claimant resided, if the claimant had confidence in my ability and appeared to have no one else to turn to, to place their case for assistance in my hands, I had patriotism enough and public spirit to see that the worthy claimant obtained his or her rights to which they were entitled to in the law; and now, in the closing days of my two years in Congress, I feel that few, if any, Members of Congress have exceeded me in the number of cases of whose adjudication I have secured, and without disparaging the efforts of any other Congressman I feel that I secured final action and adjudication of a sufficiently large number of claims of which any Congressman could be justly proud.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I came into the Congress two years ago. I am going out one hour and four minutes from now. I came here with the determination to attend carefully to my office duties and to my committee duties, to attend the sessions of the House as much as possible, to hear and to see as much as possible, and not to talk too much. Others must judge whether I have succeeded.

These have been two delightful years—red-letter years in my life. And they have been delightful in large part because on the Republican side I found honest, splendid, kindly, and courteous gentlemen, and on the Democratic side I found honest, splendid, kindly, and courteous gentlemen. And I found the Socialist delegation, consisting of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], to be the peer of the rest.

I wish to thank you all for the uniform courtesy I have received at your hands. I can proclaim the rest of my life to my friends everywhere what a splendid lot of men there were in the Sixty-seventh Congress, and with a thrill of pride refer to it as did Æneas to his experiences at Troy when he said:

Much of which I saw and part of which I was.

Several times lately, on this floor and elsewhere, I have heard defeated Members referred to as "lame ducks." Let me remind you that when you call a man a lame duck you place him in a class of the most distinguished men of all time. Go back a few years in our own history and you will find in that class such men as Abraham Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant, James G. Blaine, Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Champ Clark, and a host of other notables who have rendered very great service to their country.

I suppose it really makes little difference whether a man be somewhat lame as he travels the way of life, but it is of greatest importance that he travel that way the very best he can. And it is also important that, whether fortune smiles or frowns, he keeps smiling on the way, for—

Laugh, and the world laughs with you,
Weep, and you weep alone;
For this brave old earth must borrow its mirth,
It has troubles enough of its own.

I bid you all farewell. It has been a joy to be with you, and I regret very much to leave.

I pray the prayer the easterners do,
May the peace of Allah abide with you,
Wherever you stay, wherever you go,
May the beautiful palms of Allah grow,
Through the days of labor and nights of rest,
May the love of sweet Allah make you blest,
So I touch my heart as the easterners do,
May the peace of Allah abide with you.

Again I say, farewell.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, on January 25, 1923, I submitted to the House some remarks regarding the constitutional privileges of the House of Representatives and its Members. At that time a hasty examination of the debates in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 did not reveal any debate or detailed reference to the particular phase of parliamentary privilege under discussion.

Subsequently, my attention was directed to a more careful search of the journals and debates of the convention, and I desire to place in the RECORD the results of that investigation.

It appears from the journal of the convention and Madison's Debates that on Monday, August 20, it was moved and seconded to refer the following propositions offered by Mr. Pinckney to the committee of five; which passed in the affirmative.

Each House shall be the judge of its own privileges, and shall have authority to punish, by imprisonment, every person violating the same; or who, in the place where the Legislature may be sitting, and during the time of its session, shall threaten any of its Members for anything said or done in the House; or who shall assault any of them therefor; or who shall assault or arrest any witness or other person ordered to attend either of the Houses, in his way going or returning; or who shall rescue any person arrested by their order.

It will be noted that this language proposed the following: "Each House shall be the judge of its own privileges, and shall have authority to punish, by imprisonment, every person violating the same." This language, had it been adopted, would have accomplished just what the Judiciary Committee claimed was accomplished by the present language of the Constitution.

It is disclosed in Madison's Debates that on September 4 Mr. Pinckney moved a clause declaring that each House should be the judge of the privileges of its own Members. (Elliot, vol. 5, p. 510.) Mr. Morris seconded the motion. James Madison and Edmund Randolph expressed doubt as to the propriety of giving such a power and wished for a postponement. Mr. Morris opposed a postponement.

Mr. Madison distinguished between the power of judging of privileges previously and duly established, and the effect of the motion which would give a discretion to each House as to the extent of its own privileges. He suggested that it would be better to make provision for ascertaining by law the privileges of each House than to allow each House to decide for itself. He suggested also the necessity of considering what privileges ought to be allowed to the Executive.

The arguments of Madison and Randolph against the proposal to vest in the Houses of Congress the power to define parliamentary privilege, referred to the committee on August 20, and renewed on September 4 by Mr. Pinckney, must have prevailed; they must have convinced the convention, because the proposal was rejected, as will later appear.

On September 8 a committee of five on style was appointed by the convention, consisting of Mr. Johnston, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Morris, Mr. Madison, and Mr. King. On September 12 the revised draft of the Constitution was reported by the committee on style to the convention, and Article I, section 6, was reported as follows:

SEC. 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their service, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

That language was adopted and is to-day the identical language of the Constitution. When presented with the clear-cut issue, to vest the power to determine parliamentary privilege in each House of Congress or to define it in the Constitution, the convention rejected the former and chose the latter.

It can not be said that the language of the Constitution means the same thing as the language rejected or that the attention of the convention was not drawn to the exact difference in the effect of the clauses proposed.

Mr. Madison very clearly pointed out the objections to giving a discretion to each House to decide for itself and expressed the view that parliamentary privilege should be "previously and duly established." No doubt his knowledge of the Britsh system had suggested the objections which he urged. He wanted to get away from that system; he wanted to get away from a system that permitted Parliament in a moment of passion, actuated by a passing whim perhaps, to determine a question of privilege after the fact or act had actually occurred; he wanted privilege to be defined by the Constitution or by preexisting law. And the convention followed Mr. Madison.

In the light of the action of the convention of 1787, following the debates on parliamentary privilege, I most respectfully submit that it is clear and beyond dispute that the constitutional privilege attaching to Members of Congress may be invoked as against the House of Representatives and that under the Constitution it could not be said, in the words which the convention rejected, "Each House shall be the judge of its own privileges and have authority to punish by imprisonment every person violating the same."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, President Harding is at the halfway post of his administration. The work of the first half has been a task remedial and constructive. The record is made up and the public must judge its success by what has been accomplished.

Unlike the usual administration charged with merely continuing a going concern, Mr. Harding had to undertake the work of correction or readjustment incident to a war which totally dislocated matters political, economic, and industrial.

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY UNDER HARDING.

Peace was restored; diplomatic and trade relations were resumed with former enemy countries.

Strained relations growing out of the mandatory feature of the Versailles treaty with our associates were adjusted.

Foreign controversies with South and Central American countries were settled.

Terms for solution of our differences with Mexico and Russia were specified.

Out of the storms of a World War which completely darkened the international horizon the light has broken, the clouds have disappeared, and the sky is again clear.

The war left its burdensome taxation incident to rivalries on land and sea. It also left the problems of the Far East and the Near East.

The arms conference was called, was in session three months, and by unanimous consent adopted the American proposals, which definitely limited armament on the sea, reduced the burdens of taxation, ended naval rivalry, secured the consent of Britain and Japan to an American Navy equal to that of Britain and 40 per cent greater than that of Japan, and thus lessened the chances of war.

These results were enlarged to include the guaranty of China's magna charta, the adoption of the McKinley open-door policy in the Orient, the withdrawal of Japanese troops from Siberia, the elimination of Group 5 of the secret treaty of 1915, the return by Japan of Shantung to China, and the abandonment of the Anglo-Japanese alliance of 20 years of existence. It also conceded America's contention on the Yap Island dispute, set up machinery to adjust disputes arising in the Pacific, retained our proper position on the Pacific—all accomplished in conference, where mutual understanding and good will dominated, with proper regard for the rights of all, and accomplished without the sacrifice of a scintilla of our sovereignty. Never in the world's history has any nation taken such high position in the family of nations as has the United States under Harding, where all the world looks to America for leadership and guidance out of the chaos into which it has fallen.

The United States at Lausanne as an unofficial observer to offer such counsel on the Near East complications as may be proper and acceptable led the conference in all the definite decisions reached. The problems of western European countries, seriously strained by the Ruhr Valley situation, do not as yet respond to our only possible proposal—that an industrial survey of Germany's ability to pay be made by an international commission, including representatives from the United States. The unwillingness of France to accept the proposal has closed the door to us for further effort on our part. This all has demonstrated America's desire to be helpful to the world whenever and wherever it can be effectually and safely done, always making the United States the final judge of that duty and never to be determined by a vote of foreign countries. If approval of a foreign policy rests upon expeditious and complete adjustment of relations widely strained by war, the first two years of the Harding administration of our foreign affairs under Charles E. Hughes will be approved as the most brilliant of our history.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS—SUCCESS OF THE TREASURY.

War placed upon our people a debt of twenty-six billion, which was less than one billion when it began. Three billion of these enormous obligations was unfunded and carried by the banks, which absorbed not less than $7,000,000,000 of commercial credit. This enormous amount of assets withdrawn from the channels of trade starved industry for want of capital and forced out of employment at least 5,000,000 workmen. Money was tight, interest rates high, Government credit low, and business generally paralyzed. This administration at once set about to release the assets of the banks by inducing the investing public to absorb the floating or unfunded Government obligations. At first the rate of interest was 5¼ per cent, which was reduced to 3¾ within a year, a saving of millions of dollars. The obligations were at once taken up by the public, the liquid assets of the bank thereby released for industry, banking became free, interest rates came down, rediscount rates fell from 7 to 4 per cent, capital flowed into the channels of trade, industry revived, unemployment disappeared, and Government credit went to par. The appreciation of the Liberties now at par is a saving to the people of $2,500,000,000.

BEWILDERING OBLIGATIONS DUE IN 1923.
